CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE SIXTY-SECOND CONGRESS.

THIRD SESSION.

SENATE.

Monday, December 2, 1912.

The first Monday in December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the third session of the Sixty-second Congress commenced on this day.

AUGUSTUS O. BACON, a Senator from the State of Georgia, took the chair as President pro tempore under the order of the Senate of August 17, 1912.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock noon.

PRAYER.

The Chaplain, Rev. Ulysses G. B. Pierce, D. D., offered the fol-

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, in whose presence we now stand, we are come together in Thy name and to do Thy will. At the opening of this session of Congress we invoke Thy blessing. Without Thee we can do nothing. Until Thou dost bless us, our highest wisdom is but folly and our utmost strength Thee, wisdom and strength from above, that so we may glorify thee, accomplishing that which Thou givest us to do.

We come before Thee, our Father, with a deepened sense of our dependence upon Thee. Thou hast made us to know how frail we are. Thou hast showed us that the way of man is not in himself alone, and that it is not in us who walk to direct our steps. Thou hast called from his earthly labors Thy servant, the Vice President of our Nation. While we thought it was still day Thou didst cause the sun of his life to go down, bringing the night, when no man can work. We murmur not nor repine, our Father, knowing that alike the day and the night are Thine. Thou hast taken from our side fellow laborers and companions, leaving in this Senate empty seats and in our hearts loneliness and sorrow. We can not forget them, our Father, though in the flesh we behold their faces no more. Thou hast removed from his post of duty an officer of this body and hast made us to know that in the midst of life we are in death. Comfort our hearts, we beseech Thee, for all our sorrows, and keep us evermore in Thy love, and though Thou feed us with the bread of adversity and give us to drink of the water of affliction, yet take not from us Thy holy spirit.

We pray Thee to bless the President of the United States.

Uphold him by Thy power, watch over him by Thy providence, guide him by Thy wisdom, and strengthen him with Thy heavenly grace. Bless him who shall preside over this Senate, bestowing upon him all things as shall seem good unto Thee. For all who are in authority we pray that they may serve Thee with singleness of purpose, for the good of this people and for Thy glory.

So, our Father, may this session of Congress, begun in Thy name, be continued in Thy fear and ended to Thine honor. Grant us so to labor that by our deliberations we may hasten the time when Thy kingdom shall come and Thy will shall be done on earth as it is in heaven.

In the name which is above every name, hear our prayer. Amen. CALLING OF THE ROLL.

His serene and cheerful temperament, inspired by love of country and of his kind, will no more diffuse through this body a sense of reasonableness, of friendliness, and of kindly con-sideration. His faculty of swift and just decision which has promoted and cleared the path of public business in the Senate for the three years which are past will no longer aid us in our deliberations.

I have the honor to offer the resolutions which I now send to the desk.

The resolutions (S. Res. 300) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow and regret the announcement of the death of JAMES SCHOOLCEAFT SHERMAN, late Vice President of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In connection with the announcement just made the Chair now lays before the Senate a cablegram received from the Brazilian Senate and the reply thereto, in order that the same may now be read and become a part of the record, and to be on a later day given such disposition as the Senate may direct.

FERREIRA CHAVES, First Secretary of the Senate. [Cablegram.]

Washington, November 7, 1912.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE BRAZILIAN SENATE:

I have received your very considerate and cordial message of sympathy, addressed to the American Senate, on the occasion of the death of the late Vice President James Sherman.

The Senate of the United States is not now in session. So soon as it convenes in December I will have the honor to lay before that body your highly esteemed message. I beg, in the meantime, to thank your honorable body for its kindly consideration and sympathy.

Augustus O. Bacon, President of the Senate pro tempore.

[Norg.—The foregoing reply to the cablegram of the Brazilian Seasowas, upon the request of Senator Bacon, cabled to the American ambassador at Brazil by the Acting Secretary of State, with directions for immediate delivery.]

DEATH OF SENATOR WELDON B. HEYBURN.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it becomes my sad duty to announce to the Senate the death of my late colleague, Hon. W. B. HEYBURN. To those who witnessed his singular devotion to duty in the closing hours of the last session and the death of the last session and the last session are the last session and the last session and the last session are the last session ar tions which all realized imperiled his life, the news of his death came as no surprise. One less determined to perform faithfully the obligations of his high office, one less mindful of the responsibilities which rest upon us here, would have yielded to the solicitation of friends and sought the rest and recuperation which he so much needed. But understanding perfectly the forfeit which he might be called upon to pay, he nevertheless met without hesitancy and with spirit and purpose the exacting duties of that trying session. With equal fortitude and courage he paid the forfeit when the time came to do so.

Senator Herburn was a remarkable man, a strong, sturdy, self-reliant, dominant figure. But this is not the time nor the appropriate occasion for extended remarks; upon some other occasion I shall ask the Senate to set aside a day upon which his colleagues may pay tribute to his work and worth as a man and as a legislator.

I offer the following resolutions and ask for their adoption. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolutions sent to the desk by the Senator from Idaho.

The resolutions (S. Res. 391) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. Weldon Brinton Heyburn, late a Senator from the State of Idaho.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives and to the family of the deceased.

DEATH OF SENATOR ISIDOR RAYNER.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, it is my melancholy duty to announce to my colleagues in the Senate that since our last adjournment death has claimed our loved associate, ISIDOR RAYNER. His death occurred at his home in Washington on the 25th of last November. His end followed an acute illness lasting several weeks. Watching with him during the period of progressing physical weakness and intense suffering were those he loved best-his wife, his son, and his grandchildren.

He was in a large sense a martyr to his sympathies, his conscience, and his talents. The ambition to do his fullest duty as a Member of this body spurred him to undertake tasks far beyond his physical capacity to stand, for his mental energy and power always outran his physical capacity. A quick, sensitive, and all-compelling sympathy for all who suffer, for all who bear burdens, however imposed, pained and wore upon him to his very soul, and deeper than I ever knew in any other case. He finally succumbed under the rack and strain. His tensely nervous temperament could not withstand the weight of others' woes added to his habit of overwork, accentuated toward the latter part of his life by obligations assumed at great risk, as he knew, to himself, and assumed in spite of the warnings and entreaties of his intimate friends.

I shall make no effort to-day to speak of Senator RAYNER'S character or life nor of the qualities of mind and heart which elevated him to so many places of trust and fixed him in so many places of affectionate esteem. I shall only make the bare announcement of his decease.

I shall in due season ask the Senate to devote some future day to ceremonies befitting his memory. Then when time has somewhat cleared our finite sight we may review his life and character, not altogether in the darkness of our own present sense of personal calamity in his loss, but rather in the light of his everlasting gain.

Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk, and ask for their adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolutions presented by the Senator from Maryland.

The resolutions (S. Res. 392) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. ISIDOR RAYNER, late a Senator from the State of Maryland.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I desire as a further mark of respect to offer the following resolution, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution (S. Res. 393) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

*Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Vice President James Schoolcraft Sherman and the late Senators Wellows Brinton Herburn and Islode Rayner, whose deaths have just been announced, the Senate do now adjourn.

Thereupon the Senate (at 12 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 3, 1912, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, December 2, 1912.

This being the day fixed by the Constitution for the annual meeting of the Congress of the United States, the House of Representatives of the Sixty-second Congress met in its Hall at 12 o'clock m. for its third session, and was called to order by the Speaker, Hon. CHAMP CLARK, a Representative from the State of Missouri.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God of the universe, Father of all souls, whose spirit divine pervades all space, the light of the world, the inspiration of men, source of all good, continue, we beseech Thee, Thy ministrations unto us as a people, that with patriotic zeal and re-ligious fervor we may press forward to the higher altitudes contemplated by our fathers in a Government "conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created

Let Thy wisdom guide the judiciary in their high and holy calling, that justice may fulfill its perfect work. So may the people, with their servants in the coordinate branches of the Government, strive for the ideals in all that makes a nation great and glorious, that the dear Old Flag may float its stars and stripes in graceful folds over a land of peace and plenty now and evermore, in the spirit of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions and ask for their immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. RICHARD E. CONNELL, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the decased.

The resolutions were agreed to.

DEATH OF THE VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I announce to the House that JAMES SCHOOLCRAFT SHERMAN, Vice President of the United States, departed this life at his home in Utica, N. Y., on the 30th day of October, 1912.

The admirable administration of the high office which he held, the second in the gift of the Republic, his brilliant and useful career for so many years in the House of Representatives, his sympathetic touch with every class, the unsullied purity of his public and private life, had so impressed the country that his death occasioned expression of deep-felt grief so universal as to manifest a general and profound sense of national bereave-

Congress will doubtless, by concurrent action of the two Houses, at an early moment set apart a time for proper expression touching the life, character, and services of this eminent citizen.

I move you, sir, that out of regard for his memory and the memory of the Members of this House and of the Senate who have departed this life since the adjournment of the last session of Congress this House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 3, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

The President stated to the committee that he would communicate with the two Houses this morning in writing. I understand that his message is now in the hands of an executive clerk at the door.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE (H. DOC. NO. 927).

M. C. Latta, one of the executive clerks, appeared and said:
I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received by the Secretary and handed to the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which will be read.

The Secretary read the message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The foreign relations of the United States actually and potentially affect the state of the Union to a degree not widely realized and hardly surpassed by any other factor in the welfare of the whole Nation. The position of the United States in the moral, intellectual, and material relations of the family of nations should be a matter of vital interest to every patriotic The national prosperity and power impose upon us duties which we can not shirk if we are to be true to our ideals. The tremendous growth of the export trade of the United States has already made that trade a very real factor in the industrial and commercial prosperity of the country. With the development of our industries the foreign commerce of the United States must rapidly become a still more essential factor in its economic welfare. Whether we have a farseeing and wise diplomacy and are not recklessly plunged into unnecessary wars, and whether our foreign policies are based upon an intelligent grasp of present-day world conditions and a clear view of the potentialities of the future, or are governed by a temporary and timid expediency or by narrow views befitting an infant nation, are questions in the alternative consideration of which must convince any thoughtful citizen that no department of national polity offers greater opportunity for promoting the interests of the whole people on the one hand, or greater chance on the other of permanent national injury, than that which deals with the foreign relations of the United States.

The fundamental foreign policies of the United States should be raised high above the conflict of partisanship and wholly dissociated from differences as to domestic policy. In its foreign affairs the United States should present to the world a united front. The intellectual, financial, and industrial interests of the country and the publicist, the wage earner, the farmer, and citizen of whatever occupation must cooperate in a spirit of high patriotism to promote that national solidarity which is indispensable to national efficiency and to the attainment of national ideals.

The relations of the United States with all foreign powers remain upon a sound basis of peace, harmony, and friendship. A greater insistence upon justice to American citizens or interests wherever it may have been denied and a stronger emphasis of the need of mutuality in commercial and other relations have only served to strengthen our friendships with foreign countries by placing those friendships upon a firm foundation of realities as well as aspirations.

Before briefly reviewing the more important events of the last year in our foreign relations, which it is my duty to do as charged with their conduct and because diplomatic affairs are not of a nature to make it appropriate that the Secretary of State make a formal annual report, I desire to touch upon some of the essentials to the safe management of the foreign relations of the United States and to endeavor, also, to define clearly certain concrete policies which are the logical modern corollaries of the undisputed and traditional fundamentals of the foreign policy of the United States.

REORGANIZATION OF THE STATE DEPARTMENT.

At the beginning of the present administration the United States, having fully entered upon its position as a world power, with the responsibilities thrust upon it by the results of the Spanish-American War, and already engaged in laying the groundwork of a vast foreign trade upon which it should one day become more and more dependent, found itself without the machinery for giving thorough attention to, and taking effective action upon, a mass of intricate business vital to American interests in every country in the world.

The Department of State was an archaic and inadequate machine lacking most of the attributes of the foreign office of any great modern power. With an appropriation made upon my recommendation by the Congress on August 5, 1909, the Department of State was completely reorganized. There were created Divisions of Latin-American Affairs and of Far Eastern, Near Eastern, and Western European Affairs. To these divisions were called from the foreign service diplomatic and consular officers possessing experience and knowledge gained by actual service in different parts of the world and thus familiar with political and commercial conditions in the regions concerned, The work was highly specialized. The result is that where previously this Government from time to time would emphasize in its foreign relations one or another policy, now American interests in every quarter of the globe are being cultivated with equal assiduity. This principle of politico-geographical division possesses also the good feature of making possible rotation between the officers of the departmental, the diplomatic, and the consular branches of the foreign service, and thus keeps the whole diplomatic and consular establishments under the Department of State in close touch and equally inspired with the aims and policy of the Government. Through the newly created Division of Information the foreign service is kept fully informed of what transpires from day to day in the international relations of the country, and contemporary foreign comment affecting American interests is promptly brought to the attention of the department. The law offices of the department were greatly strengthened. There were added foreign-trade advisers to cooperate with the diplomatic and consular bureaus and the politico-geographical divisions in the innumerable matters where commercial diplomacy or consular work calls for such special The same officers, together with the rest of the new organization, are able at all times to give to American citizens accurate information as to conditions in foreign countries with which they have business and likewise to cooperate more effectively with the Congress and also with the other executive departments.

MERIT SYSTEM IN CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC CORPS.

Expert knowledge and professional training must evidently be the essence of this reorganization. Without a trained foreign service there would not be men available for the work in the reorganized Department of State. President Cleveland had taken the first step toward introducing the merit system in the foreign service. That had been followed by the application of the merit principle, with excellent results, to the entire consular branch. Almost nothing, however, had been done in this direction with regard to the Diplomatic Service. In this age of commercial diplomacy it was evidently of the first importance to train an adequate personnel in that branch of the service. Therefore, on November 26, 1909, by an Executive order I placed the Diplomatic Service up to the grade of secretary of embassy, inclusive, upon exactly the same strict nonpartisan basis of the merit system, rigid examination for appointment and promotion only for efficiency, as had been maintained without exception in the Consular Service.

How faithful to the merit system and how nonpartisan has been the conduct of the Diplomatic and Consular Services in the last four years may be judged from the following: Three ambassadors now serving held their present rank at the beginning of my administration. Of the 10 ambassadors whom I have appointed, 5 were by promotion from the rank of minister. Nine ministers now serving held their present rank at the beginning of the administration. Of the 30 ministers whom I have appointed, 11 were promoted from the lower grades of the foreign service or from the Department of State. Of the 19 missions in Latin America, where our relations are close and our interest is great, 15 chiefs of mission are service men, 3 having entered the service during this administration. The 37 secretaries of embassy or legation who have received their initial appointments after passing successfully the required examination were chosen for ascertained fitness, without regard to political affiliations. A dearth of candidates from Southern and Western States has alone made it impossible thus far completely to equalize all the States' representations in the foreign service. In the effort to equalize the representation of the various States in the Consular Service I have made 16 of the 29 new appointments as consul which have occurred during my administration from the Southern States. This is 55 per cent.

Every other consular appointment made, including the promotion of 11 young men from the consular assistant and student interpreter corps, has been by promotion or transfer, based solely upon efficiency shown in the service.

In order to assure to the business and other interests of the United States a continuance of the resulting benefits of this reform, I earnestly renew my previous recommendations of legislation making it permanent along some such lines as those of the measure now pending in Congress.

LARGER PROVISION FOR EMBASSIES AND LEGATIONS AND FOR OTHER EXPENSES OF OUR FOREIGN REPRESENTATIVES RECOMMENDED.

In connection with legislation for the amelioration of the foreign service, I wish to invite attention to the advisability of placing the salary appropriations upon a better basis. I believe that the best results would be obtained by a moderate scale of salaries, with adequate funds for the expenses of proper representation, based in each case upon the scale and cost of living at each post, controlled by a system of accounting, and under the general direction of the Department of State.

In line with the object which I have sought of placing our foreign service on a basis of permanency, I have at various times advocated provision by Congress for the acquisition of Government-owned buildings for the residence and offices of our diplomatic officers, so as to place them more nearly on an equality with similar officers of other nations and to do away with the discrimination which otherwise must necessarily be made, in some cases, in favor of men having large private fortunes. The act of Congress which I approved on February 17, 1911, was a right step in this direction. The Secretary of State has already made the limited recommendations permitted by the act for any one year, and it is my hope that the bill introduced in the House of Representatives to carry out these recommendations will be favorably acted on by the Congress during its present session.

In some Latin-American countries the expense of Government-owned legations will be less than elsewhere, and it is certainly very urgent that in such countries as some of the Republics of Central America and the Caribbean, where it is peculiarly difficult to rent suitable quarters, the representatives of the United States should be justly and adequately provided with dignified and suitable official residences. Indeed, it is high time that the dignity and power of this great Nation should be fittingly signalized by proper buildings for the occupancy of the Nation's representatives everywhere abroad.

DIPLOMACY A HANDMAID OF COMMERCIAL INTERCOURSE AND PEACE.

The diplomacy of the present administration has sought to respond to modern ideas of commercial intercourse. policy has been characterized as substituting dollars for bul-It is one that appeals alike to idealistic humanitarian sentiments, to the dictates of sound policy and strategy, and to It is an effort frankly directed legitimate commercial aims. to the increase of American trade upon the axiomatic principle that the Government of the United States shall extend all proper support to every legitimate and beneficial American en-How great have been the results of this diplomacy, coupled with the maximum and minimum provision of the tariff law, will be seen by some consideration of the wonderful increase in the export trade of the United States. Because modern diplomacy is commercial, there has been a disposition in some quarters to attribute to it none but materialistic aims. How strikingly erroneous is such an impression may be seen from a study of the results by which the diplomacy of the United States can be judged.

SUCCESSFUL EFFORTS IN PROMOTION OF PEACE.

In the field of work toward the ideals of peace this Government negotiated, but to my regret was unable to consummate, two arbitration treaties which set the highest mark of the aspiration of nations toward the substitution of arbitration and reason for war in the settlement of international disputes. Through the efforts of American diplomacy several wars have been prevented or ended. I refer to the successful tripartite mediation of the Argentine Republic, Brazil, and the United States between Peru and Ecuador; the bringing of the bound-ary dispute between Panama and Costa Rica to peaceful arbitration; the staying of warlike preparations when Haiti and the Dominican Republic were on the verge of hostilities; the stopping of a war in Nicaragua; the halting of internecine strife in Honduras. The Government of the United States was thanked for its influence toward the restoration of amicable relations between the Argentine Republic and Bolivia. The diplomacy of the United States is active in seeking to assuage the remaining ill-feeling between this country and the Republic of Colombia. In the recent civil war, in China the United States successfully joined with the other interested powers in urging an early cessation of hostilities. An agreement has been reached between the Governments of Chile and Peru whereby the celebrated Tacna-Arica dispute, which has so long embit-tered international relations on the west coast of South America, has at last been adjusted. Simultaneously came the news that the boundary dispute between Peru and Ecuador had entered upon a stage of amicable settlement. The position of the United States in reference to the Tacna-Arica dispute between Chile and Peru has been one of nonintervention, but one of friendly influence and pacific counsel throughout the period during which the dispute in question has been the subject of interchange of views between this Government and the two Governments immediately concerned. In the general easing of international tension on the west coast of South America the tripartite mediation, to which I have referred, has been a most potent and beneficent factor.

CHINA.

In China the policy of encouraging financial investment to enable that country to help itself has had the result of giving new life and practical application to the open-door policy. consistent purpose of the present administration has been to encourage the use of American capital in the development of China by the promotion of those essential reforms to which China is pledged by treaties with the United States and other powers. The hypothecation to foreign bankers in connection with certain industrial enterprises, such as the Hukuang railways, of the national revenues upon which these reforms depended, led the Department of State early in the administration to demand for American citizens participation in such enter-prises, in order that the United States might have equal rights and an equal voice in all questions pertaining to the disposition of the public revenues concerned. The same policy of promoting international accord among the powers having similar treaty rights as ourselves in the matters of reform, which could not be put into practical effect without the common consent of all, was likewise adopted in the case of the loan desired by China for the reform of its currency. The principle of international cooperation in matters of common interest upon which our policy had already been based in all of the above instances has admittedly been a great factor in that concert of the powers which has been so happily conspicuous during the perilous period of transition through which the great Chinese nation has been passing.

CENTRAL AMERICA NEEDS OUR HELP IN DEBT ADJUSTMENT.

In Central America the aim has been to help such countries as Nicaragua and Honduras to help themselves. immediate beneficiaries. The national benefit to the United States is twofold. First, it is obvious that the Monroe doctrine is more vital in the neighborhood of the Panama Canal and the zone of the Caribbean than anywhere else. There, too, the maintenance of that doctrine falls most heavily upon the United States. It is therefore essential that the countries within that sphere shall be removed from the jeopardy involved by heavy foreign debt and chaotic national finances and from the ever-present danger of international complications due to disorder at home. Hence the United States has been glad to encourage and support American bankers who were willing to lend a helping hand to the financial rehabilitation of such countries, because this financial rehabilitation and the protection of their customhouses from being the prey of would-be dictators would remove at one stroke the menace of foreign creditors and the menace of revolutionary disorder.

The second advantage to the United States is one affecting chiefly all the southern and Gulf ports and the business and industry of the South. The Republics of Central America and the Caribbean possess great natural wealth. They need only a measure of stability and the means of financial regeneration to enter upon an era of peace and prosperity, bringing profit and happiness to themselves and at the same time creating conditions sure to lead to a flourishing interchange of trade with this country.

I wish to call your especial attention to the recent occurrences in Nicaragua, for I believe the terrible events recorded there during the revolution of the past summer—the uscless loss of life, the devastation of property, the bombardment of defenseless cities, the killing and wounding of women and children, the torturing of noncombatants to exact contributions, and the suffering of thousands of human beings—night have been averted had the Department of State, through approval of the loan convention by the Senate, been permitted to carry out its now well-developed policy of encouraging the extending of financial aid to weak Central American States with the primary objects of avoiding just such revolutions by assisting those Republies to rehabilitate their finances, to establish their currency on a stable basis, to remove the custom-houses from the danger of revolutions by arranging for their secure administration, and to establish reliable banks.

During this last revolution in Nicaragua, the Government of that Republic having admitted its inability to protect American life and property against acts of sheer lawlessness on the part of the malcontents, and having requested this Government to assume that office, it became necessary to land over 2,000 marines and bluejackets in Nicaragua. Owing to their presence the constituted Government of Nicaragua was free to devote its attention wholly to its internal troubles, and was thus enabled to stamp out the rebellion in a short space of time. When the Red Cross supplies sent to Granada had been exhausted, 8,000 persons having been given food in one day upon the arrival of the American forces, our men supplied other unfortunate, needy Nicaraguans from their own haversacks. I wish to congratulate the officers and men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps who took part in reestablishing order in Nicaragua upon their splendid conduct, and to record with sorrow the death of seven American marines and bluejackets. Since the reestablishment of peace and order, elections have been held amid conditions of quiet and tranquillity. Nearly all the American marines have now been withdrawn. The country should soon be on the road to recovery. The only apparent danger now threatening Nicaragua arises from the shortage of funds. Although American bankers have already rendered assistance, they may naturally be loath to advance a loan adequate to set the country upon its feet without the support of some such convention as that of June, 1911, upon which the Senate has not yet acted.

ENFORCEMENT OF NEUTRALITY LAWS.

In the general effort to contribute to the enjoyment of peace by those Republics which are near neighbors of the United States, the administration has enforced the so-called neutrality statutes with a new vigor, and those statutes were greatly strengthened in restricting the exportation of arms and munitions by the joint resolution of last March. It is still a regrettable fact that certain American ports are made the rendezvous of professional revolutionists and others engaged in intrigue against the peace of those Republics. admitted that occasionally a revolution in this region is justified as a real popular movement to throw off the shackles of a vicious and tyrannical government. Such was the Nicaraguan revolution against the Zelaya régime. A nation enjoying our liberal institutions can not escape sympathy with a true popular movement, and one so well justified. In very many however, revolutions in the Republics in question have no basis in principle, but are due merely to the machinations of conscienceless and ambitious men, and have no effect but to bring new suffering and fresh burdens to an already oppressed people. The question whether the use of American ports as foci of revolutionary intrigue can be best dealt with by a further amendment to the neutrality statutes or whether it would be safer to deal with special cases by special laws is one worthy of the careful consideration of the Congress.

VISIT OF SECRETARY KNOX TO CENTRAL AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN.

Impressed with the particular importance of the relations between the United States and the Republics of Central America and the Caribbean region, which of necessity must become still more intimate by reason of the mutual advantages which will be presented by the opening of the Panama Canal, I directed the Secretary of State last February to visit these Republics for the purpose of giving evidence of the sincere friendship and good will which the Government and people of the United States bear toward them. Ten Republics were visited. Everywhere he was received with a cordiality of welcome and a generosity of hospitality such as to impress me deeply and to merit our warmest thanks. The appreciation of the Governments and peoples of the countries visited, which has been appropriately shown in various ways, leaves me no doubt that his visit will conduce to that closer union and better understanding between the United States and those Republics which I have had it much at heart to promote.

OUR MEXICAN POLICY.

For two years revolution and counter-revolution have distraught the neighboring Republic of Mexico. Brigandage has involved a great deal of depredation upon foreign interests. There have constantly recurred questions of extreme delicacy. On several occasions very difficult situations have arisen on our frontier. Throughout the trying period the policy of the United States has been one of patient nonintervention, steadfast recognition of constituted authority in the neighboring nation, and the exertion of every effort to care for American interests. I profoundly hope that the Mexican nation may soon resume the path of order, prosperity, and progress. To that nation in its sore troubles the sympathetic friendship of the United States has been demonstrated to a high degree. There were in Mexico at the beginning of the revolution some thirty or forty thousand American citizens engaged in enterprises contributing greatly to the prosperity of that Republic and also benefiting the important trade between the two countries. The investment of American capital in Mexico has been estimated at $1,000,000,000. The responsibility of endeavoring to safeguard those interests and the dangers inseparable from propinquity to so turbulent a situation have been great, but I am happy to have been able to adhere to the policy above outlined—a policy which I hope may be soon justified by the complete success of the Mexican people in regaining the blessings of peace and good order.

AGRICULTURAL CREDITS.

A most important work, accomplished in the past year by the American diplomatic officers in Europe, is the investigation of the agricultural credit system in the European countries. Both as a means to afford relief to the consumers of this country through a more thorough development of agricultural resources and as a means of more sufficiently maintaining the agricultural population, the project to establish credit facilities for the farmers is a concern of vital importance to this Nation. No evidence of prosperity among well-established farmers should blind us to the fact that lack of capital is preventing a development of the Nation's agricultural resources and an adequate increase of the land under cultivation; that agricultural production is fast falling behind the increase in population; and that, in fact, although these well-established farmers are maintained in increasing prosperity because of the natural increase in population, we are not developing the industry of agriculture. not breeding in proportionate numbers a race of independent and independence-loving landowners, for a lack of which no growth of cities can compensate. Our farmers have been our mainstay in times of crisis, and in future it must still largely be upon their stability and common sense that this democracy must rely to conserve its principles of self-government.

The need of capital which American farmers feel to-day had been experienced by the farmers of Europe, with their centuries-old farms, many years ago. The problem had been successfully solved in the Old World and it was evident that the farmers of this country might profit by a study of their systems. I therefore ordered, through the Department of State, an investigation to be made by the diplomatic officers in Europe, and I have laid the results of this investigation before the governors of the various States with the hope that they will be used to advantage in their forthcoming meeting.

INCREASE OF FOREIGN TRADE.

In my last annual message I said that the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, was noteworthy as marking the highest record of exports of American products to foreign countries. The fiscal year 1912 shows that this rate of advance has been maintained, the total domestic exports having a valuation approximately of $2,200,000,000, as compared with a fraction over $2,000,000,000 the previous year. It is also significant that manufactured and partly manufactured articles continue to be the chief commodities forming the volume of our augmented exports, the demands of our own people for consumption requiring that an increasing proportion of our abundant agricultural products be kept at home. In the fiscal year 1911 the exports of articles in the various stages of manufacture, not including foodstuffs partly or wholly manufactured, amounted approximately to $907,500,000. In the fiscal year 1912 the total was nearly $1,022,000,000, a gain of $114,000,000.

ADVANTAGE OF MAXIMUM AND MINIMUM TARIFF PROVISION.

The importance which our manufactures have assumed in the commerce of the world in competition with the manufactures of other countries again draws attention to the duty of this Government to use its utmost endeavors to secure impartial treatment for American products in all markets. Healthy commercial rivalry in international intercourse is best assured by the possession of proper means for protecting and promoting our foreign trade. It is natural that competitive countries should view with some concern this steady expansion of our commerce. If in some instances the measure taken by them to meet it are not entirely equitable, a remedy should be found. In former messages I have described the negotiations of the Department of State with foreign Governments for the adjustment of the maximum and minimum tariff as provided in section 2 of the tariff law of 1909. The advantages secured by the adjustment of our trade relations under this law have continued during the last year, and some additional cases of, discriminatory treatment of which we had reason to complain have been removed. The Department of State has for the first time in the history of this country obtained substantial most-favored-nation treatment from all the countries of the world. There are, however, other instances which, while apparently not constituting undue discrimination in the sense of section 2, are nevertheless exceptions to the complete equity of tariff treatment for American products that the Department of State consistently has sought to obtain for American commerce abroad.

NECESSITY FOR SUPPLEMENTARY LEGISLATION.

These developments confirm the opinion conveyed to you in my annual message of 1911, that while the maximum and minimum provision of the tariff law of 1909 has been fully justified by the success achieved in removing previously existing undue discriminations against American products, yet experience has shown that this feature of the law should be amended in such way as to provide a fully effective means of meeting the varying degrees of discriminatory treatment of American commerce in foreign countries still encountered, as well as to protect against injurious treatment on the part of foreign Governments, through either legislative or administrative measures, the financial interests abroad of American citizens whose enterprises enlarge the market for American commodities.

I can not too strongly recommend to the Congress the passage of some such enabling measure as the bill which was recommended by the Secretary of State in his letter of December 13, The object of the proposed legislation is, in brief, to enable the Executive to apply, as the case may require, to any or all commodities, whether or not on the free list from a country which discriminates against the United States, a graduated scale of duties up to the maximum of 25 per cent ad valorem provided in the present law. Flat tariffs are out of date. Nations no longer accord equal tariff treatment to all other nations irrespective of the treatment from them received. flexible power at the command of the Executive would serve to moderate any unfavorable tendencies on the part of those countries from which the importations into the United States are substantially confined to articles on the free list as well as of the countries which find a lucrative market in the United States for their products under existing customs rates. very necessary that the American Government should be equipped with weapons of negotiation adapted to modern economic conditions, in order that we may at all times be in a position to gain not only technically just but actually equitable treatment for our trade, and also for American enterprise and vested interests abroad.

BUSINESS SECURED TO OUR COUNTRY BY DIRECT OFFICIAL EFFORT.

As illustrating the commercial benefits to the Nation derived from the new diplomacy and its effectiveness upon the material as well as the more ideal side, it may be remarked that through direct official efforts alone there have been obtained in the course of this administration contracts from foreign Governments involving an expenditure of $50,000,000 in the factories of the United States. Consideration of this fact and some reflection upon the necessary effects of a scientific tariff system and a foreign service alert and equipped to cooperate with the business men of America carry the conviction that the gratifying increase in the export trade of this country is, in substantial amount, due to our improved governmental methods of protecting and stimulating it. It is germane to these observations to remark that in the two years that have elapsed since the successful negotiation of our new treaty with Japan, which at the time seemed to present so many practical difficulties, our export trade to that country has increased at the rate of over $1,000,000 a month. Our exports to Japan for the year ended June 30, 1910, were $21,959,310, while for the year ended June 30, 1912, the exports were $53,478,046, a net increase in the sale of American products of nearly 150 per cent.

SPECIAL CLAIMS ARBITRATION WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Under the special agreement entered into between the United States and Great Britain on August 18, 1910, for the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims, a schedule of claims and the terms of submission have been agreed upon by the two Governments, and together with the special agreement were approved by the Senate on July 19, 1911, but in accordance with the terms of the agreement they did not go into effect until confirmed by the two Governments by an exchange of notes, which was done on April 26 last. Negotiations are still in progress for a supplemental schedule of claims to be submitted to arbitration under this agreement, and meanwhile the necessary preparations for the arbitration of the claims included in the first schedule have been undertaken and are being carried on under the authority of an appropriation made for that purpose at the last session of Congress. It is anticipated that the two Governments will be prepared to call upon the arbitration tribunal, established under this agreement, to meet at Washington early next year to proceed with this arbitration.

FUR-SEAL TREATY AND NEED FOR AMENDMENT OF OUR STATUTE. The act adopted at the last session of Congress to give effect to the fur-seal convention of July 7, 1911, between Great Britain, Japan, Russia, and the United States, provided for the suspension of all land killing of seals on the Pribilof Islands for a period of five years, and an objection has now been presented to this provision by the other parties in interest, which raises the issue as to whether or not this prohibition of land killing is inconsistent with the spirit, if not the letter, of the treaty stipulations. The justification for establishing this close season depends, under the terms of the convention, upon how far, if at all, it is necessary for protecting and preserving the American fur-seal herd and for increasing its number. This is a question requiring examination of the present condition of the herd and the treatment which it needs in the light of actual experience and scientific investigation. A careful examination of the subject is now being made, and this Government will soon be in possession of a considerable amount of new information about the American seal herd, which has been secured during the past season and will be of great value in determining this question; and if it should appear that there is any uncertainty as to the real necessity for imposing a close season at this time I shall take an early opportunity to address a special message to Congress on this subject, in the belief that this Government should yield on this point rather than give the slightest ground for the charge that we have been in any way remiss in observing our treaty obligations.

FINAL SETTLEMENT OF NORTH ATLANTIC FISHERIES DISPUTE.

On the 20th day of July last an agreement was concluded between the United States and Great Britain adopting, with certain modifications, the rules and method of procedure recommended in the award rendered by the North Atlantic Coast Fisheries Arbitration Tribunal on September 7, 1910, for the settlement hereafter, in accordance with the principles laid down in the award, of questions arising with reference to the exercise of the American fishing liberties under Article I of the treaty of October 20, 1818, between the United States and Great This agreement received the approval of the Senate on August 1 and was formally ratified by the two Governments November 15 last. The rules and a method of procedure embodied in the award provided for determining by an impartial tribunal the reasonableness of any new fishery regulations on the treaty coasts of Newfoundland and Canada before such regulations could be enforced against American fishermen exercising their treaty liberties on those coasts, and also for determining the delimitation of bays on such coasts more than 10 miles wide, in accordance with the definition adopted by the tribunal of the meaning of the word "bays" as used in the treaty. In the subsequent negotiations between the two Governments, undertaken for the purpose of giving practical effect to these rules and methods of procedure, it was found that certain modifications therein were desirable from the point of view of both Governments, and these negotiations have finally resulted in the agreement above mentioned by which the award recommendations as modified by mutual consent of the two Governments are finally adopted and made effective, thus bringing this century-old controversy to a final conclusion, which is equally beneficial and satisfactory to both Governments.

IMPERIAL VALLEY AND MEXICO.

In order to make possible the more effective performance of the work necessary for the confinement in their present channel of the waters of the lower Colorado River, and thus to protect the people of the Imperial Valley, as well as in order to reach with the Government of Mexico an understanding regarding the distribution of the waters of the Colorado River, in which both Governments are much interested, negotiations are going forward with a view to the establishment of a preliminary Colorado River commission, which shall have the powers necessary to enable it to do the needful work and with authority to study the question of the equitable distribution of the waters. There is every reason to believe that an understanding upon this point will be reached and that an agreement will be signed in the near future.

CHAMIZAL DISPUTE.

In the interest of the people and city of El Paso this Government has been assiduous in its efforts to bring to an early settlement the long-standing Chamizal dispute with Mexico. Much has been accomplished, and, while the final solution of the dispute is not immediate, the favorable attitude lately assumed by the Mexican Government encourages the hope that this troublesome question will be satisfactorily and definitively settled at an early day.

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF JURISTS.

In pursuance of the convention of August 23, 1906, signed at the Third Pan American Conference, held at Rio de Janeiro, the International Commission of Jurists met at that capital during the month of last June. At this meeting 16 American Republics were represented, including the United States, and comprehensive plans for the future work of the commission were adopted. At the next meeting, fixed for June, 1914, committees already appointed are instructed to report regarding topics assigned to them.

OPIUM CONFERENCE—UNFORTUNATE FAILURE OF OUR GOVERNMENT TO ENACT RECOMMENDED LEGISLATION.

In my message on foreign relations communicated to the two Houses of Congress December 7, 1911, I called especial attention to the assembling of the Opium Conference at The Hague, to the fact that that conference was to review all pertinent municipal laws relating to the opium and allied evils, and certainly all international rules regarding these evils, and to the fact that it seemed to me most essential that the Congress should take immediate action on the antinarcotic legislation before the Congress, to which I had previously called attention by a special message.

The international convention adopted by the conference conforms almost entirely to the principles contained in the proposed antinarcotic legislation which has been before the last two Congresses. It was most unfortunate that this Government, having taken the initiative in the international action which eventuated in the important international opium convention, failed to do its share in the great work by neglecting to pass the necessary legislation to correct the deplorable narcotic evil in the United States as well as to redeem international pledges upon which it entered by virtue of the above-mentioned convention. The Congress at its present session should enact into law those bills now before it which have been so carefully drawn up in collaboration between the Department of State and the other executive departments, and which have behind them not only the moral sentiment of the country, but the practical support of all the legitimate trade interests likely to be affected. Since the international convention was signed adherence to it has been made by several European States not represented at the conference at The Hague and also by 17 Latin-American Republics.

EUROPE AND THE NEAR EAST.

The war between Italy and Turkey came to a close in October last by the signature of a treaty of peace, subsequent to which the Ottoman Empire renounced sovereignty over Cyrenaica and Tripolitania in favor of Italy. During the past year the Near East has unfortunately been the theater of constant hostilities. with the conclusion of peace between Almost simultaneously Italy and Turkey and their arrival at an adjustment of the complex question at issue between them war broke out between Turkey on the one hand and Bulgaria, Greece, Montenegro, and Servia on the other. The United States has happily been involved neither directly nor indirectly with the causes or questions incident to any of these hostilities and has maintained in regard to them an attitude of absolute neutrality and of complete political disinterestedness. In the second war in which the Ottoman Empire has been engaged the loss of life and the consequent distress on both sides have been appalling, and the United States has found occasion, in the interest of humanity, to carry out the charitable desires of the American people to extend a measure of relief to the sufferers on either side through the impartial medium of the Red Cross. Beyond this the chief care of the Government of the United States has been to make due provision for the protection of its nationals resident in belligerent territory. In the exercise of my duty in this matter I have dispatched to Turkish waters a specialservice squadron, consisting of two armored cruisers, in order that this Government may if need be bear its part in such measures as it may be necessary for the interested nations to adopt for the safeguarding of foreign lives and property in the Ottoman Empire in the event that a dangerous situation should develop. In the meanwhile the several interested European powers have promised to extend to American citizens the benefit of such precautionary or protective measures as they might adopt, in the same manner in which it has been the practice of this Government to extend its protection to all foreigners resident in those countries of the Western Hemisphere in which it has from time to time been the task of the United States to act in the interest of peace and good order. The early appearance of a large fleet of European warships in the Bosphorus apparation. ently assured the protection of foreigners in that quarter, where the presence of the American stationnaire, the U. S. S. Scorpion, sufficed, under the circumstances, to represent the United States. Our cruisers were thus left free to act if need be along the

Mediterranean coasts should any unexpected contingency arise affecting the numerous American interests in the neighborhood of Smyrna and Belrut

SPITZBERGEN.

The great preponderance of American material interests in the subarctic island of Spitzbergen, which has always been regarded politically as "no man's land," impels this Government to a continued and lively interest in the international dispositions to be made for the political governance and administration of that region. The conflict of certain claims of American citizens and others is in a fair way to adjustment, while the settlement of matters of administration, whether by international conference of the interested powers or otherwise, continues to be the subject of exchange of views between the Governments concerned.

LIBERIA.

As a result of the efforts of this Government to place the Government of Liberia in position to pay its outstanding indebtedness and to maintain a stable and efficient government, negotiations for a loan of $1,700,000 have been successfully concluded, and it is anticipated that the payment of the old loan and the issuance of the bonds of the 1912 loan for the rehabilitation of the finances of Liberia will follow at an early date, when the new receivership will go into active operation. The new receivership will consist of a general receiver of customs designated by the Government of the United States and three receivers of customs designated by the Governments of Germany, France, and Great Britain, which countries have commercial interests in the Republic of Liberia.

In carrying out the understanding between the Government of Liberia and that of the United States, and in fulfilling the terms of the agreement between the former Government and the American bankers, three competent ex-army officers are now effectively employed by the Liberian Government in reorganizing the police force of the Republic, not only to keep in order the native tribes in the hinterland, but to serve as a necessary police force along the frontier. It is hoped that these measures will assure not only the continued existence but the prosperity and welfare of the Republic of Liberia. Liberia possesses fertility of soil and natural resources which should insure to its people a reasonable prosperity. It was the duty of the United States to assist the Republic of Liberia in accordance with our historical interest and moral guardianship of a community founded by American citizens, as it was also the duty of the American Government to attempt to assure permanence to a country of much sentimental and perhaps future real interest to a large body of our citizens.

MOROCCO.

The legation at Tangier is now in charge of our consul general, who is acting as chargé d'affaires, as well as caring for our commercial interests in that country. In view of the fact that many of the foreign powers are now represented by chargés d'affaires, it has not been deemed necessary to appoint at the present time a minister to fill a vacancy occurring in that post.

The political disturbances in China in the autumn and winter of 1911–12 resulted in the abdication of the Manchu rulers on February 12, followed by the formation of a provisional republican government empowered to conduct the affairs of the nation until a permanent government might be regularly established. The natural sympathy of the American people with the assumption of republican principles by the Chinese people was appropriately expressed in a concurrent resolution of Congress on April 17, 1912. A constituent assembly, composed of representatives duly chosen by the people of China in the elections that are now being held, has been called to meet in January next to adopt a permanent constitution and organize the Government of the nascent Republic. During the formative constitutional stage and pending definite action by the assembly, as expressive of the popular will and the hoped-for establishment of a stable republican form of government capable of fulfilling its international obligations, the United States is, according to precedent, maintaining full and friendly de facto relations with the provisional government.

The new condition of affairs thus created has presented many

The new condition of affairs thus created has presented many serious and complicated problems, both of internal rehabilitation and of international relations, whose solution it was realized would necessarily require much time and patience. From the beginning of the upheaval last autumn it was felt by the United States, in common with the other powers having large interests in China, that independent action by the foreign Governments in their own individual interests would add further confusion to a situation already complicated. A policy of international cooperation was accordingly adopted in an understanding, reached early in the disturbances, to act together for the protection of the lives and property of foreigners if menaced, to maintain an attitude of strict impartiality as between the contending factions, and to abstaln from any endeavor to influence the Chinese in their organization of a new form of government. In view of the seriousness of the disturbances and their general character, the American minister at Peking was instructed at his discretion to advise our nationals in the affected districts to concentrate at such centers as were easily accessible to foreign troops or men-of-war. Nineteen of our naval vessels were stationed at various Chinese ports, and other measures were promptly taken for the adequate protection of American interests.

It was further mutually agreed, in the hope of hastening an end to hostilities, that none of the interested powers would approve the making of loans by its nationals to either side. As soon, however, as a united provisional government of China was assured, the United States joined in a favorable consideration of that government's request for advances needed for immediate administrative necessities and later for a loan to effect a permanent national reorganization. The interested Governments had already, by common consent, adopted, in respect to the purposes, expenditure, and security of any loans to China made by their nationals, certain conditions which were held to be essential not only to secure reasonable protection for the foreign investors, but also to safeguard and strengthen China's credit by discouraging indiscriminate borrowing and by insuring the application of the funds toward the establishment of the stable and effective government necessary to China's In June last representative banking groups of the United States, France, Germany, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia formulated, with the general sanction of their respective Governments, the guaranties that would be expected in relation to the expenditure and security of the large reorganization loan desired by China, which, however, have thus far proved unacceptable to the provisional government.

SPECIAL MISSION OF CONDOLENCE TO JAPAN,

In August last I accredited the Secretary of State as special ambassador to Japan, charged with the mission of bearing to the imperial family, the Government, and the people of that Empire the sympathetic message of the American Commonwealth on the sad occasion of the death of His Majesty the Emperor Mutsuhito, whose long and benevolent reign was the greater part of Japan's modern history. The kindly reception everywhere accorded to Secretary Knox showed that his mission was deeply appreciated by the Japanese nation and emphasized strongly the friendly relations that have for so many years existed between the two peoples.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Our relations with the Argentine Republic are most friendly and cordial. So, also, are our relations with Brazil, whose Government has accepted the invitation of the United States to send two army officers to study at the Coast Artillery School at Fort Monroe. The long-standing Alsop claim, which had been the only hindrance to the healthy growth of the most friendly relations between the United States and Chile, having been eliminated through the submission of the question to His Britannic Majesty King George V as "amiable compositeur," it is a cause of much gratification to me that our relations with Chile are now established upon a firm basis of growing friendship. The Chilean Government has placed an officer of the United States Coast Artillery in charge of the Chilean Coast Artillery School, and has shown appreciation of American methods by confiding to an American firm important work for the Chilean coast defenses.

Last year a revolution against the established Government of Ecuador broke out at the principal port of that Republic. Previous to this occurrence the chief American interest in Ecuador, represented by the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Co., incorporated in the United States, had rendered extensive transportation and other services on account to the Ecuadorian Government, the amount of which ran into a sum which was steadily increasing and which the Ecuadorian Government had made no provision to pay, thereby threatening to crush out the very existence of this American enterprise. When tranquillity had been restored to Ecuador as a result of the triumphant progress of the Government forces from Quito, this Government interposed its good offices to the end that the American interests in Ecuador might be saved from complete extinction. As a part of the arrangement which was reached between the parties, and at the request of the Government of Ecuador, I have consented to name an arbitrator, who, acting under the terms of the railroad contract, with an arbitrator named by the Ecuadorian Government, will pass upon the claims that have arisen since the arrangement reached through the action of a similar arbitral tribunal in 1908.

In pursuance of a request made some time ago by the Ecuadorian Government, the Department of State has given much attention to the problem of the proper sanitation of Guayaquil. As a result a detail of officers of the Canal Zone will be sent to Guayaquil to recommend measures that will lead to the complete permanent sanitation of this plague and fever infected region of that Republic, which has for so long constituted a menace to health conditions on the Canal Zone. It is hoped that the report which this mission will furnish will point out a way whereby the modicum of assistance which the United States may properly lend the Ecuadorian Government may be made effective in ridding the west coast of South America of a focus of contagion to the future commercial current passing through the Panama Canal.

In the matter of the claim of John Celestine Landreau against the Government of Peru, which claim arises out of certain contracts and transactions in connection with the discovery and exploitation of guano, and which has been under discussion between the two Governments since 1874, I am glad to report that as the result of prolonged negotiations, which have been characterized by the utmost friendliness and good will on both sides, the Department of State has succeeded in securing the consent of Peru to the arbitration of the claim, and that the negotiations attending the drafting and signature of a protocol submitting the claim to an arbitral tribunal are proceeding with due celerity.

An officer of the American Public Health Service and an American sanitary engineer are now on the way to Iquitos, in the employ of the Peruvian Government, to take charge of the sanitation of that river port. Peru is building a number of submarines in this country, and continues to show every desire to have American capital invested in the Republic.

In July the United States sent undergraduate delegates to the 'Third International Students' Congress held at Lima, American students having been for the first time invited to one of these meetings.

The Republic of Uruguay has shown its appreciation of American agricultural and other methods by sending a large commission to this country and by employing many American experts to assist in building up agricultural and allied industries in Uruguay.

Venezuela is paying off the last of the claims the settlement of which was provided for by the Washington protocols, including those of American citizens. Our relations with Venezuela are most cordial, and the trade of that Republic with the United States is now greater than with any other country.

CENTRAL AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN.

During the past summer the revolution against the administration which followed the assassination of President Caceres a year ago last November brought the Dominican Republic to the verge of administrative chaos, without offering any guaranties of eventual stability in the ultimate success of either party. In pursuance of the treaty relations of the United States with the Dominican Republic, which were threatened by the necess sity of suspending the operation under American administration of the customhouses on the Haitian frontier, it was found necessary to dispatch special commissioners to the island to reestablish the customhouses and with a guard sufficient to insure needed protection to the customs administration. which have been made appear to have resulted in the restoration of normal conditions throughout the Republic. The good offices which the commissioners were able to exercise were instrumental in bringing the contending parties together and in furnishing a basis of adjustment which it is hoped will result in permanent benefit to the Dominican people.

Mindful of its treaty relations, and owing to the position of the Government of the United States as mediator between the Dominican Republic and Haiti in their boundary dispute, and because of the further fact that the revolutionary activities on the Haitian-Dominican frontier had become so active as practically to obliterate the line of demarcation that had been here-tofore recognized pending the definitive settlement of the boundary in controversy, it was found necessary to indicate to the two island Governments a provisional de facto boundary line. This was done without prejudice to the rights or obligations of either country in a final settlement to be reached by arbitration. The tentative line chosen was one which, under the circumstances brought to the knowledge of this Government, seemed to conform to the best interests of the disputants. The border patrol which it had been found necessary to reestablish for customs purposes between the two countries was instructed provisionally to observe this line.

The Republic of Cuba last May was in the throes of a lawless uprising that for a time threatened the destruction of a great deal of valuable property—much of it owned by Americans and other foreigners—as well as the existence of the Government itself. The armed forces of Cuba being inadequate to guard property from attack and at the same time properly to operate against the rebels, a force of American marines was dispatched from our naval station at Guantanamo into the Province of Oriente for the protection of American and other foreign life and property. The Cuban Government was thus able to use all its forces in putting down the outbreak, which it succeeded in doing in a period of six weeks. The presence of two American warships in the harbor of Habana during the most critical period of this disturbance contributed in great measure to allay the fears of the inhabitants, including a large foreign colony.

There has been under discussion with the Government of Cuba for some time the question of the release by this Government of its leasehold rights at Bahia Honda, on the northern coast of Cuba, and the enlargement, in exchange therefor, of the naval station which has been established at Guantanamo Bay, on the south. As the result of the negotiations thus carried on an agreement has been reached between the two Governments providing for the suitable enlargement of the Guantanamo Bay station upon terms which are entirely fair and equitable to all parties concerned.

At the request alike of the Government and both political parties in Panama, an American commission undertook supervision of the recent presidential election in that Republic, where our treaty relations, and, indeed, every geographical consideration, make the maintenance of order and satisfactory conditions of peculiar interest to the Government of the United States. The elections passed without disorder, and the new administration has entered upon its functions.

The Government of Great Britain has asked the support of the United States for the protection of the interests of British holders of the foreign bonded debt of Guatemala. While this Government is hopeful of an arrangement equitable to the British bondholders, it is naturally unable to view the question apart from its relation to the broad subject of financial stability in Central America, in which the policy of the United States does not permit it to escape a vital interest. renewal of negotiations between the Government of Guatemala and American bankers, the aim of which is a loan for the rehabilitation of Guatemalan finances, a way appears to be open by which the Government of Guatemala could promptly satisfy any equitable and just British claims, and at the same time so improve its whole financial position as to contribute greatly to the increased prosperity of the Republic and to redound to the benefit of foreign investments and foreign trade with that country. Failing such an arrangement, it may become impossible for the Government of the United States to escape its obligations in connection with such measures as may become necessary to exact justice to legitimate foreign claims

In the recent revolution in Nicaragua, which, it was generally admitted, might well have resulted in a general Central American conflict but for the intervention of the United States, the Government of Honduras was especially menaced; but fortunately peaceful conditions were maintained within the borders of that Republic. The financial condition of that country remains unchanged, no means having been found for the final adjustment of pressing outstanding foreign claims. This makes it the more regrettable that the financial convention between the United States and Honduras has thus far failed of ratification. The Government of the United States continues to hold itself ready to cooperate with the Government of Honduras, which, it is believed, can not much longer delay the meeting of its foreign obligations, and it is hoped at the proper time American bankers will be willing to cooperate for this purpose.

NECESSITY FOR GREATER GOVERNMENTAL EFFORT IN RETENTION AND EXPANSION OF OUR FOREIGN TRADE.

It is not possible to make to the Congress a communication upon the present foreign relations of the United States so detailed as to convey an adequate impression of the enormous increase in the importance and activities of those relations. If this Government is really to preserve to the American people that free opportunity in foreign markets which will soon be indispensable to our prosperity, even greater efforts must be made. Otherwise the American merchant, manufacturer, and exporter will find many a field in which American trade should logically predominate preempted through the more energetic efforts of other governments and other commercial nations.

There are many ways in which through hearty cooperation the legislative and executive branches of this Government can do much. The absolute essential is the spirit of united effort and singleness of purpose. I will allude only to a very few specific examples of action which ought then to result. America can not take its proper place in the most important fields for its commercial activity and enterprise unless we have a merchant American commerce and enterprise can not be effectively fostered in those fields unless we have good American banks in the countries referred to. We need American newspapers in those countries and proper means for public information about them. We need to assure the permanency of a trained foreign service. We need legislation enabling the members of the foreign service to be systematically brought in direct contact with the industrial, manufacturing, and exporting interests of this country in order that American business men may enter the foreign field with a clear perception of the exact conditions to be dealt with and the officers themselves may prosecute their work with a clear idea of what American industrial and manufacturing interests require.

CONCLUSION.

Congress should fully realize the conditions which obtain in the world as we find ourselves at the threshold of our middle age as a Nation. We have emerged full grown as a peer in the great concourse of nations. We have passed through various formative periods. We have been self-centered in the struggle to develop our domestic resources and deal with our domestic questions. The Nation is now too mature to continue in its foreign relations those temporary expedients natural to a people to whom domestic affairs are the sole concern. In the past our diplomacy has often consisted, in normal times, in a mere assertion of the right to international existence. We are now in a larger relation with broader rights of our own and obligations to others than ourselves. A number of great guiding principles were laid down early in the history of this Govern-The recent task of our diplomacy has been to adjust those principles to the conditions of to-day, to develop their corollaries, to find practical applications of the old principles expanded to meet new situations. Thus are being evolved bases upon which can rest the superstructure of policies which must grow with the destined progress of this Nation. The successful conduct of our foreign relations demands a broad and a modern view. We can not meet new questions nor build for the future if we confine ourselves to outworn dogmas of the past and to the perspective appropriate at our emergence from colonial times and conditions. The opening of the Panama Canal will mark a new era in our international life and create new and world-wide conditions which, with their vast correlations and consequences, will obtain for hundreds of years to come. We must not wait for events to overtake us unawares. With continuity of purpose we must deal with the problems of our external relations by a diplomacy modern, resourceful, magnanimous, and fittingly expressive of the high ideals of a great nation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I merely desire to have the papers

There being no objection, the memorial and accompanying papers were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORIAL TO THE UNITED STATES SENATE.

The Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, in session at Atlanta, Ga., November 14, 1912, most respectfully requests the United States Senate to pass the agricultural extension bill, H. R. 22871, during the coming session of the Sixty-second Congress.

sion bill, H. R. 22871, during the coming session of the Sixty-second Congress.

For some years the institutions represented in this association have been urging the development of work in agricultural extension for the purpose of carrying to the farmer in his own community the successful experience of the experiment stations and the approved teachings of the colleges of agriculture.

During the sessions of the Sixty-first Congress several bills looking to this end were introduced and hearings given to the representatives of the agricultural colleges, of the National Grange, of bankers' associations, and of others interested in the development of the Nation's agricultural resources.

On January 16, 1912, the Hon. Hore Smith introduced in the United States Senate and the Hon. A. F. Lever introduced in the House of Representatives a bill to establish agricultural extension departments in connection with the agricultural colleges in the several States receiving the benefits of the act of Congress approved July 2, 1862. The bill now known as H. R. 22871, embodying substantially the provisions of the two bills referred to above, has passed the House of Representatives and is now pending in the Senate.

The provisions of this bill have been fully discussed in the hearings before the Committees on Agriculture in both the House of Representatives and the Senate. Its provisions are simple and clear. The bill seeks to bring to the practical farmer by correspondence, instruction, and demonstration the accumulated and approved experiment and the colleges and experiment stations during the past 50 years.

Fifty years ago the United States Congress passed the act providing seeks to bring to the practical farmer by correspondence, instruction, and demonstration the accumulated and approved experience and methods of the colleges and experiment stations during the past 50 years.

Fifty years ago the United States Congress passed the act providing for the land-grant colleges. Twenty-five years ago Congress passed the act providing for the experiment stations. Both these acts have been supplemented with legislation increasing the funds and the efficiency of both colleges and stations. It is now urged that on this anniversary year the agricultural extension bill be passed in order to enable these colleges to carry to the farmer who can not come to the college or station such demonstration of the results obtained in these institutions as shall enable him to maintain and develop the agricultural resources under his direction. This movement we believe to be in accord with sound public policy lying at the basis of the economic policies looking toward increased production as an important factor in determining the comfort and welfare of the whole people. This bill naturally and logically completes the chain of agencies fostered by the Federal Government for the betterment of agriculture. Hitherto we have maintained laboratories and field experiments at our colleges and stations, have put the results into bulletins, and have taught them in the classroom. It is now proposed to take these results to the local community, carry the school to the farmer, and make his own fields a laboratory in which we can demonstrate the value of science when applied to agriculture.

The association would call the attention of the Senate to two facts: First, the universal approval the country over of the wisdom of passing the land-grant act after an experience of 25 years; and.

Second, to the fact that the agricultural interests as represented by farmers, the colleges, the experiment stations, the agricultural press, and other interests as represented in bankers' associations and philanthropic agencies of variou

Attention is respectfully called to the hearings before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in the United States Senate, Sixty-second Congress, second session (S. 4563), March 1, 1912, for a more complete statement of the merits of the bill and of the reasons for its enactment into law.

Passed by the Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, Atlanta, Ga., November 14, 1912.

Abstract of indorsements of S. 4563, a bill to establish agricultural extension departments, etc.

ALABAMA.

President State Agricultural and Mechanical College says it is "a splendid piece of prospective legislation."

President Alabama Polytechnic Institute: "We regard this work as one of the greatest possible goods that can be rendered by the Government to our great farming interests * * *. This sort of constructive work done with the Government money seems to me is of even more value than what night be called the destructive work of the appropriations for guns and battleships."

ARIZONA.

President University of Arizona: "The newer sections of the country are in great need of the national help that such a bill as yours contemplates * * *. I am glad the whole subject is engaging the attention of Congress * * *."

ARKANSAS.

ARKANSAS.

President University of Arkansas: "I heartily approve of the bill and hope that it will be passed."

Dean and director College of Agriculture: "Senate bill 4563 * * * is a piece of proposed legislation which, to my mind, is of great importance."

CALIFORNIA.

President University of California: "There is no way in which we can do real good for the masses of our people better than through agricultural extension work * * *. There can be no question about our favoring the bill; we know what it means."

CONNECTICUT.

President Connecticut Agricultural College: "My personal opinion is that carrying of the latest scientific knowledge to the working farmer is one of the most important duties of the land-grant colleges. I sincerely hope that this bill will have favorable consideration by the present session of Congress."

DELAWARE.

President Delaware College: "I am very much pleased, indeed, to hear that the bill * * * has been read twice and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry * * *. Boys and girls of the common-school and high-school ages usually decide into what sphere of life they wish to enter. Formerly the dearth of agricultural education in that formative period rendered it impossible for the boy or girl to realize the importance of such instruction, and consequently the country boy usually found a home in the city. I believe that this condition of affairs will be remedied by the operation of such a bill as you have proposed."

President University of Florida: "I sincerely hope that you will be successful in passing this measure. Our State at the present time is giving $7.500 annually for farmers' institutes and agricultural extension work. With double this amount we believe that the efficiency of the agricultural extension work would be quadrupled, as paradoxical as this may seem." GEORGIA.

Chancellor University of Georgia: "It is the best bill for extension work that I have ever seen. It is the only bill for extension work which I have been able to read and understand. If there is any way in which I can aid in its passage, I will be glad to know it."

President State College of Agriculture: "We are naturally very much gratified to see the progress you are making with your measure in the Senate, and hope Mr. Lever will have equal success in the House."

President the College of Hawaii: "I have read the bill over carefully and heartily commend your efforts to secure this benefit for the large and important class of our people who are in need of its provisions. This is constructive legislation of the truest type. Efficiency and contentment in agriculture are at the foundation of the Nation's welfare. * * I believe that extension teaching is most important of all our methods for the propagation of knowledge. * * * There is sufficient data to show that the endowment for the agricultural colleges and experiment stations and the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture must be considered as among the best investments that the Nation has ever made."

IDAHO.

President University of Idaho: "Even with the best preparation we can make and the most generous support from the Government in all of its divisions we expect to be swamped by applications for assistance through extension instruction. Practically every community in the State is clamoring for extension work, and only a small percentage of the requests can be compiled with. With reasonable support, however, from the United States and the State we may expect that practically the whole agricultural population of Idaho will go to school for a portion of each year." ILLINOIS.

Vice president University of Illinois: "The bill, S. 4563, introduced by you into the Senate of the United States is one of very great importance to the people of our country, and if passed is destined to work wonderfully great results. It is well known to everybody who has thought on the matter that agriculture with us is in a state of low development. * * * The people of the rural districts are not sharing adequately in the general prosperity of the country, and the latter can not be maintained without a forward movement among these rural people. Everywhere of late is heard the cry, 'Back to the farm.' But until the farm becomes as desirable as a source of living and of community life no adequate result can be reached. This bill will serve in a practical way to make this movement really successful. * * * The University of Illinois is doing a great deal of this work now from State appropriations. It can do much more with the aid that the bill is destined to give."

Editor Orange Judd Farmer, Chicago: "The demonstration idea has not been given great attention at the North. Its wonderful success South ought to be sufficient proof that it would be just as satisfactory at the North. We are heartily in favor of this kind of work. I am very anxious to do what I can to help this bill along."

INDIANA.

President Purdue University: "I am in favor of this kind of legis-lation rather than some of the other measures which are now before Congress. * * I find the demands upon us for attention and for work which we would like to do far in excess of our resources. This kind of work is the thing now most needed in our agricultural colleges, and I hope the measure will pass."

KANSAS.

President State Agricultural College: "We shall be very glad to do anything necessary to be done to indicate the interest of the farming classes in this matter and to assure the Members of Congress that they will appreciate the enactment of a law along the line of this bill."

KENTUCKY.

Editor Home and Farm, Louisville: "The policy will result in great good. * * * Only through a better agricultural education will the farmers be able to diversify their crops intelligently, care for their soils, and increase their profits."

MAINE.

President University of Maine: "I have gone over Senate bill 4563 with very great interest. I see nothing whatever to criticize or change in the bill. If this bill becomes a law, it will enable the land-grant colleges to render unusual service to the people of this country. If I can be of any service in bringing about the favorable consideration of this bill it will be a pleasure."

MASSACHUSETTS.

President Massachusetts Agricultural College: "I am more than glad to give a hearty indorsement to the bill. * * * I think that this is one of the most important educational measures ever introduced into Congress. I believe the time is ripe for a great Federal movement in popular education in agriculture and rural affairs. The States are doing something, but we need the stimulus, direction, and practical assistance of the National Government. * * * You will find the agricultural educators and farmers of America back of you in this effort to inaugurate a great movement. I know of nothing that the present Congress could do that would be more popular. I hope the bill may be passed at this session."

MICHIGAN.

President Michigan Agricultural College: "This bill has my hearty indorsement, and I hope may pass. I shall do all I can to that end." MISSISSIPPI.

MISSISSIFI.

President Agricultural and Mechanical College: "I heartily indorse your bill, While I was president of the American Association of Institute Workers I delivered an address urging that such a bill be passed by the National Congress, Extension work is by far the most important work of the land-grant colleges at this time. * * * We already have enough information to transform our agriculture if we could get the people to incorporate it in their practices."

MONTANA.

President Montana State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts: "I am heartily in favor of this movement, and I believe that the provisions of this bill will meet the approval of all the interests concerned. The amount required to carry out this bill is insignificant, and yet it will stimulate the States to expend several times this amount."

NEBRASKA.

Chancellor University of Nebraska: "The University of Nebraska has already organized a department of agricultural extension. For lack of funds, however, our work is conducted mainly along the line of farmers' institutes. I have read the bill and most cordially indorse it in every particular."

President Rutgers College: "I am glad to express to you my emphatic indorsement of this measure and my earnest hope that it will be passed. The State Agricultural College of New Jersey, Rutgers College, is surely in position to do extension work throughout the State, and the work ought to be done."

NEVADA.

President College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts: "I heartily approve your bill and hope that it will be adopted."

NEW HAMPSHIRE,

President New Hampshire College of Agriculture and the Mechanic Arts: "My personal belief is that if this bill is passed by Congress it will be one of the wisest pieces of legislation since the land-grant act of 1862. * * To my mind agricultural extension work is of the utmost importance at the present time. Our experiment stations have accumulated a large mass of facts and our colleges have done a wonderful work in accumulating and assimilating agricultural information of all kinds, and the most important thing we can do now is to extend this information to the farmers. This can be done only by demonstration and by other practical, thoroughgoing methods. I hope that your bill will receive the hearty support of every Member of Congress."

NEW MEXICO.

President New Mexico College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts:
"I have read the bill with great care and will say that I believe it to be the best of the several bills now pending before Congress which have this object in view. Whatever may be the merits of the various propositions to have the Federal Government support agricultural high schools, trade schools, district agricultural schools, and branch experiment stations, it seems clear that none of these ought to be tied up with the agricultural extension proposition, of which almost everybody is in favor. The Association of Agricultural Colleges at its recent meeting took the position that the support of agricultural extension work was the most important advance movement to be accomplished by legislation at this time."

NEW YORK.

President Cornell University: "It is a species of instruction which appeals to the public more than college instruction or investigation, for which provision has been made in previous acts of Congress."

NORTH CAROLINA.

President College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts: "There is no work which the Nation can do now which would tell more for material progress than the extension work, which would be so healthfully aided by your bill. If there is anything that our farmers need more than another it is for some one to carry directly to them the vast amount of scientific knowledge about crops and methods which has been made available in the past few years. The passage of this bill would give an opportunity to do this thing, and I am sure no step could count more for progress than would be taken by such action on the part of our Congress."

NORTH DAKOTA.

President North Dakota Agricultural College: "A resolution was adopted at the Tristate Grain Growers' Convention, indorsing the passage of your bill, and as president of the convention I sent copies of the resolutions to the Members of both Houses in Minnesota and the two Dakotas. I trust the bill will find favor with both Congressmen and Senators and become a law."

OKLAHOMA.

President Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College: "I am in hearty sympathy with the purpose of your bill."

OREGON.

President Oregon Agricultural College: "I am in hearty accord with all the provisions of this bill. I have already written Members of the Oregon delegation urging that they give it their support. The Oregon State Agricultural College has a regularly organized department or division for extension work in agriculture and home economics. One great need is for money with which to carry on this work. I sincerely trust that your bill may be passed by the present Congress."

PENNSYLVANIA.

PENNSYLVANIA.

President The Pennsylvania State College. "Let me thank you for copy of Senate bill 4563. * * * Wishing the bill success and thanking you for your efforts for the benefit of public education, I am. * * *"

Secretary State Horticultural Association of Pennsylvania: "I take this opportunity to especially commend Senate bill 4563, introduced by you, and to assure you of the interest and support of this association. This is a matter of immediate need and far-reaching advantage to the agricultural interests of the country. I sincerely hope that it may become a law."

RHODE ISLAND.

President Rhode Island State College: "I heartily approve of your bill and have no criticisms to make. This college has been prosecuting extension work for seven or eight years, laboring under the difficulty of lack of funds, but I am anxious to do whatever is possible to aid in the passage of this measure and have written our Senators accordingly."

President the Clemson Agricultural College; "I have read this bill with a great deal of interest. * * * I consider it one of the most important pieces of constructive legislation proposed since the Hatch Act establishing the Agricultural Experiment Stations. There is no question but that the great need to-day is the dissemination of agricultural information among our rural people. We would welcome the passage of such a bill as yours, and assure you that we would try to make its application in South Carolina of the greatest usefulness to our people."

President South Dakota State College: "The cause is one that has our hearty indorsement, I have not been negligent of Senate bill 4563. I believe that our delegation will support it."

Principal the School of Agriculture: "I think our farming people * * have almost no realization of the advantages that will come from legislation of this kind. * * * I feel positive that this work will greatly advance the agricultural interests of this great State of South Dakota."

TENNESSEE.

President University of Tennessee: "I am heartily in favor of the passage of this act. I believe the work contemplated by it to be of the greatest importance. I will be glad to do anything in my power to influence its passage."

TEXAS. President Agricultural and Mechanical College: "If this bill should become a law I am sure that it will mark a new era in agricultural education among the masses in America. " I can think of no expenditure of money by the Government that would be more remnerative to the Nation and which would redound to the amelioration of so large a number of our most deserving fellow citizens."

Editor Farm and Ranch: "This is a very important measure and one that should be passed without opposition."

President Agricultural College of Utah: "Utah established an agricultural extension department several years ago. * * We are unable, however, with the means at our disposal, to meet the demands made upon us. * * * You are at perfect liberty to quote the officials of the Utah Agricultural College as being in very hearty sympathy with any measure for the promotion of our industrial life through the development of extension work among the farmers and farmers' wives throughout the country. It is possibly the most important work now lying before the agricultural colleges, since it permits the proper distribution among those who need it of the splendid mass of facts gathered by the agricultural experiment stations."

VIRGINIA.

President Virginia Polytechnic Institute: "This is by far the best preposition which has yet come forward. * * * The bill seems carefully drawn, and I can most heartly indorse it."

WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON.

Vice president the State College of Washington: "I have been waiting a little to find what was recommended by the meeting of the agricultural college representatives, and find that they are all of them backing this particular bill. There is certainly a large demand for more extension work in the country. We need to rationalize our education and make it more helpful to the young men and young women who do not expect to enter professional life. I will write to our Representatives and Senators and ask for their hearty cooperation in the passage of Senate bill 4563."

WEST VIRGINIA.

President West Virginia University: "I thank you very much for a copy of the bill sent and hasten to express my wish that it may become a law. " "This is one of the greatest works for the benefit of the entire country to which public money can be devoted. It is through the extension work, and through it alone, as far as I can see, that the people of most of our rural communities can be thoroughly awakened to the need and value of agricultural education. The proposed bill seems to me to be satisfactory in every detail, and I hope that you will be successful in securing its passage."

Dean and director College of Agriculture, West Virginia University: "I am sending out a letter to some of our leading people urging the support of your bill, and would like to send a copy of the bill with these letters. * * * We shall give this measure every support possible." WISCONSIN.

WISCONSIN.

Dean University of Wisconsin: "Bill, Senate 5463, * * * is to my mind the most suggestive measure that is under consideration in Congress for the advancement of the agricultural welfare of the Nation. What is needed most imperatively is the carrying of present agricultural knowledge to the man on the farm. * * * The agricultural extension service is the only way in which this can be most effectively accomplished, and your bill most satisfactorily fulfills this need. * * * We in Wisconsin will do all that we can to aid in the passage of this measure."

Measure."

Secretary Wisconsin Country Life Conference Association: "The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the conference association, representing all the varied interests of country life and rural progress in all parts of Wisconsin:

"Resolved, That it is the sentiment of this conference association that we urge our Representatives in Congress to support the bill 'To establish agricultural extension departments in connection with the agricultural colleges in the several States,' etc. House bill No. 18160, Senate bill No. 4563.

"I take pleasure in acquainting you with representative Wisconsin sentiment on this measure."

Secretary Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders' Association: "Inclosed herewith please find copy of resolution passed unanimously by the Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders' Association, an organization representing all of Wisconsin's best live-stock breeders:

"Maddison, Wis., February 8, 1912.

"MADISON, WIS., February 8, 1912.

"Secretary Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders' Association."

"Secretary Wisconsin Live Stock Breeders' Association."

Secretary National Association of State Universities: "I am deeply interested in your Senate bill 4563. The bill ought to pass, and I should be glad to cooperate with you in any way within my power to bring about the desired result."

Mr. W. O. Thompson, member executive committee Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, and president Ohio State University: "As chairman of the executive committee of the Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations I should be very much pleased to be heard before the committees of both the House and Senate. As a little evidence of our interest, I may say that we started agricultural evidence of our interest, I may say that we started agricultural extension four years before the legislature authorized it, and had as many as 8,000 boys on the farms doing experimental work. * * * The Agricultural College Association expressed itself very decidedly last November in favor of agricultural extension."

Secretary New England Conference on Rural Progress, March 8, at the offices of the State board of agriculture, State House, Boston, the following resolutions were unanimously voted:

"Recognizing the latent possibilities of the New England States for agricultural development, especially along certain high-class, specialized lines, and realizing that this development can be most speedly and effectively brought about through well-organized extension teaching in agriculture, the New England Conference on Rural Progress, representing more than 70 organizations interested in rural life, to-day assembled in convention in the city of Boston, would respectfully urge upon Congress the necessity and advisability of passing legislation yet proposed."

The delegates represent the agricultural colleges, the experiment stations, the State granges, and various special agricultural, live-stock, deriving and other organizations and agreedes of New England."

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 3, 1912.

REPORT OF INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 959).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers and illustration, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government approved August 24, 1912, provided for the International Waterways Commission in the following terms,

For continuing until December 31, 1912, the work of investigation and report by the International Waterways Commission, authorized by section 4 of the river and harbor act approved June 13, 1902, $10,000: Provided, That report as to the progress of the work be made by the American commissioners to Congress at the beginning of the next session.

The American commissioners have rendered a full report of all their acts up to this time, which I herewith transmit. It appears from this report that the commission still has two pieces of work to complete before it can properly go out of existence.

One is its final report upon a dam at the outlet of Lake Erie, a difficult and important question upon which it has expended a vast amount of labor. It should be allowed to finish its work, to clear the ground for its successor, the International Joint Commission, which will consider all future questions of this nature. I am informed that the report has been delayed, and may be further delayed, by the illness and absence in Europe of one of the Canadian engineers, but that it can probably be completed within a few months, certainly before the completion of the other piece of unfinished work.

The other is to ascertain and reestablish, to mark upon the ground, and to delineate upon modern charts, the location of a portion of the international boundary between the United States and Canada, which work was specifically assigned to the International Waterways Commission by article 4 of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain dated April 11, 1908. This work the commission states can not be completed by December 31, 1912, but will require from a year to 15 months more time beyond that date.

The work of the commission has been of a high order, and has been prosecuted with diligence. International courtesy as well as treaty obligations require that the commission be allowed to complete its work. I recommend that the items to be found in the estimates for its support during the second half of the current fiscal year and for a part of the next fiscal year receive the favorable consideration of Congress.

IMPEACHMENT OF ROBERT W. ARCHBALD,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Bacon). The hour of 12.30 o'clock having arrived, under the order of the Senate, the Senate is now in session sitting as a Court of Impeachment for the trial of articles of impeachment against Judge Robert W. Archbald. Due proclamation will be made.

The Assistant Doorkeeper (Mr. C. A. Loeffler) made the following proclamation:

"Hear ye! Hear ye! Hear ye! The Senate of the United States, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, is now in session."

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives-HENRY D. CLAYTON of Alabama, Edwin Y. Webb of North Carolina, John C. Floyd of Arkansas, John W. Davis of West Virginia, John A. Sterling of Illinois, Paul Howland of Ohio, and George W. Norris of Nebraska—were announced by the Acting Assistant Doorkeeper (Mr. Thomas W. Keller) and conducted to the seats assigned them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are certain Senators who have not yet taken the oath required in this proceeding, and they will present themselves at the desk for that purpose. The Secretary will call the names of the Senators who have not as yet taken the oath.

The Secretary called the names of Mr. Brown, Mr. Chilton, Mr. Curtis, Mr. Davis, Mr. Dixon, Mr. du Pont, Mr. Gore, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Lea, Mr. Owen, Mr. Perky, and Mr. Richardson; and Mr. Brown, Mr. Curtis, Mr. Dixon, Mr. du Pont, Mr. Gore, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Perky, and Mr. Richardson presented themselves at the desk and the oath was administered to them by the President pro tempore.

The respondent, Robert W. Archbald, and his counsel, A. S. Worthington, Esq., and Robert W. Archbald, jr., Esq., entered the Chamber and took the seats assigned them.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I wish to introduce Mr. Alexander Simpson, jr., of the Philadelphia bar, who will be associated with the counsel for Judge Archbald in this trial, The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The name of Mr. Simpson will be entered as of counsel for the respondent.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I send to the desk an order, and ask unanimous consent for its present considera-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order submitted by the Senator from Wyoming will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the daily sessions of the Senate sitting in the trial of impeachment of Robert W. Archbald, additional circuit judge of the United States, shall, unless otherwise ordered, commence at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the order will be considered as having been agreed to unanimously. It is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. I move the adoption of the order which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota offers an order, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the opening statement on behalf of the managers shall be made by one person, to be immediately followed by one person who shall make the opening statement on behalf of the respondent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be considered that the order just read has been unanimously agreed to. It is so ordered.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask the adoption of the order which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator form Wyoming submits an order, which will now be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the Senate sitting in the Court of Impeachment do now take a recess until 2 o'clock p. m. this day.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, before the question is put on the adoption of that order, if it is agreeable to the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment, hereafter the managers on the part of the House of Representatives will appear without the formality of an announcement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will give proper direction in that regard.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I presume that might apply, Mr. President, to the counsel for the respondent and to the respondent himself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Proper order will be given in the premises. The order presented by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Clark], unless there be objection, will be considered as unanimously adopted. It is so ordered.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment took a recess until 2 o'clock

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives and the respondent and his counsel withdrew from the Chamber. LIFE-SAVING SERVICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Bacon). The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill which was being read when the Senate resolved itself into a Court of Impeachment.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill (S. 2051) to promote the efficiency of the Life-Saving Service.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, inasmuch as we met at an early hour this morning and there is very little interest in the calendar as it is being read, I move that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock.

Mr. NELSON. I trust the Senator from New Hampshire will withdraw his motion, so that we can dispose of this bill. It is a bill which the Senate has heretofore passed several times, and I think there will be no objection to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will withdraw the motion until the bill shall have been acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sen Hampshire withdraws the motion temporarily. The Senator from New

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, is the bill properly before the Senate, and is it before it subject to an objection?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is subject to an

The Senate is proceeding under Rule VIII.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, as we seem now inclined to pension or retire everybody except the men who really are entitled to the consideration of the Government—and those are the men who pay the taxes-I suppose I ought not to interpose any objection to this bill; and I shall not prevent its consideration. If the Senate of the United States thinks we have reached a time when this class of employees ought to follow other employees of the Government onto a civil pension list—for that is all this is—and thus broaden the precedent and hasten the coming of the day when everybody who works for the Government shall likewise draw a pension, either military or civil, the Senate can take its own responsibility and say so.

For my part. I am opposed to this just as I am opposed to all provisions for the retirement of any man. I believe to-day, just as I have always believed, that every man who serves this Government ought to receive a fair compensation for his services, and he ought to save it or spend it according to his own folly or his own prudence; and then he ought to suffer the consequences of his folly if he is foolish, or enjoy the reward of his prudence if he is prudent.

I suppose the time will come when we will contrive some way to pension the taxpayer. Just exactly how a system for that can be devised is past my comprehension. But with modern legislative legerdemain I have no doubt a way will be devised to make everybody support everybody else without anybody working either for himself or for others.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. BAILEY. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask the Chair to count the other side, to see whether one-fifth of those present demanded them or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was less than one-fifth of a quorum. That is the reason the Chair—Mr. BAILEY. Then I make the point that no quorum is present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas having made that point, the roll will be called; but the Chair was about to do what the Senator had previously asked. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators an-its order unless we can have a discussion of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is not up out of its eder. It was read under Rule VIII, and is subject to objection. Does the Senator from New York object?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, as I understand the action of the Senate, it contemplated that at this time the managers should proceed to make a statement embodying the facts upon which the articles of impeachment are predicated in this case.

Mr. President, this proceeding had its origin in the resolu-tion adopted by the House of Representatives on April 25, 1912, which is embodied in the message sent by the President of the United States to the House of Representatives on May 3, 1912, in the following words:
To the House of Representatives:

in the following words:

To the House of Representatives:

I am in receipt of a copy of a resolution adopted by the House on April 25, reading as follows:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the House of Representatives a copy of any charges filed against Robert W. Archbald, associate judge of the United States Commerce Court, together with the report of any special attorney or agent appointed by the Department of Justice to investigate such charges, and a copy of any and all affidavits, photographs, and evidence filed in the Department of Justice in relation to said charges, together with a statement of the action of the Department of Justice, if any, taken upon said charges and report."

In reply I have to state that in February last certain charges of improper conduct by the Hon. Robert W. Archbald, formerly district judge of the United States court for the middle district of Pennsylvania and now judge of the Commerce Court, were brought to my attention by Commissioner Meyer, of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I transmitted these charges to the Attorney General by letter dated February 13, instructing him to investigate the matter, confer fully with Commissioner Meyer, and have his agents make as full report upon the subject as might be necessary, and, should the charges be established sufficiently to justify proceeding on them, bring the matter before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives.

The Attorney General has made a careful investigation of the charges, and as a result of that investigation has advised me that, in his opinion, the papers should be transmitted to the Committee on the Judiciary; but in my opinion—and I think it will prove in the opinion of the committee—it is not compatible with the public interests to lay all these papers before the House of Representatives until the Committee on the Judiciary shall have sifted them out and determined the extent to which t

THE WHITE HOUSE, May 3, 1912.

Upon receipt of this message from the President the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives gave consideration to the matter referred to in the President's message of the alleged improper conduct of Judge Robert W. Archbald. Following the action of the committee the House of Representatives itself adopted articles of impeachment in this cause, which articles have been heretofore submitted to the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

WILLIAM H. TAFT.

By the President:

GEORGE W. WICKERSHAM,

Attorney General.

Mr. President, under the authority of the House of Representatives and upon the suggestion of my associate managers on the part of the House the duty has devolved upon me to open this case and to make a statement of the facts upon which the House of Representatives, acting as a grand inquest inquiring in the name of all the people of the United States, have impeached Robert W. Archbald, additional circuit judge of the United States from the third judicial circuit, appointed pursuant to the act of June 18, 1910 (U. S. Stats. L., vol. 36, p. 540), and having duly qualified and having been duly commissioned and designated on the 31st day of January, 1911, to serve four years in the Commerce Court, of high crimes and misdely gross tons, of which approximately 46,704 tons are marketable meanors, and the facts upon which the managers propose to make good the articles of impeachment.

It would be a waste of time of this honorable court to pronounce any panegyric upon the great tribunal which now sits as a High Court of Impeachment. It is unnecessary to dwell upon the magnitude of the questions here involved or of the grave consequences of the failure to do justice either to the people or to the respondent. The fact that the members of this court are commissioned to sit in this Chamber where renowned men have always sat is sufficient guaranty that selected men, some of them learned lawyers and all wise statesmen, will do impartial justice according to the Constitution and the law, as their solemn oath requires. And the people of this great Republic and the House of Representatives of the United States have confidence that if this respondent is guilty he will be deprived of the office which he now holds, or if innocent of the misbehaviors charged against him he will be acquitted.

The articles are 13 in number, and the facts upon which they are predicated are substantially as follows:

THE NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE HILLSIDE COAL & IRON CO. RELATIVE TO THE KATYDID CULM DUMP AT MOOSIC, PA.

(See Art. 1.)

On or about March 31, 1911, Judge Archbald entered into a partnership agreement with one Edward J. Williams, of Scranton, Pa., for the purchase of a certain culm dump known as the Katydid culm dump, located near Moosic, Lackawanna County, Pa., for the purpose of disposing of the said property at a pecuniary profit to themselves.

Mr. President, I may say here that a culm dump is a pile composed partly of refuse and partly of coal, which, in the days gone by, was not deemed merchantable. This pile is accumulated in this way: During the process of mining anthracite coal there is some slate; there may be some rock; there may be some dirt; there may be other unmerchantable things brought from the mine. This refuse, together with the finer particles of coal and coal dust, is thrown into a dump, and this is what is called a culm dump.

Most of the coal contained in this culm dump was taken from land known as the Caldwell lot, which is owned in fee simple by the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. The larger portion of the dump now rests on land known as lot 46, which is jointly owned by the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., the Everhart estate, and others. The entire capital stock of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. is owned by the Erie Railroad Co., and a number of the managing officers and directors of the coal company are also officers of the railroad company. The Katydid dump was formed from the operation of the Katydid colliery by the firm of Robertson & Law, and later by John M. Robertson, who succeeded the firm, which operated the colliery under a verbal agreement to pay the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. certain royalties on all coal mined. It appears that the Everhart estate received certain royalties from the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. for all coal above the size of pea taken from the tract in which the Everhart estate held a one-half undivided interest. The plant was operated from 1887 to 1909, when the breaker and washery were destroyed by fire, and since then the operation has been abandoned by Robertson.

In furtherance of his agreement with Williams, Judge Archbald used his official position as judge of the Commerce Court. on March 31, 1911, and at various other times, by correspondence, personal conferences, and otherwise, to improperly induce and influence the officers of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. and the Erie Railroad Co. to enter into an agreement with himself and Williams to sell the interest of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. in the Katydid culm dump for a consideration of $4,500; this agreement was against the policy and practice of the Erie Railroad Co. and its subsidiary, the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., their policy being not to sell their culm dumps. Judge Archbald's name did not appear in this written agreement.

Judge Archbald and Williams then secured an option to purchase whatever equity Robertson held in this property for a consideration of $3,500, and entered into negotiations with several parties with a view to the sale of the culm dump at a large profit. One of these parties was the manager of an electric railroad, who was then purchasing large quantities of coal consumed in the operation of the road from the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. at the usual market rates. It was claimed that there were certain complications in the title to this property, but however this may be Judge Archbald considered that the options from the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. and Robertson covered the entire interest in the dump, and so stated in a coal. This coal is appraised by the engineer at $47,533.18, subject to an increase of $3,803.40, provided that an increment of small coal can be saved in the process of reclamation. It is further estimated that the operation of this culm dump by the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. would net it approximately $35,000 profit and that the Erie Railroad Co. in addition would realize a profit for the transportation of the coal to tidewater.

During the period covering these negotiations with the officers of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. and the Erie Railroad Co. Judge Archbald was a United States circuit judge, duly assigned to serve in the Commerce Court, and the Eric Railroad Co., a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce, was a party litigant in certain suits then pending in the Commerce Court and known as the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. et al. r. The Interstate Commerce Commission, No. 38, and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. et al. v. The Interstate Commerce Commission, No. 39.

THE AFTEMPT TO SELL THE STOCK OF THE MARIAN COAL CO. TO THE DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA & WESTERN BAILROAD CO.

On October 18, 1910, the Marian Coal Co., which operated a washery at Taylor, Pa., filed a complaint against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. and several other railroads before the Interstate Commerce Commission, containing a demand for reparation for damages alleged to have been suffered by the complainant in the amount of $55,238.27, with interest, for overcharges and discrimination in freight rates, and concluding with a prayer that the Interstate Commerce Commission issue an order requiring the defendants to cease various acts alleged to have been committed for the purpose of suppressing the competition of the complainant in the coal market, and establishing just and reasonable rates upon commodities shipped by the complainant from its washery at Taylor, Pa., to all points within the jurisdiction of the commission.

Some time in July or August, 1911, William P. Boland and Christopher G. Boland, who were the controlling stockholders of the Marian Coal Co., employed one George M. Watson, of Scranton, Pa., as an attorney to effect a sale of two-thirds of the stock of the Marian Coal Co. to the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. and to settle this case which was still pending before the Commerce Commission. The decision of the Interstate Commerce Commission in this case was subject to review by the Commerce Court, and there was at that time pending in the Commerce Court a suit entitled "The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. et al. v. The Interstate Commerce Commission, No. 38," to which the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. was a party litigant.

With full knowledge of these facts Judge Archbald entered into an agreement to assist George M. Watson, for a valuable consideration, to sell the stock of the Marian Coal Co. held by the Bolands to the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. and settle the case between the said coal company and the rail-road company. In pursuance of this agreement Judge Arch-bald, by means of correspondence, personal conferences, and otherwise, persistently attempted to induce the officers of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. to enter into an agreement with Watson to settle the case then pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission and purchase the stock of the Marian Coal Co. at a highly exorbitant price.

In all of his correspondence with the officers of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. relative to this matter Judge Archbald used the official stationery of the United States Commerce Court, and he also used his influence as a judge of that court to bring about, or in an attempt to bring about, the successful consummation of these negotiations.

THE NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE LEHIGH VALLEY COAL CO. AND THE GIRARD ESTATE RELATIVE TO A CULM DUMP KNOWN AS PACKER NO. 3, NEAR SHENANDOAH, PA.

(See Art. 3.)

The Lehigh Valley Coal Co., which is owned by the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., holds a lease on certain coal land near Shenandoah, Pa., and owned by the Girard estate. This lease was made to run for a period of 15 years, of which about 13 years have elapsed.

On August 11, 1911, and at numerous other times thereafter, Judge Archbald, by means of correspondence and personal interviews persistently sought to induce, and did induce, that company to agree to waive its rights under the lease from the Girard estate and to permit a company in which Judge Archbald was interested, known as the Jones Coal Co., to operate a cer-tain culm dump, known as Packer No. 3, containing approxi-mately 472,670 gross tons and located on the land leased from the Girard estate, provided that a very small royalty should be paid the coal company for coal reclaimed from the dump, and provided further, that the coal should be shipped over the lines of the Lehigh Valley Railroad. Judge Archbald thereafter applied to the Girard estate for an operating lease on the culm dump known as Packer No. 3, stating that he had secured the consent of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. to operate the property if the Girard estate would approve of the arrangement. The judge proposed to pay the Girard estate the same royalties on various sizes of coal which were being paid by the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. under its lease, which was executed about 13 years theretofore, when coal values were materially less than they were at the time Judge Archbald's proposition was made. The trustees of the Girard estate promptly declined to grant Judge Archbald the lease on the terms proposed, and the deal has never been consummated.

While these negotiations with the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. were in progress the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. was a party litigant in two suits pending before the United States Commerce Court, known as The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co., et al., v. The Interstate Commerce Commission, No. 38, and The Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. v. The Interstate Commerce Commission, Henry E. Meeker, intervener, No. 49.

THE LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD CASE. (See Art. 4.)

In February, 1911, upon the organization of the Commerce Court, a suit known as The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. The Interstate Commerce Commission, which had theretofore been filed in the United States Circuit Court at Louisville, Ky., was transferred to the United States Commerce Court (Docket No. 4). The case was argued on the 2d and 3d of April, 1911, and submitted to the court for adjudication. On August 22, 1911, Judge Archbald, who afterwards delivered the majority opinion in this case, wrote to Helm Bruce, the attorney for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., at Louisville, Ky., requesting him to confer with one Compton, traffic manager of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, who had given material testimony before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and to advise the judge whether the witness intended to give an affirmative answer, as appeared from the record, or whether he intended to give a negative answer to a question propounded to him by the chairman of the commission. In pursuance of this request, Bruce conferred with Compton and advised the judge that the witness intended to give a negative answer to the question referred to. The receipt of this letter was acknowledged by Judge Archbald on August 26, 1911. On January 10, 1912, Judge Archbald again wrote to Bruce, calling attention to certain conclusions reached by another member of the court, which, it was claimed, refuted statements and contentions advanced in Bruce's original brief and sustained the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to certain features of the case. In this letter Judge Archbald asked Bruce whether he would still affirm the position taken in his brief, and, if so, upon what theory it could be sustained, assuming that the conclusions of the other members of the court were correct. The judge followed this question with a number of other questions relative to the features of the case which were not then clear to the court. On January 24, 1912, Bruce sent the judge a letter in answer to the questions which had been propounded to him, wherein he argued these special features of the case in behalf of the railroad company at considerable length. His letter was in the nature of a supplemental brief submitted for the purpose of overcoming certain doubts as to the merits of the case of the railroad company which apparently had arisen in the minds of some of the members of the court.

On February 28, 1912, this case was decided by the Commerce Court in favor of the railroad company. Judge Archbald wrote the opinion of the majority, which followed the views ex-pressed by Bruce, and Judge Mack dissented. The attorneys for the Interstate Commerce Commission and the United States were given no opportunity to examine and answer the arguments advanced by the attorney for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. in his communication to Judge Archbald of January 24, 1912, nor were they informed that such correspondence had been had.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE PHILADELPHIA & READING COAL & IRON CO.
RELATIVE TO THE LINCOLN CULM DUMP, NEAR LORBERRY, PA., AND THE WRONGFUL ACCEPTANCE OF A GIFT, REWARD, OR PRESENT FROM FREDEMICK WARNER, OF SCRANTON, PA.

(See Art. 5.)

In 1904 Frederick Warnke, of Scranton, Pa., purchased a twothirds interest in an operating lease on some coal land located near Lorberry Junction, Pa., and owned by the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. The entire capital stock of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. is owned by the Reading Co., which owns the entire capital stock of the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Co., a common carrier engaged in interstate commerce. He put up a number of improvements and operated the culm dump on the property for several years, but owing to the action of the elements his operations were carried on at a loss. Warnke then applied to the Reading Co. for mining maps of the land covered by his lease. He was informed that the lease under which he claimed had been forfeited two years before its assignment to him, and his application was therefore denied. He then made a proposition to George F. Baer, president of the Philadelphia & Reading Railway Co., and president of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., to relinquish any claim that he might have in this property under his lease, provided that the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co. would grant him an operating lease on another property owned by said corporation at Lorberry, Pa., and known as the Lincoln culm bank.

Mr. Baer referred Warnke's proposition to Mr. W. J. Richards, vice president and general manager of the Philadelphia & Reading Coal & Iron Co., for consideration and action. Richards and Baer thereafter concluded that there was no valid reason why they should make an exception to the general rule of the coal company not to lease its culm bank. Warnke then made several attempts, through attorneys and friends, to have this decision reconsidered, and falling in this, he asked Judge Archbald to intercede in his behalf with Richards.

In the latter part of November, 1911, Judge Archbald called upon Mr. Richards at his office in Pottsville, Pa., and in pursuance of an appointment made by Judge Archbald's solicitation, attempted to influence Richards to reconsider his refusal to accede to Warnke's proposition. Judge Archbald was informed, however, that the decision of Richards and Baer must be considered final, and the judge so advised Warnke.

be considered final, and the judge so advised Warnke.

In December, 1911, Warnke was considering the advisability of purchasing a certain culm fill located near Pittston, Pa., and owned by the Lacoe & Shiffer Coal Co. One John Henry Jones, of Scranton, Pa., advised him that Judge Archbald was familiar with the title to the property and the rights of way of certain railroads over it. In pursuance of this assurance from Jones, Warnke consulted the judge, who advised him that the title was clear. Warnke had but two conversations with Judge Archbald regarding this matter, not exceeding 30 minutes in length altogether, but he at that time stated to Judge Archbald that he would pay the judge $500 for the information which he had received. Shortly thereafter Warnke and several business associates purchased this property for a consideration of $7,500, and in the month of March, 1911, a day or so after Judge Archbald had called at the office of Warnke and his associates, Warnke drew a promissory note of $500, as president of the coal company which had purchased the fill, and caused the same to be delivered to Judge Archbald. The note was discounted in one of the banks of Scranton.

THE NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE LEHIGH VALLEY COAL CO. RELATIVE TO THE EVERHART TRACT AND THE MORRIS AND ESSEX TRACT, (See Art. 6.)

Since 1884 the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., which is a subsidiary of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., has owned one-half interest in a certain tract of coal land located near Wilkes-Barre, Pa., which consists of about 800 acres. During the past few years this company has purchased about four-fifths of the remaining one-half interest in this tract. The remaining portion of the tract is leased by the coal company from certain beneficiaries of the Everhart estate. The coal company has been negotiating for several years to purchase the fee to this outstanding portion of the tract, but the owners would not accept the terms offered.

In December, 1911, or January, 1912, Judge Archbald entered into an agreement with one James R. Dainty, of Scranton, Pa., to open negotiations with the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. and the Everhart estate for the purpose of effecting the sale of this property to the coal company on the understanding that he and Dainty should secure an operating lease on another tract of about 325 acres of coal land owned by the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. and known as the Morris and Essex tract, as a consideration in the nature of a commission for their services.

In furtherance of this agreement Judge Archbald attempted to use his official influence as a member of the Commerce Court, through telephone conversations and personal conferences, to affect the action of the general manager of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. with respect to the purchase of this property. While these negotiations were in progress the cases of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. v. The Interstate Commerce Commission and Henry E. Meeker, intervener, No. 49, and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Co. et al. v. The Interstate Commerce Commission, No. 38, in which the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. was a party litigant, were pending before the Commerce Court for adjudication.

THE DISCOUNT OF THE W. W. BISSINGER NOTE. (See Art. 7.)

In the fall of 1908 the case of The Old Plymouth Coal Co. v. The Equitable Fire & Marine Insurance Co. et al. was pending before the United States district court over which Judge Archbefore the United States district court over which badge bald presided. Mr. W. W. Rissinger, of Scranton, Pa., was the controlling stockholder of the plaintiff company. The case was predicated on certain insurance contracts between the Old Plymouth Coal Co. and the various insurance companies named as parties defendant, and the total damages sought to be recovered amounted to about $30,000. The case was on trial in November, 1908, and after the plaintiff's evidence had been presented the defendant insurance companies demurred to the sufficiency of the evidence and moved for a nonsuit. After extended argument by attorneys for both plaintiff and defendant, Judge Archbald overruled the motion, and the defendant companies proceeded to introduce their evidence. Before the evidence was all in the attorneys for the insurance companies made a proposition of compromise to the attorneys for the Old Plymouth Coal Co., which was accepted on November 23, 1908. sent judgments were entered on that day, in which the plaintiff ultimately recovered about $28,000, and the defendant companies were given 15 days in which to satisfy the judgments.

Some time prior to November 28, 1908, Judge Archbald entered into a deal with Rissinger for the purchase of an interest in a gold-mining project in Honduras, which Rissinger was then promoting in Scranton. In order to finance the transaction it became necessary to raise $2,500, and on November 28, 1908, or five days after the judgments in favor of the Old Plymouth Coal Co. were entered, a promissory note for that amount, to run three months, signed by Rissinger, in favor of and indorsed by Judge Archbald and Sophia J. Hutchison, Mr. Rissinger's mother-in-law, was presented to the County Savings Bank of Scranton, Pa., for discount. The bank evidently put no reliance upon Judge Archbald's indorsement of the note, but made an extended investigation of Mrs. Hutchison's financial condition, and on December 12, 1908, discounted the note, after having first filed a judgment against Mrs. Hutchison in the county court of Lackawanna County, Pa., according to the practice in that State.

Shortly after the consent judgments in favor of the Old Plymouth Coal Co. were entered on November 23, 1908, this note was also presented for discount to Mr. John T. Lenahan, one of the attorneys for Rissinger and the Old Plymouth Coal Co. in the litigation with the insurance companies, but Lenahan refused to discount the note or have the same discounted in a trust company of which he was a director. The note has never been paid, but has been renewed at the end of each successive period of three months by Mr. Rissinger, and the discount on the renewals has been paid wholly by him.

THE DISCOUNT OF THE JOHN HENRY JONES NOTE. (See Arts. 8 and 9.)

In the fall of the year 1909 the case of John W. Peale v. The Marian Coal Co., which involved a considerable sum of money, was pending before the United States district court of Scranton, Pa., over which Judge Archbald presided. The Marian Coal Co. was practically owned and controlled by Christopher G. Boland and William P. Boland, of Scranton, Pa., and this fact was well known to Judge Archbald. In the latter part of November or the early part of December, 1909, for the purpose of raising funds to invest in a timber project in Venezuela which was being promoted by one John Henry Jones, of Scranton, Pa., Judge Archbald drew and indorsed a promisory note for $500, payable to himself, which note was signed by Jones as promisor.

Judge Archbald thereupon agreed and consented that Edward J. Williams should present this note to Christopher G. Boland and William P. Boland, or either of them, for discount. In pursuance of this agreement or approval of Judge Archbald, Williams did present the note to each of the Bolands for the purpose of having the same discounted, but they refused to grant the discount on the ground that it would be highly improper for them to do so under the existing circumstances. Williams reported the refusal of the Bolands to discount the note to Judge Archbald, and thereafter took it to the Merchants & Mechanics' Bank of Scranton, but this bank also refused to discount the paper.

The note was finally discounted on application of John Henry Jones by the Providence Bank, a small State bank located in a suburb of Scranton. The president of this bank was one C. H. Von Storch, of Scranton, Pa., an attorney at law who had prevailed as a party in interest in litigation before Judge Archbald's court within a year prior to the date of the discount of

The note was brought to Von Storch by Jones at the suggestion of Judge Archbald. Moreover, Judge Archbald advised Von Storch that he would consider it a great favor if the discount should be granted. The note has never been paid, although the bank has made at least one call for payment, and the discount on each renewal has been wholly paid by John Henry

Judge Archbald's financial condition at the time the incident occurred was such that his note was not considered good bankable paper, and we are forced to the conclusion that he attempted to use his influence as judge to secure the loan from parties litigant before his court, and, failing this, he did use his influence as such judge to secure the loan through an attorney who was then practicing before his court and who had but short while before received favorable judgment in a suit adjudicated therein.

THE WRONGFUL ACCEPTANCE OF MONEY ON THE OCCASION OF A PLEASURE TRIP TO EUROPE

(See Arts. 10 and 11.)

In the spring of 1910 Judge Archbald allowed one Henry W. Cannon, of New York City, to pay his entire expenses on a pleasure trip to Europe. Mr. Cannon was then, and still is, a stockholder and an officer in various interstate railroad corporations, including the Great Northern; the Lake Erie & Western Railroad Co.; the Fort Wayne, Cincinnati & Louisville Railroad Co.; the Pacific Coast Co., which owns the entire stock of the Columbia & Puget Sound Railroad Co.; the Pacific Coast Railroad Co.; and the Pacific Coast Steamship Co., together with various other corporations engaged in the business of mining and shipping coal.

On the occasion of this same pleasure trip to Europe one Edward R. W. Searle, clerk of the United States district court of Scranton, Pa., and one J. B. Woodward, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., jury commissioner of said court, both of whom were appointed by Judge Archbald, raised a subscription fund of money amounting to more than $500, which was presented to Judge Archbald on his departure. This fund was not raised as the result of a bar-association movement, but was composed of contributions of various amounts from certain attorneys practicing before the United States district court, some of whom had cases then pending before said court for adjudication.

Judge Archbald accepted this fund of money and acknowledged receipt of the same to the contributors, whose names were submitted to him at the time that the fund was presented.

THE APPOINTMENT OF A BAILROAD ATTORNEY AS JURY COMMISSIONER. (See Art. 12.)

On March 29, 1901, Judge Archbald was appointed United States district judge for the middle district of Pennsylvania. On April 9, 1901, under the exercise of authority granted by the act of June 30, 1879 (21 Stat., 43), Judge Archbald appointed one J. B. Woodward, of Wilkes-Barre, Pa., as jury commissioner of the said district court. The said Woodward was then and has since been a general attorney for the Lehigh Valley Rail-

Under the annual appropriation acts the compensation of jury commissioners is limited to $5 per day, for not more than three days at any one term of court. The compensation attached to this position is so insignificant that the appointment would have no attraction for a railroad attorney, except for the power it affords in the selection of juries for the trial of cases in the Federal courts.

> GENERAL MISBEHAVIOR OF JUDGE ARCHBALD. (See Art. 13.)

The testimony in the whole case will tend to support the charge of general misbehavior on the part of Judge Archbald. Judge Archbald was appointed a United States district judge for the middle district of Pennsylvania on the 29th day of March, 1901, and held such office until January 31, 1911, on which last-named date he was appointed an additional United States circuit judge, and on the same day he was duly designated as one of the judges of the United States Commerce Court, which position he has since and now holds.

At different times while Judge Archbald was a judge of the United States district court he sought and obtained credit and in other instances sought to obtain credit from persons who had litigation pending in his said court or who had had litigation pending in his said court.

The testimony will show that after Judge Archbald had been promoted to the position of United States circuit judge and had been duly designated as one of the judges of the United States Commerce Court he, in connection with different persons, sought to obtain options on culm dumps and other coal properties from officers and agents of coal companies which were owned and controlled by railroad companies.

The testimony will further show that in order to influence the officers of the coal companies, which were subsidiary to and owned by the railroad companies engaged in interstate commerce, Judge Archbald repeatedly sought to influence the officials of the railroads to enter into contracts with his associates for the financial benefit of himself and his said associates. In most instances the contracts were executed in the name of the person associated with the judge in the particular transaction or trade, and the judge's name was not disclosed on the face of the contract. The testimony will show, however, that he was, as a matter of fact, pecuniarily interested in such contracts, and that while his interest was not known to the public it was known to the officials of the railroad companies, and of the coal companies subsidiary corporations thereof. The evidence will disclose that while the judge's several associates or partners would locate properties the judge would take up the matter of the purchase or sale of said properties with the officials of the coal companies and of the railroad companies which, as already stated, in most instances owned or controlled the coal companies. The testimony will show that while these negotiations were being conducted and agreements were made and sought to be made the railroad companies with whose officers Judge Archbald was making contracts and agreements and seeking to make contracts and agreements were common carriers engaged in interstate commmerce and had litigation pending in the United States Commerce Court.

Such options, contracts, and agreements were sought and obtained and sought to be obtained by Judge Archbald to such an extent that the exposure of the judge's several transactions through the press gave rise to a public scandal.

The testimony will show that Judge Archbald invested no money of his own in any of these several trades or deals, but used his influence as a judge, in consideration of which he received or was to receive his share or interest in the property or his profits in the deal.

Mr. President, the managers on the part of the House believe. that this statement meets the requirement of the Senate and the practice in such cases as the one now pending. It is expected that, of course, during the trial the testimony will show the facts in greater detail than has been attempted to be shown in this preliminary statement.

The managers respectfully call attention to a few of the indisputable features of this case.

After Judge Archbald became judge he was evidently seized with an abnormal and unjudgelike desire to make money by trading directly and through others with railroads and their subsidiary corporations, which concerns had, or were likely to have, litigation in his court or to become directly or indirectly interested in cases coming before it for adjudication.

He abused his potentiality as judge to further these trades and place himself, or showed a willingness to place himself, under obligations to these corporate concerns.

In practically all of his correspondence had with these corporations and their subsidiaries he used the official stationery that is, the letter heads of the United States Commerce Court thereby constantly keeping before the minds of these officials that he was a member of the tribunal invested with the power of passing upon the rights of common carriers engaged in interstate commerce in their dealings with the shippers of the country and the general public. He had personal interviews and communications otherwise with these railroad officials at Scranton, in New York, and elsewhere, in which he sought to secure or to promote these trades in order to make money for himself out of the property or interest of these corporate con-cerns that had litigation in his court or were likely to have such litigation before him.

As indicated in the statement, a number of other misbehaviors on the part of Judge Archbald will be established by the evidence to be adduced during the trial of this case.

In concluding this statement, Mr. President, the managers respectfully invite the attention of the Senate-this honorable court-to the condition upon which judges are allowed to hold office, and that is, judges, in the language of the Constitution, The framers "shall hold their offices during good behavior." of that instrument were desirous of having an independent and incorruptible judiciary, but they never intended to provide that any judge should hold his office upon nonforfeitable life tenure. It was their intention that there should be a reasonable check and balance on the independence of the judiciary that would enable the people to divest an unworthy judge of his power and exalted position. It was therefore sought in the organic law to provide an adequate remedy to protect the people against the malfeasance, malversation, and misfeasance of unjust and corrupt judges. The tenure of office was wisely limited to during good behavior, and the remedy provided in case of misbehavior was forfeiture of the right to hold office and the removal therefrom by impeachment.

The conduct of this judge has been exceedingly reprehensible and in marked contrast with the high sense of judicial ethics and probity which generally characterize American judges. Let unworthy judges be shorn of power so that an upright and independent judiciary may be maintained for the perpetuation of our Government of laws.

A judge should be the personification of uprightness in his daily walk and conversation. He should hold his exalted office and the administration of justice above the sordid desire to accumulate wealth by trading or trafficking with the actual or probable litigants in his court. He should be free and unaffected by any bias born of avarice and unhampered by pecuniary or other improper obligations.

Judge Archbald's sense of moral responsibility has become deadened. He has prostituted his high office for personal profit, in attempts to make gainful bargains for himself and his business associates. In short, Mr. President, he has attempted by various transactions to commercialize his potentiality as judge, and has not hesitated to use his official power and influence to drive bargains with those who had or had had or would probably have litigation before his court. He has degraded his high office, has destroyed the confidence of the public in his judicial integrity, and has forfeited the condition upon which he holds his commission of trust, responsibility, and power. Therefore, Mr. President, by authority of the House of Representatives and in the name of the American people, the managers on the part of the House of Representatives demand his conviction upon these articles of impeachment and his removal from the office of United States circuit judge designated to sit in the Commerce Court.

Mr. President, that concludes the statement of the managers. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President and Senators, for the first time in an impeachment trial in this tribunal the opening statement for the respondent is to be made at the beginning of the case instead of at the close of the testimony on behalf of the managers. We have desired to do this and are doing it with the acquiescence of the honorable managers for two reasons. One is that the Members of the Senate may know when the introduction of testimony is going on what are the questions of fact in dispute. The other is that Senators may know from the beginning what we rely upon as the law of the case.

I had supposed that the Senate would be informed as to what the managers claim are the principles of law under which they ask the Senate to convict this respondent of the offenses which are supposed to be set forth in these 13 articles of impeachment. I waited until the closing words of the honorable gentleman who has just taken his seat to get his views of the law of the case. If I understand what he has said in behalf of himself and his brother managers, they claim that the respondent should be impeached because he has violated that clause of the Constitution which says that judges of the Federal courts shall hold their offices during good behavior. I had supposed until this minute that nobody would come here speaking for the House of Representatives and ask the conviction of a judge of a Federal court, or of any civil officer of the United States, except under that other clause of the Constitution of the United States which says that the President, the Vice President, or the other civil officers of the Government may be impeached for treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors. That is the only provision authorizing this proceeding. The learned gentleman has seen fit to ignore it, I must assume, on the ground that if he does rely on that he will find that he can not expect a conviction.

Now, inasmuch as he has not gone into this subject at all, I shall state very briefly what are the contentions on our part.

In the first place, we contend that no officer of the Government may be properly convicted in this tribunal in an impeachment proceeding unless he has committed an offense which is punishable in a criminal court.

Passing by for the present the authorities and the arguments by which we had expected to outline that position at this time, we further say that if that be not so, then the offense must be one, to paraphrase the language which Mr. Buchanan used in the Peck impeachment trial—Mr. Buchanan who was afterwards President of the United States—the offense must be one which consists in the violation of a known law and one which, if not punishable criminally, at least might properly be made punishable criminally.

It was claimed on behalf of the minority of the Judiciary Committee, in the first attempt to impeach Andrew Johnson, what I have stated, that the offense must be an indictable one; and that minority opinion was sustained by the House of Representatives in that case by a vote of about 2 to 1, overruling the report of the majority of the committee that indictability was not essential to impeachability, if I may use that expression.

I will refer to just one thing that I have on my notes on this subject, because, to my mind, the attention of the Senate has never been called to the precise question before when this matter was under argument.

In the case of the United States against Hudson and Goodwin, which is reported in 7 Cranch, the doctrine was laid down that the Federal courts did not have jurisdiction in criminal cases unless there was a statute of the United States which conferred that jurisdiction—in other words, as it is frequently but erroneously, I think, stated, the Federal courts have no common-law criminal jurisdiction. This is the language which was used in the opinion of the court in that case, referring to the course of reasoning which is relied upon against that proposition:

The powers of the General Government are made up of concessions from the several States; whatever is not expressly given to the former, the latter expressly reserve. The judicial power of the United States is a constituent part of those concessions; that power is to be exercised by courts organized for the purpose and brought into existence by an effort of the legislative power of the Union. Of all the courts which the United States may under their general powers constitute, one only, the Supreme Court, possesses jurisdiction derived immediately from the Constitution and of which the legislative power can not deprive it. All other courts created by the General Government possess no jurisdiction but what is given them by the power that creates them, and can be vested with none but what the power ceded to the General Government will authorize them to confer.

I maintain that under that principle this court, like the Supreme Court of the United States, is a court which is created by the Constitution and which gets its powers from the Constitution, and needs no aid from the laws of Congress to give it power to impeach for crimes and misdemeanors.

So we maintain that what was a crime at the common law may be made impeachable here, and that any laws which Congress has passed since that time if violated by any civil officer of the Government, judge or President, or anyone else, may be the subject of impeachment, and that there can be no other impeachable offenses.

I come now to deal with the facts in this particular case—in these particular cases, for there are 13 of them—and we are trying Judge Archbald here for 13 offenses, or alleged offenses, instead of 1. All these cases had their origin in that region of Pennsylvania that lies in the neighborhood of Scranton. We find in that region that practically the only business that people engage in there in a large way relates in one way or another to the anthracite coal, which is found in that vicinity, and if men do undertake to go into business at all it is about the only business in which they can go into except in a small way.

You will find that it is the custom in that country—and nothing exceptional has been done in the matters with which Judge Archbald was connected—it is the custom to-day, as it will come out here in the taking of evidence, that men get what they call an option on coal property without paying anything for it, and that instead of being an option it amounts practically to the creation of an agency, so that the agent has a right to sell property to whoever he pleases, and he makes whatever he can get over and above the amount he is to pay to the person who creates the agency.

Now, a word or two about the parties. Judge Archbald is now 64 years old. He has lived in Scranton ever since he was a boy of 9 years. In 1884 the people of the district where he resides elected him to the office of State judge, the tenure of the office being for 10 years, and for the last 7 years of that time he was the presiding judge, the court being composed of three judges.

In 1904, at the expiration of his term, his people reelected him to that office, and he held the position of presiding judge of that court from 1894 until the early part of 1901, when he was appointed United States district judge. The middle district of Pennsylvania was created at that time, and he was appointed the first district judge to preside in that district. He held that office, still sitting at Scranton, as he had done all the years before, until in the latter part of January, 1911, he was promoted to the position of circuit judge and assigned to duty on the Commerce Court, which position he holds to this time. So that you will see that the man who is brought here and accused of these offenses is one who held the position of judge in the city of Scranton for about 27 years—until he was appointed judge of the Commerce Court. I take it, as in every case where a man is accused of doing that which is wrong and the inquiry comes into a court of any kind, especially where the question is what was his intent in doing the things that he has done—and that is the whole matter here—his character and standing in the community where he has lived are of the highest possible value as evidence. I make bold to say that nowhere in the United States can evidence be produced as to the integrity, the honesty, the industry, and the ability of any Federal judge which will put him on a higher plane than Judge Archbald will be put here by men of standing and influence in the region from which he comes, and who, if we would allow them and you would permit it, would swarm into this Chamber to testify as to their belief in him and their knowledge that he is a man who is above the corruption and wrongdoing with which he is charged here—by inference. I use the expression "by inference" because you do not find in a single one of these articles of impeachment, and you will find in nothing that has been said here to-day, any evidence or any proof that will show that in what the respondent did he acted corruptly. The articles of impeachment, so far as that is concerned, use adverbs and not facts, and we are here practically fighting adverbs and not evidence.

There are three other persons who live in Scranton whose names figure in so many of these articles that before going on with the facts in the particular cases I desire incidentally to mention them, so that the Members of the Senate will hereafter recognize who they are. There are three brothers there-William P. Boland, Christopher G. Boland, and James M. Boland. As to the latter, he plays no part in this case so far as I know. William P. Boland and Christopher G. Boland are men of standing there, and Christopher G. Boland and Judge Archbald have been neighbors and friends for a great many years. In a town of that size they see each other practically every day and often a great many times every day.

There is another gentleman, Edward J. Williams, whose testimony and doings will figure very largely in several of these transactions. He is a man who, perhaps, I can best describe by saying, as I believe has been brought out by the managers elsewhere, that he is called "Option" Williams; that he is a man who is not engaged in any regular pursuit, but has endeavored to make a living in the past by finding coal properties, getting options on them, and making what he can in that way. Mr. Edward J. Williams, during the time with which we are concerned, made the office of the Bolands his office, and was there, as he says and as the proof will show, practically every

Now, as to the first article of impeachment: My friend, Mr. Manager Clayton, has told you what a dump is. Then he has told you something about what the proof will show as to the value of a certain dump, and especially he has told of some investigations and calculations made by a Mr. Rittenhouse.

I should like to have it understood that all that was done after Judge Archbald's connection with this dump terminated. The question here, of course, is not what some expert in making calculations as to what was in the dump, the proportion of available coal as against the proportion of waste, and making investigations as to freight rates on the Erie road, might find it was worth, but what would be known to the ordinary man who was in the position that Judge Archbald was when he had any connection with it. You will then find that, as a matter of fact, what the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., through Capt. May, asked for its interest in this dump was very much more than it was worth, and that, as a matter of fact, the same Hillside Coal & Iron Co., through the same Capt. May, had tried to sell its interest in this same dump a short time before for $2,000 to the Du Pont Powder Co., but when that trade was about to be completed, the powder company concluded that it would get its power elsewhere and not furnish it itself, so that the sale fell

The trouble with that Katydid dump is that nobody knows who owns it. I am not going to weary you with any of the details of the intricacies and complications involving the title that will sufficiently come out in the evidence-but you will find that not only does the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. not own it, but the question is whether it has any interest in it, and if it has, certainly it will appear that that interest is very small. While it is true that, as a general rule, the Erie Railroad Co., which owned the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., and the other companies which own coal property up there do not sell it, but hold it to utilize the property for themselves, they do frequently make exceptions; and in this case an exception had been made or tried to be made of the Katydid dump before Judge Archbald had anything to do with it. The reason of it was because the Hillside Co. had no title, and there were other reasons that no doubt the witnesses who will come here will tell about,

I want at this point to stop one moment to make a complaint on the part of Judge Archbald. In the thirteenth article of impeachment, after detailing in other articles particular offenses charged against Judge Archbald so that he might know as to most of them exactly what was meant, and as to one or two of them which are very general, he could guess, it is charged that in various ways he sought to use his influence as a judge to get suitors before his court to give him credit, and that in various ways and with various railroads which had cases pending in his court, or might have cases pending in his court, he sought to get them to make bargains with him; but neither in the thirteenth article nor in anything that has been said here to-day have we one word of intimation as to who it was from whom those credits were sought or with what railroad companies the respondent had these dealings, or where or how or when, and we are asked here now to enter upon this trial, if the Senate shall sustain the managers in their contention, on charges the meaning of which nobody under heaven knows, except the managers, and I doubt whether they know what they mean by that thirteenth article. If they undertake under that general imputation in the thirteenth article to bring in any new alleged offenses against Judge Archbald, we shall then ask the Senate to pass upon the question whether it is competent to bring a high officer of the Government to trial in this way so that he will not know what he is to meet.

I mention that at this point, because as to the Katydid dump it is all important to know that Judge Archbald did not of his own motion make up his mind that he would go into it and see if he could make money. Mr. William P. Boland, for reasons which will appear hereafter, sent Edward J. Williams to Judge Archbald, saying, "Go to Judge Archbald and get him to give you a letter to Capt. May asking that you be given an option on the Katydid dump." In pursuance of that request from Mr. Williams, Judge Archbald, who had had no thought or intention of having anything to do with the Katydid dump, gave Mr. Williams a letter to Capt. May, and that was the way that negotiation began.

There is some doubt in the evidence as to just what Capt. May said to Mr. Williams when he went there with the letter which simply asked whether he would sell that dump, and, if so, at what figure. I will not enter upon it now, but the option was not given promptly. Not long afterwards Mr. William P. Boland said to Mr. Williams, "Go to Judge Archbald again and get him to go to the New York office of the Eric Railroad Co." In pursuance of that suggestion, Judge Archbald did go to see Brownell, who was the general counsel of the Eric Railroad Co., to inquire, as Judge Archbald recollects, whether the question of the title to the dump had yet been settled or how he could learn something about it. The paper which Capt. May gave I will not attempt to describe; it is simply a statement by Capt. May saying that he will recommend the sale of the interest of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. in the Katydid dump for $4,500, and that an agreement must be fully drawn up and submitted to the proper authorities of the company before any sale can be made.

You will perceive that in order to implicate Judge Archbald it was necessary not only that he should have dealings with the railroad company in reference to the proposed purchase of this dump, but to find a purchaser. William P. Borland, behind the scenes, therefore went to Mr. Conn, who was the general manager of the little road that runs between Wilkes-Barre and Scranton, called the Laurel line, and urged him to buy it. Then when he finds Conn is in a humor to buy it, once more he says to Williams, "Go to Judge Archbald and get a letter to Mr. Conn, asking him to buy this Katydid property." Mr. Williams goes to Judge Archbald, and Judge Archbald, at Williams's request, utterly ignorant of the fact that Mr. William P. Boland had anything to do with it, writes a letter to Conn. Mr. Williams takes that letter to Mr. William P. Boland instead of to Conn, and delivers it over to William P. Boland. who has it photographed, and then sends it on by the hands of Williams to Mr. Conn. Mr. Conn, after some considerable delay, upon the advice of his attorneys as to the title to the dump, refused to buy it. That was sometime in November,

So much for that. It is necessary, before I go on with this matter, so that Senators may understand the questions that are going to arise here, to refer to certain litigation a little more particularly than Mr. Manager Clayton has done.

There was a corporation called the Marian Coal Co., of which these two Bolands, I believe, did own the most of the stock; and the three Bolands certainly owned two-thirds of it. company was a proprietor of one of these coal dumps. entered into a contract with a man named Peale, by which Peale was given the exclusive right to wash the coal in the dump and market it. He was to pay certain moneys to the Marian Coal Co., and was to have certain rights, the details of which I need not go into.

The Bolands became dissatisfied with Peale and turned him out, claiming that the contract was at an end and that Peale had not properly conducted himself. They took possession.

Peale then brought the suit which figures throughout these proceedings as Peale against the Marian Coal Co. They brought the suit in the court over which Judge Archbald was presiding in the spring of 1909; and here dates become of the utmost importance.

In September, 1909, Judge Archbald was called upon to pass on a demurrer to the complaint filed by the Marian Coal Co. He overruled the demurrer. It was simply a question about whether the suit could be brought there or would have to be brought somewhere else, and Judge Archbald held, under a decision of the Supreme Court and some other decisions, that because the company had filed its demurrer and had not raised the question of jurisdiction in the first instance it was in court and would have to stay, a decision, I believe, which nobody questions the correctness of to this day.

The note which Mr. Manager Clayton referred to as the $500 note, which he said was sent to the Bolands for discount, was made in December following the September in which this demurrer was overruled, but for some reason Mr. William P. Boland months afterwards got into his mind the idea that Judge Archbald had overruled the demurrer because Boland had not discounted the judge's note. That conviction became lodged in his mind and stayed lodged there until a few weeks ago at another place in this building, where he seemed to be very much surprised to find that he had been laboring under such a mistake.

After Judge Archbald was put upon the Commerce Court he was succeeded as district judge for the middle district of Pennsylvania by Judge Witmer, who presides there still. To Judge Witmer, of course, came over the case of Peale against the Marian Coal Co., and Mr. William P. Boland got it into his mind in some way—if it can be determined how, we will be glad to know; we do not yet know—that Judge Witmer, when he decided that case on the merits in August, 1911, against the Marian Coal Co., had been required to enter that decree by Judge Archbald, who had acted under the instigation of a Mr. Loomis, who was an officer of the Lackawanna Railroad Co. I say that that was a figment of his brain, and that there will be and can be no evidence to support it; but that he had it in his mind there can be no doubt.

He also got the idea, by reason of a certain letter that was written by Mr. Seager, of counsel for the Lackawanna Railroad Co., to the Interstate Commerce Commission that Mr. Seager had been informed in advance how this suit of Peale against the Marian Coal Co. was going to be decided, and generally got it into his head that Judge Witmer's court was being run by the railroad company.

Having all these things—every one of which, in fact, is without a particle of foundation—in his mind, Mr. W. P. Boland, on the 5th of January last, came down to the Interstate Commerce Commission and to them narrated these things which had got into his mind—how Judge Archbald had overruled a demurrer because he would not discount his note; how Judge Archbald had, at the direction of Mr. Loomis, gone to Judge Witmer and commanded him to enter up this final decree; how Mr. Senger was in full communication with the court and knew what it was going to do—that he was being ruined by the court, and that he came down to the Interstate Commerce Commission for this reason.

The Marian Coal Co. had brought another suit against the railroad company in the Interstate Commerce Commission, for the purpose of getting some relief against the rates charged for the shipment of its coal, and that suit was pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission. When he gave these unfounded statements to the members of the Interstate Commerce Commission-Judge Archbald knowing no more about what was going on than any of you-they went to the President and stated these delusions to the President. The President then sent them to the Attorney General, and on the day that that rate case before the Interstate Commerce Commission was finally argued on the merits, after the argument was over, a representative of the Interstate Commerce Commission took Boland and took this man Williams, who had been sent here in the meantime, before the Attorney General, and there these misstatements and delusions were again stated to the Attorney General, all without any knowledge on the part of Judge Archbald or any suggestion from anybody that he was entitled to be heard. And as the honorable manager has told you how the President and the Attorney General came to the conclusion that this was a matter which required action by the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, I beg leave to read, from page 133 of the first volume of the proceedings in this case, an extract from the letter of the Attorney General to the President, dated April 29, 1912, in which he sets forth in a general way the charges against Judge Archbald, and then says:

If had been my intention, before advising definite action in these matters, to call upon Judge Archbaid himself for his own explanation of them, but, in view of the newspaper publication of the charges and the House resolution (calling for the papers), I think it would be better to transmit the papers to the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, together with a copy of Wrisley Brown's report and of this letter, to the end that the transaction may be thoroughly investigated by that committee.

So it would appear that, instead of the Attorney General making a careful investigation, as Mr. Manager Clayton has said, and reporting to the President that the matter ought to be sent to the Judiciary Committee of the House, the Judiciary Committee of the House sent for the papers, or had a resolution adopted, which the Attorney General considered made it proper for him to send the papers, and so cut off the doing of what he was about to do—sending for Judge Archbald and giving him a chance to show the true facts in regard to the charges against him.

So the matter went to the House of Representatives, to the Judiciary Committee of the House, with these delusions of Mr. Boland that I have spoken of as the principal charges against Judge Archbald, and you see by the articles of impeachment and what has been said here to-day that it was shown that every one of them was a delusion, and they do not at all figure in the charges that have been preferred. There were some other matters of smaller moment which were before the Attorney General. But most of the charges in these articles, I think, originated with the committee and were not under consideration at all by the Attorney General.

at all by the Attorney General.

After Mr. Boland had been here in January and after he had been here again before the Attorney General on the 12th of February, or some time in February of this year, Mr. Boland went back to Scranton. He, of course, knew that an investiga-tion was going on, and no sale of the Katydid Mine had yet been made, and he immediately stirred up Mr. Williams, telling him that he must go to work and get a sale. He also concocted in his office a letter for Williams to sign, which Williams did sign, addressed to Conn, urging him again to buy. He had that letter prepared and signed by Williams and sent him off again, saying "Hurry, hurry; there is a storm coming." So he went to Conn again and Mr. Conn again refused to buy. Then he found a man who was engaged in the coal business, named Bradley. In Mr. Boland's office a sale to Bradley was hurried through for $20,000 for this Katydid Mine; and Capt. May, on behalf of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., agreed to sell its title to Bradley for $4,500, under the option which had been held so long. He drew a form of contract which he submitted to Bradley and sent a copy to Williams on or about the 10th of April last.

On the day he did that, or the day after—it makes no difference which—he received letters from a number of the people who were called the Everhardt heirs, who claimed an interest in this title, telling him they understood that he was trying to sell that dump and informing him that he would have trouble if he sold it, even if he sold only his own title.

There were other properties in which Capt. May's company was interested as to which the Everhardt heirs might give a great deal of trouble. All this induced Capt. May to recall the contract with Bradley. He met Bradley at the Laurel line station where each of them had gone to take a train, and there told him he wanted Bradley to return the contract, and Bradley did return it.

Mr. President and Senators, when this matter was presented to the House of Representatives by my learned friends who are here, the House was told that Judge Archbald prepared that contract and that he met Bradley at the station, and that he knew that an investigation was coming, and that he recalled the contract, when there was not a particle of evidence in the case—and I think there never will be a particle of evidence in the case—that he made the contract or recalled it, or that he even knew that a sale to Bradley was then contemplated. That was the situation in reference to this Katydid coal-dump transaction when these proceedings were begun at the other end of this building.

I wish to deviate now in just one respect from the order in which these articles of impeachment are prepared, to pass by No. 2 for the moment and take up No. 3, because it refers to another coal-dump transaction—the so-called Packer No. 3.

It will appear that instead of Judge Archbald making up his mind that he would go into the business of speculating in coal dumps to be obtained from railroads that might have cases before him that as to this transaction, too, it was the merest accident that he had anything to do with it at all. There was up in that region a coal dump called the Oxford dump, owned by private individuals, with which no railroad had any concern whatever. Judge Archbald, with some other persons, was proposing to acquire a lease on the Oxford dump when he was informed, or they were informed, that because of the quality of the dump it probably would be impossible to work it profitably by itself; but that right across the little creek on which that dump borders there were some other dumps, which were owned by the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., in such wise that the Oxford dump, with one or more of those, could be worked profitably. It was that that led him to inquire of the officials of the coal company which controlled the other dumps to see whether an arrangement could be made by which one or more of them could be worked with the Oxford dump.

Those dumps on the other side of the creek were called the Packer dumps—Packer No. 1, No. 2, and No. 3, and so on—and this was No. 3. The subordinate officers of that company investigated the matter, and they came to the conclusion that as to Packer No. 3 dump, it could not be utilized by the company itself. The reasons for that I need not state, but it is perfectly apparent that Judge Archbald's position had nothing in the world to do with that matter, and that they came to the conclusion that they would waive their rights in that particular dump because they could not make any money out of it themselves or do anything with it.

All those dumps, the Senators will remember, were owned by the Girard estate, and were controlled through a certain corporation in the city of Philadelphia. The Lehigh Valley Coal Co. merely had them leased, as they had leased a vast amount of other coal property belonging to the Girard estate. This Packer No. 3 was but a mere speck in the vast domain which they had leased from that estate.

The leases were to expire in less than two years, and there was talk of new leases. They simply agreed that they would give up their rights as to that particular dump, and anybody who could make proper arrangements with the Girard estate could take it, so far as they were concerned.

You have heard much said about Judge Archbald having gone into a great speculation and the business of dealing in coal dumps or coal properties of railroad companies which might have cases in the Commerce Court. These two cases—the Katydid and Packer No. 3—are the only ones of which we have been so far advised that come within that category, and with which there is any attempt to show that Judge Archbald was connected; and you will see how he got into them—one of them by its being suggested to him by Williams, who was pushed forward by Boland; and the other because he was attempting to work with others the Oxford dump, and they found that it could not be done profitably without getting one of those on the other side of the creek.

It is said here—and if it were true it would be a matter of vast importance—as it is said in the articles of impeachment, that Judge Archbald concealed his relation to these matters and put dummies forward as the real parties in interest.

Now, as a matter of fact, the exact contrary is the truth in this matter. When he wrote to Capt. May he did not say anything about Williams having any interest, but simply sent Williams as the bearer of a letter saying "Will you sell this Katydid dump?" and whatever transaction took place out of his presence anywhere else by which his name was sought to be concealed was without his knowledge and without his consent and authority.

When Mr. Robertson's option was given, which was shortly after Capt. May gave his option, Judge Archbald in his own handwriting wrote out the contract with Robertson and signed it as a witness to the signature of Mr. Robertson. When he wrote to Conn he wrote in his own name, as a person having interest. And, finally, more important than all—perhaps the managers are excusable as to this, because probably they hear it now for the first time—when the sale with Conn was about to be concluded, in October or November, 1911, Judge Archbald prepared the contract with Conn, giving the terms of the proposed sale of the Katydid dump, and he put it as a contract between Robert W. Archbald and Edward J. Williams, on the one hand, and this company of which Conn was the manager on the other hand. That we will show by evidence which will not be disputed by anybody. And as to concealing his name with reference to the Packer No. 3 transaction, the managers themselves, if they go on with that charge, will have to put in evidence the letter signed by Judge Archbald himself and signed by the other persons with whom he was interested, proposing to buy that dump and stating the terms on which they would buy it. This idea of Judge Archbald engaging in something that was wrong and concealing his name is absolutely without the slightest foundation.

Now, I want to go back a minute to the second article. That concerns the charge that Judge Archbald "for a valuable consideration"—that is the information we are given in the article—"for a valuable consideration" undertook to bring about a settlement of this suit of Peale against the Marion Coal Co., which was pending before Judge Witmer at the time, and the case of the Marion Coal Co. against the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co., which was pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission. Observe that neither of these cases was pending in his court. One of them was pending before Judge Witmer, who now had become district Judge, and the other was pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

William P. Boland and Christopher G. Boland employed a lawyer named Watson in Scranton in an attempt to bring about a settlement of both those litigations, and he carried on negotiations for some time in that regard.

Judge Archbald, at the request of Mr. Watson, a long-time friend of his, and at the request of Christopher G. Boland, who implored him to assist him in the matter and who said to him with tears in his eyes, "I am afraid my brother, William P. Boland, will lose his mind if the matter is not settled; he can not sleep," lent his aid to bring the parties together. That is what he did and nothing else.

If the learned managers have any evidence to produce which will tend to show that it ever entered the mind of this respondent that he was to get a cent out of the transaction or any benefit of any kind personal to himself or that he engaged in it for any purpose other than to help friends of his for the reasons I have stated, they will produce some evidence which they have not produced and which is unknown to us.

I may say in this connection that when I was in Scranton—as I was two or three weeks ago—Mr. Watson, as we were all informed, was seized with an attack of some kind and carried to his house, and his illness is of such a character—or was then—that we fear it will be impossible for him to come here or even to have his deposition taken.

Now, as to the other articles of impeachment, I shall go over them in a very hasty way. The fourth article charges certain things as to which there is no dispute with respect to the facts. The case of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. had been pending in the Interstate Commerce Commission and had come up before the Commerce Court, and that court was considering what action it would take in reference to the matter. It had been argued and submitted to the court, and Judge Archbald was engaged in writing an opinion.

Now, in going over the testimony in the case there was a certain place where a Mr. Compton, who was the principal witness for the railroad company, had used in reference to something the expression, "We did"; at least that is what he was made to say in the reporter's version of it and as it appears in the deposition before the Interstate Commerce Commission and as it was transmitted to the Commerce Court. It was perfectly apparent from the context that what the witness said and what should have been there was "We did not" do the things.

Judge Archbald wrote to Mr. Bruce—Mr. Bruce being a lawyer in Louisville whose standing as a man of honor in the profession is as high as that of any man in the country—and asked him to speak to Mr. Compton and see whether a mistake had not been made. Mr. Bruce did speak to Mr. Compton, and Mr. Compton said that was what he had said, and he called attention to the context, showing that that was what he had said.

Judge Archbald, who is charged with having engaged in this transaction corruptly, took that letter and pasted it into the record at the point where occurred the expression, "We did," where anybody might see the letter; and there it is to-day.

As a matter of fact, when Judge Archbald came to write his opinion, he based it upon the answer as it originally stood. So that this correction had no effect whatever on the decision.

Later, it is true, a question arose, the nature of which is such that to explain it would require a long statement of what had occurred in the case, which I will not attempt now and may not have to attempt in the future. He asked Mr. Bruce what he had to say about it, and Mr. Bruce at considerable length wrote back. It related to a detail of evidence. The defendants in the case in the Commerce Court were the Interstate Commerce Commission and the United States. Both of these defendants had refused to go into the questions of evidence at all, and based their defense solely upon the ground that the Commerce Court had no right to go into the evidence, so that this explanation by Mr. Bruce related to what in a proper sense was ex parte.

So far as concerns the opinion upon that subject which Mr. Manager Clayton has said followed the line of Mr. Bruce's argument, I think it will be very hard for him to maintain that I have read the letter several times and read the opinion, and I confess I have not been able so far to see the connection. At all events, the case will be barren of any evidence that in what Judge Archbald did in that matter he had any wrongful intention or any motive except to arrive at the facts and to do justice between the parties.

The fifth article of impeachment is based upon the alleged gift of $500 by one Warnke to Judge Archbald as compensation for Judge Archbald having gone to an official of the Reading Railroad Co. and asked that official to give Mr. Warnke a certain right which he claimed.

The facts in that matter are these: Judge Archbald did go at the request of Mr. Warnke to ask this officer to allow Mr. Warnke to have a certain lease. He made an appointment He was told that the with that officer for that purpose. matter was closed and so reported to Mr. Warnke, and that was the end of it. As a matter of fact it appears that some months before Mr. Warnke had been endeavoring to get that same favor from the railroad company and had failed. Judge Archbald knew nothing of that and simply went as a friend of Mr. Warnke and asked that the favor be given him without any expectation or promise of any reward whatever, and never thought of any.

But one John Henry Jones and Judge Archbald were together in another transaction which involved the sale of another dump with which no railroad had any concern whatever. It is known as the Gravity fill, the coal being dumped where it made a fill instead of being piled up. It will appear beyond any dispute whatever that Judge Archbald was the principal factor in bringing about that sale, for which the purchasers agreed to pay a commission of $500. That commission was given to Judge Archbald in the form of a note for $510. He discounted it and gave half the proceeds to Jones. Warnke and his assoclates in the Premier Co., which was the purchaser of this property, paid the commission to Judge Archbald and had no concern with his dividing it with Jones. It is believed that it is not a criminal offense for the judge of a Federal court to have a transaction of this kind with a private individual who probably never will have any business in his court.

I hesitate to deal with the sixth article because, as a lawyer, I do not like to recognize the fact that a man may be brought into a court of justice anywhere and asked to respond to a charge so vague and indefinite as that is. Its five or six lines convey no idea as to what it is intended to charge. We are told now by the managers it was an endeavor to get the Lehigh Valley Coal Co. to purchase the interest of the Everhardt heirs in a certain tract of land, which the company owned for the most part. It had acquired the title of some of the Everhardt heirs and wanted to get the title of the others. It would appear, as to that, that Judge Archbald was interested in the Everhardt heirs because they had an outstanding claim to the Katydid culm bank, and he was trying to clear up that title so that he could sell it.

You will remember the sale had fallen through because he could not give a good title, on account of the claim of these Everhardt people, among others. When he learned that the company wanted to get the title of the Everhardt heirs to the land which they owned, he sought to have the Everhardt heirs brought into the matter so that he could get the title that they had to the Katydid dump and enable him to sell it. all the connection he had with that matter. That was

Next is article 7 with reference to the Rissinger note. It is true that Mr. Rissinger was the principal stockholder in a concern called the Old Plymouth Coal Co. That company has lost some of its property by fire and had a number of suits pending against insurance companies, and those of them which involved a sufficient amount to enable the defendant companies to remove them into the Federal court had been so removed into Judge Archbald's court. The cases were tried there to-While the trial was going on the parties settled and a judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff company against the different insurance companies for an amount somewhat less than the amount claimed. It is true that at the time that trial was going on, and sometime before and sometime after, Judge Archbald had had some negotiations with Mr. Rissinger and a number of other people who were concerned in a speculation about some property in Honduras. After the trial Judge Archbald did lend his indorsement to a note for forty-five hundred dollars, which was discounted by some bank there. Judge Archbald claimed that he indorsed that note absolutely and entirely as an accommodation to Mr. Rissinger and had no interest in that speculation. Mr. Rissinger's theory of it, as we are given to understand, is that Judge Archbald did acquire an interest in that property, and it was for that purpose that he indorsed the note. Whether he indorsed it as an accommodation for Rissinger or indorsed it because he acquired an interest in the speculation in that far-away country does not make a particle of difference, because it is absolutely impossible to connect his relations with Rissinger in that transaction with anything that took place in the trial in which Rissinger was interested as an owner of stock in the old Plymouth Coal Co. I think every lawyer who was connected with that case will tell you that so far as the rulings of Judge Archbald during the trial are concerned there is no question but that they were right, and there is no supposition, I believe, entertained by anybody that he made any ruling in that case in favor of Rissinger that was not justified by the law of the case.

It is said that this note was presented for discount to Mr. Lanahan, who had been of counsel for Ressinger in the insur-If that was done, it was without the knowledge of Judge Archbald.

The next two counts refer to a note for $500. That is the note I referred to some time ago as the one that Mr. Boland thought the judge wanted him to discount and punished him thought the judge wanted him to discount and punished him thought the judge wanted him to discount and punished him thought the judge wanted him to discount and punished him thought the judge wanted him to discount and punished him thought the judge wanted him to discount and punished him thought the judge wanted him to discount and punished him to discount an thing which got into Boland's brain and lodged there for many months.

John Henry Jones came to Judge Archbald in the latter part of the year 1909, after this demurrer had been overruled, and told him of a speculation in some property in Venezuela. Judge Archbald's understanding is that he indorsed a $500 note for Jones at that time as an accommodation to Jones. I think Jones so understands it, and that there was no interest acquired or intended to be acquired by Judge Archbald in the speculation. Whether that is true or not, of course, is of no consequence here. That note it appears was taken by Edward J. Williams, who was concerned in this speculation in Venezuela with Jones. It was taken first to Christopher G. Boland and then to William P. Boland, and they were asked to discount it.

It should be borne in mind, however, that at that time

Christopher G. Boland was president, I think, of a bank in the State of New York, not far from Buffalo, and that it was not a rare transaction for him to have dealings concerning dis-counts for that bank in Scranton. However that may be, all that Judge Archbald had to do with this matter was that Mr. Jones some time after the transaction told him he had presented his note to the Bolands for a discount, or Williams intended to do it, or something of that kind.

It is true that Judge Archbald lived in Scranton and knew the Bolands, and no doubt had known of their interest in the Marian Coal Co. It is true that in the September preceding this transaction he had passed upon the demurrer in the case of Peale against the Marian Coal Co. If a judge is supposed to remember and have in mind all the time the names of every person interested in every case before him, the respondent may be charged with having in mind at the time in question that the Bolands were concerned with litigation in his court.

So it is said here that that note was taken after the Bolands had refused to discount it to Von Storch, an officer of the bank, at the request of Judge Archbald. I ask Senators to wait until they hear the evidence tending to show that that note was taken to Von Storch on any suggestion from Judge Archbald. The fact is it was taken there without any suggestion from him. After it was presented there Von Storch called the judge to the bank and had some conversation with him as to whether it was all right to discount it. It certainly is far-fetched that the honorable managers claim here that that was done by Von Storch for two reasons, in the first place because he was a lawyer practicing before Judge Archbald. As a matter of fact his practice before Judge Archbald was practically nil. On the other hand, they say that a case in Judge Archbald's court in which Von Storch had been a party and not counsel about a year before had been decided by Judge Archbald in Von Storch's So they say Judge Archbald is corrupt because the note favor. he had indorsed was taken for discount to a man in whose favor he had some time before decided a case. That is all there is in that transaction.

Article 10 comes next. Henry W. Cannon is a full cousin of He is a man of large means, has Judge Archbald's wife. a fine villa or house in Florence, Italy, and has been in the habit of making trips abroad in the summer. In 1910 he was going on his summer trip, and he wrote a letter to his cousin, who was not only his full cousin but a lifelong intimate and dear friend, and invited her to go abroad with him as his guest, and suggesting that some other member of the family might come along, and saying in the letter he assumed that Judge Archbald's public duties would not allow him to go along.

After that letter was received Judge Archbald conferred with the other judges of that circuit, and they all concluded that he not only could go but that he ought to go, as he had not had a vacation for seven or eight years. So he and his wife went abroad as the guests of Mrs. Archbald's cousin, Mr. Cannon, and were with him for several months, and returned with him.

In order to make a crime out of that innocent transaction this article of impeachment goes on to charge that Mr. Cannon was an officer of various corporations, nearly all of which were doing business on the Pacific coast of the United States. There is no corporation he was connected with, I believe, that ever had any case that came before Judge Archbald. Nobody thought of that possibility until it originated in the minds of our honorable friends here. It had never occurred to anybody that that could constitute an offense or that there was anything improper in Judge Archbald doing what he did in that matter.

On the day that that ship sailed from New York Harbor, and just before the hour of sailing, when those who were not to go were to be cleared from the deck, Judge Searle, who was a member of the judiciary of the State of Pennsylvania, a man of as high standing for honor and integrity as any man in the State, walked up to Judge Archbald on board the ship and said, "Here is something for you, Judge, but you are not to open it until you get away from this port." Judge Archbald knew nothing about what this meant until the ship had sailed and he had opened the package. He then found a letter from a number of his friends at the bar in and about Scranton, most of them lawyers, all of high standing, as to whom it would be impossible for anybody to suggest any corrupt or wrongful intention, making Judge Archbald this present and asking him to take it and enjoy it for his private expenses. They knew that Mr. Cannon was going to pay his traveling expenses, and they gave him this in addition. It would certainly have been extremely embarrassing for Judge Archbald to have returned this fund to the donors with the intimation that they had been guilty of And this gross misbehavior in presenting him with the money. transaction is the subject matter of the eleventh article.

Now, it has been said here to-day that Mr. Searle, the clerk of Judge Archbald's court (not the Judge Searle who presented the fund which I have referred to to Judge Archbald) and Mr. Woodward, the jury commissioner for that district, were the two men who had raised this fund. Just how it was raised Judge Archbald does not know. He had no more to do with it than any of us had; he knew nothing about it, until after the money was presented to him on the ship by Judge Searle.

It is charged in the twelfth article that Judge Archbald appointed as jury commissioner of his court a lawyer named Woodward, and that Mr. Woodward was attorney for a railroad company which might have litigation in his court. This is one of the articles where by some inadvertence, I must suppose, on the part of the learned managers, the adverbs to which I have heretofore referred are omitted. It is not even charged that he made that appointment wrongfully or corruptly. It simply rests upon the proposition that to appoint as jury commissioner a man who was attorney for a railroad company is an impeachable offense.

As a matter of fact Mr. Woodward was appointed in 1901

As a matter of fact Mr. Woodward was appointed in 1901 and served until about a year ago, I believe, with eminent satisfaction to all the members of the bar, whether they were attorneys for railroad companies or not. He did not leave his position there, I believe, until after Judge Archbald came to the Commerce Court. Mr. Woodward will probably be here, and if there is any information to be obtained from him as to whether he had any collusive arrangement with Judge Archbald he may impart it. But to our mind the article as it stands charging simply this appointment without any suggestion that he did it corruptly or wrongfully is a novelty in criminal pleading

I have little to say in reply to the concluding paragraphs of the very able and eloquent presentation that was made by Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I do not understand that we here have to determine whether the provisions of the Constitution of the United States which provide for the impeachment not only of judges but of all civil officers of the Government, including perhaps Senators and Members of the House of Representatives, are to be changed from what they have been to this day to a provision for the "recall" of judges and other officers or not. If the learned Manager means what it seems to me he has plainly indicated—it follows that he contends that if for any cause a majority of the Members of the House of Representatives and two-thirds of this body come to the conclusion that the President of the United States or any other civil officer from the President down does not conduct himself in a manner which is satisfactory to the Members of these two bodies, he should be removed from his office whether he has committed any crime or not.

In the convention of 1787, which framed the Constitution of the United States, it was at first suggested that civil officers of the United States might be impeached for maladministration. but the convention, by an almost unanimous vote, refused to adopt that provision because it was too general and too uncer-They substituted for it the words "treason, bribery, or other high crimes or misdemeanors." The effort of the managers in this case, if I understand what has been said by them here to-day and what has been said elsewhere, is to take those words "treason, bribery, or other high crimes or misdemeanors' out of the Constitution and write back the words that the convention would not put in that instrument, "maladministration or misbehavior." I think it will be a long day before the Senate will yield to that suggestion and tear the Constitution of the United States to pieces in that fashion.

Mr. Manager CLAYTÔN. Mr. President, may I have permission to make a brief statement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection on the part of the Senate, permission is granted.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I wish to say, Mr. President, that the view of the law in this case was expressed to the Senate last summer. You will find on pages 86 and 87 of the proceedings then had in the Senate a statement on the part of the managers—and I may say, Mr. President, I was the manager who made the statement—of what is considered to be the general law of this case. The authorities are there cited, and some of them quoted somewhat at length,

Mr. President, in further reply to the complaint which has been made by the honorable gentleman who represents the respondent here, that we did not go into the discussion of the law in the preliminary statement which the managers had the honor to submit this afternoon, I beg to say that we followed what we believed to be the practice in such cases. I have before me the record in the case of Judge Swayne. I observe that Judge Palmer, who was then the manager speaking for all the managers, after he concluded his statement of facts, winding up, I may say, with a condensed summary of all the statements which he had made at length, ended the preliminary statement of facts which is required according to the rules and practice of the Senate. He did not at that time present any brief or any argument or any views on the law of impeachment. The managers, Mr. President, have already prepared in a formal way a brief, and can present that brief, and in argument fully cover their views as to the law of impeachment; but we thought that this brief and what the managers said last summer, which is in the RECORD and to which I have referred, would amply apprise the honorable counsel for the respondent of the line of argument on the law in this case that the managers would pursue.

I say that, Mr. President, because I think that the complaint—for so I consider it—which the counsel for the respondent has lodged against the managers because they have not presented their view of the law on this question at this time is not a well-founded complaint.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I do not want to be understood as impeaching the honorable managers for the course they have pursued. I simply stated what I had expected they would do. As I have read the proceedings in impeachment cases, aside from the Swayne case, especially the case of the impeachment of Andrew Johnson, the case of the impeachment of Judge Peck, and the case of the impeachment of Judge Chase—as I read them, the propositions of law upon which the case should be presented were gone into very fully in the opening statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the pleasure of the managers as to proceeding?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. As the managers understand, Mr. President, we expect to be ready to comply with the order of the Senate, the purpose of the Senate, to proceed with the examination of witnesses on to-morrow. We have some of the witnesses here this afternoon, but I had understood by conference with some of the Senators that perhaps it would not be the desire of the Senate to examine any witnesses this afternoon. It is our purpose at the convening of the court to-morrow to proceed at once to swear and examine witnesses.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.). Mr. President, under the statement by the managers on the part of the House, I move that the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming moves that the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment do now adjourn.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Sundry messages, in writing, from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION OF FINE ARTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on the Library and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the information of the Congress the report of the Commission of Fine Arts for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1912.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 3, 1912.

INTERNATIONAL WATERWAYS COMMISSION (S. DOC. NO. 959).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government approved August 24, 1912, provided for the International Waterways Commission in the following terms,

For continuing until December 31, 1912, the work of investigation and report by the International Waterways Commission, authorized by section 4 of the river and harbor act approved June 13, 1902, $10,000: Provided, That report as to the progress of the work be made by the American commissioners to Congress at the beginning of the next session.

The American commissioners have rendered a full report of all their acts up to this time, which I herewith transmit. It appears from this report that the commission still has two pieces of work to complete before it can properly go out of existence.

One is its final report upon a dam at the outlet of Lake Erie, a difficult and important question, upon which it has expended a vast amount of labor. It should be allowed to finish this work to clear the ground for its successor, the International Joint Commission, which will consider all future questions of this nature. I am informed that the report has been delayed, and may be further delayed, by the illness and absence in Europe of one of the Canadian engineers, but that it can probably be completed within a few months—certainly before the completion of the other piece of unfinished work.

The other is to ascertain and reestablish, to mark upon the ground, and to delineate upon modern charts the location of a portion of the international boundary between the United States and Canada, which work was specifically assigned to the International Waterways Commission by article 4 of the treaty between the United States and Great Britain dated April 11, 1908. This work, the commission states, can not be completed by December 31, 1912, but will require from a year to 15 months' more time beyond that date.

The work of the commission has been of a high order and has been prosecuted with diligence. International courtesy, as well as treaty obligations, require that the commission be allowed to complete its work. I recommend that the items to be found in the estimates for its support during the second half of the current fiscal year and for a part of the next fiscal year receive the favorable consideration of Congress.

OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS (H. DOC. NO. 927).

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The foreign relations of the United States actually and potentially affect the state of the Union to a degree not widely realized and hardly surpassed by any other factor in the welfare of the whole Nation. The position of the United States in the moral, intellectual, and material relations of the family of nations should be a matter of vital interest to every patriotic The national prosperity and power impose upon us duties which we can not shirk if we are to be true to our ideals. The tremendous growth of the export trade of the United States has already made that trade a very real factor in the industrial and commercial prosperity of the country. With the development of our industries the foreign commerce of the United States must rapidly become a still more essential factor in its economic welfare. Whether we have a farseeing and wise diplomacy and are not recklessly plunged into unnecessary wars, and whether our foreign policies are based upon an intelligent grasp of present-day world conditions and a clear view of the potentialities of the future, or are governed by a temporary and timid expediency or by narrow views befitting an infant nation, are questions in the alternative consideration of which must convince any thoughtful citizen that no department of national polity offers greater opportunity for promoting the interests of the whole people on the one hand, or greater chance on the other of permanent national injury, than that which deals with the foreign relations of the United States.

The fundamental foreign policies of the United States should be raised high above the conflict of partisanship and wholly dissociated from differences as to domestic policy. In its foreign affairs the United States should present to the world a united front. The intellectual, financial, and industrial interests of the country and the publicist, the wage earner, the farmer, and citizen of whatever occupation must cooperate in a spirit of high patriotism to promote that national solidarity which is indispensable to national efficiency and to the attainment of national ideals.

The relations of the United States with all foreign powers remain upon a sound basis of peace, harmony, and friendship. A greater insistence upon justice to American citizens or interests wherever it may have been denied and a stronger emphasis of the need of mutuality in commercial and other relations have only served to strengthen our friendships with foreign countries by placing those friendships upon a firm foundation of realities as well as aspirations.

Before briefly reviewing the more important events of the last year in our foreign relations, which it is my duty to do as charged with their conduct and because diplomatic affairs are not of a nature to make it appropriate that the Secretary of State make a formal annual report, I desire to touch upon some of the essentials to the safe management of the foreign relations of the United States and to endeavor, also, to define clearly certain concrete policies which are the logical modern corollaries of the undisputed and traditional fundamentals of the foreign policy of the United States.

REORGANIZATION OF THE STATE DEPARTMENT.

At the beginning of the present administration the United States having fully entered upon its position as a world power, with the responsibilities thrust upon it by the results of the Spanish-American War, and already engaged in laying the groundwork of a vast foreign trade upon which it should one day become more and more dependent, found itself without the machinery for giving thorough attention to, and taking effective action upon, a mass of intricate business vital to American interests in every country in the world.

The Department of State was an archaic and inadequate machine lacking most of the attributes of the foreign office of any great modern power. With an appropriation made upon my recommendation by the Congress on August 5, 1909, the Department of State was completely reorganized. There were created ment of State was completely reorganized.

Divisions of Latin-American Affairs and of Far Eastern, Near Contains and Western European Affairs. To these divisions were called from the foreign service diplomatic and consular officers possessing experience and knowledge gained by actual service in different parts of the world, and thus familiar with political and commercial conditions in the regions concerned. The work was highly specialized. The result is that where previously this Government from time to time would emphasize in its foreign relations one or another policy, now American interests in every quarter of the globe are being cultivated with This principle of politico-geographical division possesses also the good feature of making possible rotation between the officers of the departmental, the diplomatic, and the consular branches of the foreign service, and thus keeps the whole diplomatic and consular establishments under the Department of State in close touch and equally inspired with the aims and policy of the Government. Through the newly created Division of Information the foreign service is kept fully informed of what transpires from day to day in the international relations of the country, and contemporary foreign comment affecting American interests is promptly brought to the attention of the department. The law offices of the department were greatly strengthened. There were added foreign-trade advisers to cooperate with the diplomatic and consular bureaus and the politico-geographical divisions in the innumerable matters where commercial diplomacy or consular work calls for such special knowledge. The same officers, together with the rest of the new organization, are able at all times to give to American citizens accurate information as to conditions in foreign countries with which they have business and likewise to cooperate more effectively with the Congress and also with the other executive departments.

MERIT SYSTEM IN CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC CORPS.

Expert knowledge and professional training must evidently be the essence of this reorganization. Without a trained for eign service there would not be men available for the work in the reorganized Department of State. President Cleveland had taken the first step toward introducing the merit system in the foreign service. That had been followed by the application of the merit principle, with excellent results, to the entire consular branch. Almost nothing, however, had been done in this direction with regard to the Diplomatic Service. In this age of commercial diplomacy it was evidently of the first importance to train an adequate personnel in that branch of the service. Therefore, on November 26, 1909, by an Executive order I placed the Diplomatic Service up to the grade of secretary of embassy, inclusive, upon exactly the same strict nonpartisan basis of the merit system, rigid examination for appointment and promotion only for efficiency, as had been maintained without exception in the Consular Service.

STATISTICS AS TO MERIT AND NONPARTISAN CHARACTER OF APPOINTMENTS. How faithtful to the merit system and how nonpartisan has been the conduct of the Diplomatic and Consular Services in the last four years may be judged from the following: Three ambassadors now serving held their present rank at the beginning of my administration. Of the 10 ambassadors whom I have appointed, 5 were by promotion from the rank of minister. Nine ministers now serving held their present rank at the beginning of the administration. Of the 30 ministers whom I have appointed, 11 were promoted from the lower grades of the foreign service or from the Department of State. Of the 19 missions in Latin America, where our relations are close and our interest is great, 15 chiefs of mission are service men, 3 having entered the service during this administration. The 37 secretaries of embassy or legation who have received their initial appointments after passing successfully the required examination were chosen for ascertained fitness, without regard to political affiliations. A dearth of candidates from Southern and Western States has alone made it impossible thus far completely to equalize all the States' representations in the foreign service. In the effort to equalize the representation of the various States in the Consular Service I have made 16 of the 29 new appointments as consul which have occurred during my administration from the Southern States. This is 55 per cent. Every other consular appointment made, including the promotion of 11 young men from the consular assistant and student interpreter corps, has been by promotion or transfer, based solely upon efficiency shown in the service.

In order to assure to the business and other interests of the United States a continuance of the resulting benefits of this reform, I earnestly renew my previous recommendations of legislation making it permanent along some such lines as those of the measure now pending in Congress.

LARGER PROVISION FOR EMBASSIES AND LEGATIONS AND FOR OTHER EXPENSES OF OUR FOREIGN REPRESENTATIVES RECOMMENDED.

In connection with legislation for the amelioration of the foreign service, I wish to invite attention to the advisability of placing the salary appropriations upon a better basis. I believe that the best results would be obtained by a moderate scale of salaries, with adequate funds for the expenses of proper representation, based in each case upon the scale and cost of living at each post, controlled by a system of accounting, and under the general direction of the Department of State.

In line with the object which I have sought of placing our foreign service on a basis of permanency, I have at various times advocated provision by Congress for the acquisition of Government-owned buildings for the residence and offices of our diplomatic officers, so as to place them more nearly on an equality with similar officers of other nations and to do away with the discrimination which otherwise must necessarily be made, in some cases, in favor of men having large private fortunes. The act of Congress which I approved on February 17, 1911, was a right step in this direction. The Secretary of State has already made the limited recommendations permitted by the act for any one year, and it is my hope that the bill introduced in the House of Representatives to carry out these recommendations will be favorably acted on by the Congress during its present session.

In some Latin-American countries the expense of Government-owned legations will be less than elsewhere, and it is certainly very urgent that in such countries as some of the Republics of Central America and the Caribbean, where it is peculiarly difficult to rent suitable quarters, the representatives of the United States should be justly and adequately provided with dignified and suitable official residences. Indeed, it is high time that the dignity and power of this great Natlon should be fittingly signalized by proper buildings for the occupancy of the Nation's representatives everywhere abroad.

DIPLOMACY A HANDMAID OF COMMERCIAL INTERCOURSE AND PEACE.

The diplomacy of the present administration has sought to respond to modern ideas of commercial intercourse. This policy has been characterized as substituting dollars for bullets. It is one that appeals alike to idealistic humanitarian sentiments, to the dictates of sound policy and strategy, and to legitimate commercial aims. It is an effort frankly directed to the increase of American trade upon the axiomatic principle that the Government of the United States shall extend all proper support to every legitimate and beneficial American enterprise abroad. How great have been the results of diplomacy, coupled with the maximum and minimum provision of the tariff law, will be seen by some consideration of the wonderful increase in the export trade of the United States.

Because modern diplomacy is commercial, there has been a disposition in some quarters to attribute to it none but materialistic aims. How strikingly erroneous is such an impression may be seen from a study of the results by which the diplomacy of the United States can be judged.

SUCCESSFUL EFFORTS IN PROMOTION OF PEACE.

In the field of work toward the ideals of peace this Government negotiated, but to my regret was unable to consummate, two arbitration treaties which set the highest mark of the aspiration of nations toward the substitution of arbitration and reason for war in the settlement of international disputes. Through the efforts of American diplomacy several wars have been prevented or ended. I refer to the successful tripartite mediation of the Argentine Republic, Brazil, and the United States between Peru and Ecuador; the bringing of the boundary dispute between Panama and Costa Rica to peaceful arbitration; the staying of warlike preparations when Haiti and the Dominican Republic were on the verge of hostilities; the stopping of a war in Nicaragua; the halting of internecine strife in The Government of the United States was thanked for its influence toward the restoration of amicable relations between the Argentine Republic and Bolivia. The diplomacy of the United States is active in seeking to assuage the remaining ill-feeling between this country and the Republic of Colombia In the recent civil war in China the United States successfully joined with the other interested powers in urging an early cessation of hostilities. An agreement has been reached between the Governments of Chile and Peru whereby the celebrated Tacna-Arica dispute, which has so long embittered international relations on the west coast of South America, has at last been adjusted. Simultaneously came the news that the boundary dispute between Peru and Ecuador had entered upon a stage of amicable settlement. The position of the United States in reference to the Tacna-Arica dispute between Chile and Peru has been one of nonintervention, but one of friendly influence and pacific counsel throughout the period during which the dispute in question has been the subject of interchange of views between this Government and the two Governments immediately concerned. In the general easing of international tension on the west coast of South America the tripartite mediation, to which I have referred, has been a most potent and beneficent factor.

CHINA.

In China the policy of encouraging financial investment to enable that country to help itself has had the result of giving new life and practical application to the open-door policy. consistent purpose of the present administration has been to encourage the use of American capital in the development of China by the promotion of those essential reforms to which China is pledged by treaties with the United States and other powers. The hypothecation to foreign bankers in connection with certain industrial enterprises, such as the Hukuang railways, of the national revenues upon which these reforms depended, led the Department of State early in the administration to demand for American citizens participation in such enterprises, in order that the United States might have equal rights and an equal voice in all questions pertaining to the disposition of the public revenues concerned. The same policy of promoting international accord among the powers having similar treaty rights as ourselves in the matters of reform, which could not be put into practical effect without the common consent of all, was likewise adopted in the case of the loan desired by China for the reform of its currency. The principle of international cooperation in matters of common interest upon which our policy had already been based in all of the above instances has admittedly been a great factor in that concert of the powers which has been so happily conspicuous during the perilous period of transition through which the great Chinese nation has

CENTRAL AMERICA NEEDS OUR HELP IN DEBT ADJUSTMENT.

In Central America the aim has been to help such countries as Nicaragua and Honduras to help themselves. They are the immediate beneficiaries. The national benefit to the United States is twofold. First, it is obvious that the Monroe doctrine is more vital in the neighborhood of the Panama Canal and the zone of the Caribbean than anywhere else. There, too, the maintenance of that doctrine falls most heavily upon the United States. It is therefore essential that the countries within that sphere shall be removed from the jeopardy involved by heavy foreign debt and chaotic national finances and from the ever-present danger of international complications due to disorder at home. Hence the United States has been glad to encourage and support American bankers who were willing to lend a helping hand to the financial rehabilitation of such countries, because this financial rehabilitation and the protection of their customhouses from being the prey of would-be dictators would remove at one stroke the menace of foreign creditors and the menace of revolutionary disorder.

The second advantage to the United States is one affecting chiefly all the southern and Gulf ports and the business and industry of the South. The Republics of Central America and the Caribbean possess great natural wealth. They need only a measure of stability and the means of financial regeneration to enter upon an era of peace and prosperity, bringing profit and happiness to themselves, and at the same time creating conditions sure to lead to a flourishing interchange of trade with this country.

I wish to call your especial attention to the recent occurrences in Nicaragua, for I believe the terrible events recorded there during the revolution of the past summer—the useless loss of life, the devastation of property, the bombardment of defenseless cities, the killing and wounding of women and children, the torturing of noncombatants to exact contributions, and the suffering of thousands of human beings—might have been averted had the Department of State, through approval of the loan convention by the Senate, been permitted to carry out its now well-developed policy of encouraging the extending of financial aid to weak Central American States, with the primary objects of avoiding just such revolutions by assisting those Republics to rehabilitate their finances, to establish their currency on a stable basis, to remove the customhouses from the danger of revolutions by arranging for their secure administration, and to establish reliable banks.

During this last revolution in Nicaragua, the Government of that Republic having admitted its inability to protect American life and property against acts of sheer lawlessness on the part of the malcontents, and having requested this Government to assume that office, it became necessary to land over 2,000 marines and bluejackets in Nicaragua. Owing to their presence the constituted Government of Nicaragua was free to devote its attention wholly to its internal troubles, and was thus enabled to stamp out the rebellion in a short space of time. When the Red Cross supplies sent to Granada had been exhausted, 8,000 persons having been given food in one day upon the arrival of the American forces, our men supplied other unfortunate, needy Nicaraguans from their own haversacks. I wish to congratulate the officers and men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps who took part in reestablishing order in Nicaragua upon their splendid conduct, and to record with sorrow the death of seven American marines and bluejackets. Since the reestablishment of peace and order, elections have been held amid conditions of quiet and tranquillity. Nearly all the American marines have now been withdrawn. The country should soon be on the road to recovery. The only apparent danger now threatening Nicaragua arises from the shortage of funds. Although American bankers have already rendered assistance, they may naturally be leath to advance a loan adequate to set the country upon its feet without the support of some such convention as that of June, 1911, upon which the Senate has not yet acted.

ENFORCEMENT OF NEUTRALITY LAWS.

In the general effort to contribute to the enjoyment of peace by these Republics which are near neighbors of the United States, the administration has enforced the so-called neutrality statutes with a new vigor, and those statutes were greatly strengthened in restricting the exportation of arms and munitions by the joint resolution of last March. It is still a regrettable fact that certain American ports are made the rendezvous of professional revolutionists and others engaged in intrigue against the peace of those Republics. It must be admitted that occasionally a revolution in this region is justified as a real popular movement to throw off the shackles of a vicious and tyrannical government. Such was the Nicaraguan revolution against the Zelaya régime. A nation enjoying our liberal institutions can not escape sympathy with a true popular movement, and one so well justified. In very many cases, however, revolutions in the Republics in question have no basis in principle, but are due merely to the machinations of conscienceless and ambitious men, and have no effect but to bring new suffering and fresh burdens to an already oppressed people. The question whether the use of American ports as foci revolutionary intrigue can be best dealt with by a further amendment to the neutrality statutes or whether it would be safer to deal with special cases by special laws is one worthy of the careful consideration of the Congress.

VISIT OF SECRETARY KNOX TO CENTRAL AMERICA AND THE CARIBGEAN.

Impressed with the particular importance of the relations between the United States and the Republics of Central America and the Caribbean region, which of necessity must become still more intimate by reason of the mutual advantages which will be presented by the opening of the Panama Canal, I directed the Secretary of State last February to visit these Republics for the purpose of giving evidence of the sincere friendship and good will which the Government and people of the United States bear toward them. Ten Republics were visited. Everywhere he was received with a cordiality of welcome and a generosity of hospitality such as to impress me deeply and to merit our warmest thanks. The appreciation of the Governments and peoples of the countries visited, which has been appropriately shown in various ways, leaves me no doubt that his visit will conduce to that closer union and better understanding between the United States and those Republics which I have had it much at heart to promote.

OUR MEXICAN POLICY.

For two years revolution and counter-revolution have distraught the neighboring Republic of Mexico. Brigandage has involved a great deal of depredation upon foreign interests. There have constantly recurred questions of extreme delicacy. On several occasions very difficult situations have arisen on our Throughout this trying period the policy of the United States has been one of patient nonintervention, steadfast recognition of constituted authority in the neighboring nation, and the exertion of every effort to care for American interests. I profoundly hope that the Mexican nation may soon resume the path of order, prosperity, and progress. To that nation in its sore troubles the sympathetic friendship of the United States has been demonstrated to a high degree. There were in Mexico at the beginning of the revolution some thirty or forty thousand American citizens engaged in enterprises contributing greatly to the prosperity of that Republic and also benefiting the important trade between the two countries. The investment of American capital in Mexico has been estimated at $1,000,000,000. The responsibility of endeavoring to safeguard those interests and the dangers inseparable from propinguity to so turbulent a situation have been great, but I am happy to have been able to adhere to the policy above outlined-a policy which I hope may be soon justified by the complete success of the Mexican people in regaining the blessings of peace and good order.

AGRICULTURAL CREDITS.

A most important work, accomplished in the past year by the American diplomatic officers in Europe, is the investigation of the agricultural credit system in the European countries, Both as a means to afford relief to the consumers of this country through a more thorough development of agricultural resources and as a means of more sufficiently maintaining the agricultural population, the project to establish credit facilities for the farmers is a concern of vital importance to this Nation. No evidence of prosperity among well-established farmers should blind us to the fact that lack of capital is preventing a development of the Nation's agricultural resources and an adequate increase of the land under cultivation; that agricultural production is fast falling behind the increase in population; and that, in fact, although these well-established farmers are maintained in increasing prosperity because of the natural increase in population, we are not developing the industry of We are not breeding in proportionate numbers a agriculture. race of independent and independence-loving landowners, for a lack of which no growth of cities can compensate. farmers have been our mainstay in times of crisis, and in future it must still largely be upon their stability and common sense that this democracy must rely to conserve its principles of selfgovernment.

The need of capital which American farmers feel to-day had been experienced by the farmers of Europe, with their centuries-old farms, many years ago. The problem had been successfully solved in the Old World and it was evident that the farmers of this country might profit by a study of their systems. I therefore ordered, through the Department of State, an investigation to be made by the diplomatic officers in Europe, and I have laid the results of this investigation before the governors of the various States with the hope that they will be used to advantage in their forthcoming meeting.

INCREASE OF FOREIGN TRADE.

In my last annual message I said that the fiscal year ended June 30, 1911, was noteworthy as marking the highest record of exports of American products to foreign countries. The fiscal year 1912 shows that this rate of advance has been maintained, the total domestic exports having a valuation approximately of $2,200,000,000, as compared with a fraction over $2,000,000,000 the previous year. It is also significant that manufactured and partly manufactured articles continue to be the chief commodities forming the volume of our augmented exports, the demands of our own people for consumption requiring that an increasing proportion of our abundant agricultural products be kept at home. In the fiscal year 1911 the exports of articles in the various stages of manufacture, not including foodstuffs partly or wholly manufactured, amounted approximately to $907,500,000. In the fiscal year 1912 the total was nearly $1,022,000,000, a gain of $114,000,000.

ADVANTAGE OF MAXIMUM AND MINIMUM TARIFF PROVISION,

The importance which our manufactures have assumed in the commerce of the world in competition with the manufactures of other countries again draws attention to the duty of this Government to use its utmost endeavors to secure impartial treatment for American products in all markets. Healthy commercial rivalry in international intercourse is best assured by the possession of proper means for protecting and promoting our eign trade. It is natural that competitive countries should view with some concern this steady expansion of our commerce. If in some instances the measure taken by them to meet it are not entirely equitable, a remedy should be found. In former messages I have described the negotiations of the Department of State with foreign Governments for the adjustment of the maximum and minimum tariff as provided in section 2 of the tariff law of 1909. The advantages secured by the adjustment of our trade relations under this law have continued during the last year, and some additional cases of discriminatory treatment of which we had reason to complain have been removed. The Department of State has for the first time in the history of this country obtained substantial most-favored-nation treatment from all the countries of the world. There are, however, other inan the countries of the world. There are, however, other instances which, while apparently not constituting undue discrimination in the sense of section 2, are nevertheless exceptions to the complete equity of tariff treatment for American products that the Department of State consistently has sought to obtain for American commerce abroad.

NECESSITY FOR SUPPLEMENTARY LEGISLATION.

These developments confirm the opinion conveyed to you in my annual message of 1911, that while the maximum and minimum provision of the tariff law of 1909 has been fully justified by the success achieved in removing previously existing undue discriminations against American products, yet experience has shown that this feature of the law should be amended in such way as to provide a fully effective means of meeting the varying degrees of discriminatory treatment of American commerce in foreign countries still encountered, as well as to protect against injurious treatment on the part of foreign Governments, through either legislative or administrative measures, the financial interests abroad of American citizens whose enterprises enlarge the market for American commodities.

I can not too strongly recommend to the Congress the passage of some such enabling measure as the bill which was recommended by the Secretary of State in his letter of December 13, 1911. The object of the proposed legislation is, in brief, to enable the Executive to apply, as the case may require, to any or all commodities, whether or not on the free list from a country which discriminates against the United States, a graduated scale of duties up to the maximum of 25 per cent ad valorem provided in the present law. Flat tariffs are out of date. Nations no longer accord equal tariff treatment to all other nations irrespective of the treatment from them received. Such a flexible power at the command of the Executive would serve to moderate any unfavorable tendencies on the part of those countries from which the importations into the United States are substantially confined to articles on the free list as well as of the countries which find a lucrative market in the United States for their products under existing customs rates. It is very necessary that the American Government should be equipped with weapons of negotiation adapted to modern economic conditions, in order that we may at all times be in a position to gain not only technically just but actually equitable treatment for our trade, and also for American enterprise and vested interests abroad.

BUSINESS SECURED TO OUR COUNTRY BY DIRECT OFFICIAL EFFORT.

As illustrating the commercial benefits to the Nation derived from the new diplomacy and its effectiveness upon the material as well as the more ideal side, it may be remarked that through direct official efforts alone there have been obtained in the course of this administration, contracts from foreign Governments involving an expenditure of $50,000,000 in the factories of the United States. Consideration of this fact and some reflection upon the necessary effects of a scientific tariff system and a foreign service alert and equipped to cooperate with the business men of America carry the conviction that the gratifying increase in the export trade of this country is, in substantial amount, due to our improved governmental methods of protecting and stimulating it. It is germane to these observations to remark that in the two years that have elapsed since the successful negotiation of our new treaty with Japan, which at the time seemed to present so many practical difficulties, our export trade to that country has increased at the rate of over $1,000,000 a month. Our exports to Japan for the year ended June 30, 1910, were $21,959,310, while for the year ended June 30, 1912, the exports were $53,478,046, a net increase in the sale of American products of nearly 150 per cent.

SPECIAL CLAIMS ARBITRATION WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Under the special agreement entered into between the United States and Great Britain on August 18, 1910, for the arbitration of outstanding pecuniary claims, a schedule of claims and the terms of submission have been agreed upon by the two Governments, and together with the special agreement were approved by the Senate on July 19, 1911, but in accordance with the terms of the agreement they did not go into effect until confirmed by the two Governments by an exchange of notes, which was done on April 26 last. Negotiations are still in progress for a supplemental schedule of claims to be submitted to arbitration under this agreement, and meanwhile the necessary preparations for the arbitration of the claims included in the first schedule have been undertaken and are being carried on under the authority of an appropriation made for that purpose at the last session of Congress. It is anticipated that the two Governments will be prepared to call upon the arbitration tribunal, established under this agreement, to meet at Washington early next year to proceed with this arbitration.

FUR SEAL TREATY AND NEED FOR AMENDMENT OF OUR STATUTE.

The act adopted at the last session of Congress to give effect to the fur-seal convention of July 7, 1911, between Great Britain, Japan, Russia, and the United States provided for the suspension of all land killing of seals on the Pribilof Islands for a period of five years, and an objection has now been presented to this provision by the other parties in interest, which raises the issue as to whether or not this prohibition of land killing is inconsistent with the spirit, if not the letter, of the treaty stipu-The justification for establishing this close season depends, under the terms of the convention, upon how far, if at all, it is necessary for protecting and preserving the American fur-seal herd and for increasing its number. This is a question seal herd and for increasing its number. This is a question requiring examination of the present condition of the herd and the treatment which it needs in the light of actual experience and scientific investigation. A careful examination of the subject is now being made, and this Government will soon be in possession of a considerable amount of new information about the American seal herd, which has been secured during the past season and will be of great value in determining this question; and if it should appear that there is any uncertainty as to the real necessity for imposing a close season at this time I shall take an early opportunity to address a special message to Congress on this subject, in the belief that this Government should yield on this point rather than give the slightest ground for the charge that we have been in any way remiss in observing our treaty obligations.

FINAL SETTLEMENT OF NORTH ATLANTIC FISHERIES DISPUTE.

On the 20th of July last an agreement was concluded between the United States and Great Britain adopting, with certain modifications, the rules and method of procedure recommended in the award rendered by the North Atlantic Coast Fisheries Arbitration Tribunal on September 7, 1910, for the settlement hereafter, in accordance with the principles laid down in the award, of questions arising with reference to the exercise of the American fishing liberties under article 1 of the treaty of October 20, 1818, between the United States and Great Britain. This agreement received the approval of the Senate on August 1 and was formally ratified by the two Governments on Novem-The rules and a method of procedure embodied in the award provided for determining by an impartial tribunal the reasonableness of any new fishery regulations on the treaty coasts of Newfoundland and Canada before such regulations could be enforced against American fishermen exercising their treaty liberties on those coasts, and also for determining the delimitation of bays on such coasts more than 10 miles wide, in accordance with the definition adopted by the tribunal of the meaning of the word "bays" as used in the treaty. In the subsequent negotiations between the two Governments, undertaken for the purpose of giving practical effect to these rules and methods of procedure, it was found that certain modifications therein were desirable from the point of view of both Governments, and these negotiations have finally resulted in the agreement above mentioned by which the award recommendations as modified by mutual consent of the two Governments are finally adopted and made effective, thus bringing this century-old controversy to a final conclusion, which is equally beneficial and satisfactory to both Governments.

IMPERIAL VALLEY AND MEXICO.

In order to make possible the more effective performance of the work necessary for the confinement in their present channel of the waters of the lower Colorado River, and thus to protect the people of the Imperial Valley, as well as in order to reach with the Government of Mexico an understanding regarding the distribution of the waters of the Colorado River, in which both Governments are much interested, negotiations are going forward with a view to the establishment of a preliminary Colorado River commission, which shall have the powers necessary to enable it to do the needful work and with authority to study the question of the equitable distribution of the waters. There is every reason to believe that an understanding upon this point will be reached and that an agreement will be signed in the near future.

CHAMIZAL DISPUTE.

In the interest of the people and city of El Paso this Government has been assiduous in its efforts to bring to an early settlement the long-standing Chamizal dispute with Mexico. Much has been accomplished, and while the final solution of the dispute is not immediate, the favorable attitude lately assumed by the Mexican Government encourages the hope that this troublesome question will be satisfactorily and definitely settled at an early day.

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF JURISTS.

In pursuance of the convention of August 23, 1906, signed at the Third Pan American Conference, held at Rio de Janeiro, the International Commission of Jurists met at that capital during the month of last June. At this meeting 16 American Republics were represented, including the United States, and comprehensive plans for the future work of the commission were adopted. At the next meeting, fixed for June, 1914, committees already appointed are instructed to report regarding topics assigned to them.

OPIUM CONFERENCE—UNFORTUNATE FAILURE OF OUR GOVERNMENT TO ENACT RECOMMENDED LEGISLATION.

In my message on foreign relations communicated to the two Houses of Congress December 7, 1911, I called especial attention to the assembling of the Opium Conference at The Hague, to the fact that that conference was to review all pertinent municipal laws relating to the opium and allied evils, and certainly all international rules regarding these evils, and to the fact that it seemed to me most essential that the Congress should take immediate action on the antinarcotic legislation before the Congress, to which I had previously called attention_by a special message

The international convention adopted by the conference conforms almost entirely to the principles contained in the proposed antinarcotic legislation which has been before the last two Congresses. It was most unfortunate that this Government, having taken the initiative in the international action which eventuated in the important international opium convention, failed to do its share in the great work by neglecting to pass the necessary legislation to correct the deplorable narcotic evil in the United States as well as to redeem international pledges upon which it entered by virtue of the above-mentioned convention. The Congress at its present session should enact into law those bills now before it which have been so carefully drawn up in collaboration between the Department of State and the other executive departments, and which have behind them not only the moral sentiment of the country but the practical support of all the legitimate trade interests likely to be affected. Since the international convention was signed, adherence to it has been made by several European States not represented at the conference at The Hague and also by 17 Latin-American Republics.

EUROPE AND THE NEAR EAST.

The war between Italy and Turkey came to a close in October last by the signature of a treaty of peace, subsequently to which the Ottoman Empire renounced sovereignty over Cyrenaica and Tripolitania in favor of Italy. During the past year the Near East has unfortunately been the theater of constant Almost simultaneously with the conclusion of peace between Italy and Turkey and their arrival at an adjustment of the complex questions at issue between them, war broke out between Turkey on the one hand and Bulgaria, Greece, Montenegro, and Servia on the other. The United States has happily been involved neither directly nor indirectly with the causes or questions incident to any of these hostilities and has maintained in regard to them an attitude of absolute neutrality and of compolitical disinterestedness. In the second war in which the Ottoman Empire has been engaged the loss of life and the consequent distress on both sides have been appalling, and the United States has found occasion, in the interest of humanity, to carry out the charitable desires of the American people, to extend a measure of relief to the sufferers on either side through the impartial medium of the Red Cross. Beyond this the chief care of the Government of the United States has been to make due provision for the protection of its nationals resident in belligerent territory. In the exercise of my duty in this matter I have dispatched to Turkish waters a special-service squadron, consisting of two armored cruisers, in order that this Government may if need be bear its part in such measures as it may be necessary for the interested nations to adopt for the safeguarding of foreign lives and property in the Ottoman Empire in the event that a dangerous situation should develop. In the meanwhile the several interested European powers have promised to extend to American citizens the benefit of such precautionary or protective measures as they might adopt, in the same manner in which it has been the practice of this Government to extend its protection to all foreigners resident in those countries of the Western Hemisphere in which it has from time to time been the task of the United States to act in the interest of peace and good order. The early appearance of a large fleet of European warships in the Bosphorus apparently assured the protection of foreigners in that quarter, where the presence of the American stationnaire the U.S. S. Scorpion sufficed, under the circumstances, to represent the United States. Our cruisers were thus left free to act if need be along the Mediterranean coasts should any unexpected contingency arise affecting the numerous American interests in the neighborhood of Smyrna and Beirut.

SPITZBERGEN.

The great preponderance of American material interests in the subarctic island of Spitzbergen, which has always been tegarded politically as "no man's land," impels this Government to a continued and lively interest in the international dispositions to be made for the political goverance and administration of that region. The conflict of certain claims of American citizens and others is in a fair way to adjustment, while the settlement of matters of administration, whether by international conference of the interested powers or otherwise, continues to be the subject of exchange of views between the Governments concerned.

LIBERIA.

As a result of the efforts of this Government to place the Government of Liberia in position to pay its outstanding indebtedness and to maintain a stable and efficient government, negotiations for a loan of $1,700,000 have been successfully concluded, and it is anticipated that the payment of the old loan and the issuance of the bonds of the 1912 loan for the rehabilitation of the finances of Liberia will follow at an early date, when the new receivership will go into active operation. The new receivership will consist of a general receiver of customs designated by the Government of the United States and three receivers of customs designated by the Governments of Germany, France, and Great Britain, which countries have commercial interests in the Republic of Liberia.

In carrying out the understanding between the Government of Liberia and that of the United States, and in fulfilling the terms of the agreement between the former Government and the American bankers, three competent ex-army officers are now effectively employed by the Liberian Government in reorganizing the police force of the Republic, not only to keep in order the native tribes in the hinterland but to serve as a necessary police force along the frontier. It is hoped that these measures will assure not only the continued existence but the prosperity and welfare of the Republic of Liberia. Liberia possesses fertility of soil and natural resources which should insure to its people a reasonable prosperity. It was the duty of the United States to assist the Republic of Liberia in accordance with our historical interest and moral guardianship of a community founded by American citizens, as it was also the duty of the American Government to attempt to assure permanence to a country of much sentimental and perhaps future real interest to a large body of our citizens.

MOROCCO.

The legation at Tangier is now in charge of our consul general, who is acting as chargé d'affaires, as well as caring for our commercial interests in that country. In view of the fact that many of the foreign powers are now represented by chargés d'affaires it has not been deemed necessary to appoint at the present time a minister to fill a vacancy occurring in that post.

THE FAR EAST.

The political disturbances in China in the autumn and winter of 1911–12 resulted in the abdication of the Manchu rulers on February 12, followed by the formation of a provisional republican government empowered to conduct the affairs of the nation until a permanent government might be regularly established. The natural sympathy of the American people with the assumption of republican principles by the Chinese people was appropriately expressed in a concurrent resolution of Congress on April 17, 1912. A constituent assembly, composed of representatives duly chosen by the people of China in the elections that are now being held, has been called to meet in January next to adopt a permanent constitution and organize the Government of the nascent Republic. During the formative constitutional stage and pending definitive action by the assembly, as expressive of the popular will, and the hoped-for establishment of a stable republican form of government, capable of fulfilling its international obligations, the United States is, according to precedent, maintaining full and friendly de facto relations with the provisional Government.

The new condition of affairs thus created has presented many serious and complicated problems, both of internal rehabilitation and of international relations, whose solution it was realized would necessarily require much time and patience. From the beginning of the upheaval last autumn it was felt by the United States, in common with the other powers having large interests in China, that independent action by the foreign Governments in their own individual interests would add further confusion to a situation already complicated. A policy of international cooperation was accordingly adopted in an understanding, reached early in the disturbances, to act together for the protection of the lives and property of foreigners if menaced, to maintain an attitude of strict impartiality as between the contending factions, and to abstain from any endeavor to influence the Chinese in their organization of a new form of government. In view of the seriousness of the disturbances and their general character, the American minister at Peking was instructed at his discretion to advise our nationals in the affected districts to concentrate at such centers as were easily accessible to foreign troops or men of war. Nineteen of our naval vessels were stationed at various Chinese ports, and other measures were promptly taken for the adequate protection of American

It was further mutually agreed, in the hope of hastening an end to hostilities, that none of the interested powers would approve the making of loans by its nationals to either side. soon, however, as a united provisional Government of China was assured, the United States joined in a favorable consideration of that Government's request for advances needed for immediate administrative necessities and later for a loan to effect a permanent national reorganization. The interested Governments had already, by common consent, adopted, in respect to the purposes, expenditure, and security of any loans to China made by their nationals, certain conditions which were held to be essential, not only to secure reasonable protection for the foreign investors, but also to safeguard and strengthen China's credit by discouraging indiscriminate borrowing and by insuring the application of the funds toward the establishment of the stable and effective government necessary to China's welfare. In June last representative banking groups of the United States, France, Germany, Great Britain, Japan, and Russia formulated, with the general sanction of their respective Governments, the guaranties that would be expected in relation to the expenditure and security of the large reorganization loan desired by China, which, however, have thus far proved unacceptable to the provisional Government.

SPECIAL MISSION OF CONDOLENCE TO JAPAN.

In August last I accredited the Secretary of State as special ambassador to Japan, charged with the mission of bearing to the imperial family, the Government, and the people of that Empire the sympathetic message of the American Commonwealth on the sad occasion of the death of His Majesty the Emperor Mutsuhito, whose long and benevolent reign was the greater part of Japan's modern history. The kindly reception everywhere accorded to Secretary Knox showed that his mission was deeply appreciated by the Japanese nation and emphasized strongly the friendly relations that have for so many years existed between the two peoples.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Our relations with the Argentine Republic are most friendly and cordial. So, also, are our relations with Brazil, whose Government has accepted the invitation of the United States to send two army officers to study at the Coast Artillery School at Fort Monroe. The long-standing Alsop claim, which had been the only hindrance to the healthy growth of the most friendly relations between the United States and Chile, having been eliminated through the submission of the question to His Britannic Majesty King George V as "amiable compositeur," it is a cause of much gratification to me that our relations with Chile are now established upon a firm basis of growing friendship. The Chilean Government has placed an officer of the United States Coast Artillery in charge of the Chilean Coast Artillery School, and has shown appreciation of American methods by confiding to an American firm important work for the Chilean coast defenses.

Last year a revolution against the established Government of Ecuador broke out at the principal port of that Republic. Previous to this occurrence the chief American interest in Ecuador, represented by the Guayaquil & Quito Railway Co., incorporated in the United States, had rendered extensive transportation and other services on account to the Ecuadorian Government, the amount of which ran into a sum which was steadily increasing and which the Ecuadorian Government had made no provision to pay, thereby threatening to crush out the very existence of this American enterprise. When tranquillity had been restored to Ecuador as a result of the triumphant progress of the Government forces from Quito, this Government interposed its good offices to the end that the American interests in Ecuador might be saved from complete extinction. As a part of the arrangement which was reached between the parties, and at the request of the Government of Ecuador, I have consented to name an arbitrator, who, acting under the terms of the railroad contract, with an arbitrator named by the Ecuadorian Government, will pass upon the claims that have arisen since the arrangement reached through the action of a similar arbitral tribunal in 1908.

In pursuance of a request made some time ago by the Ecuadorian Government, the Department of State has given much attention to the problem of the proper sanitation of Guayaquil. As a result a detail of officers of the Canal Zone will be sent to Guayaquil to recommend measures that will lead to the complete permanent sanitation of this plague and fever infected region of that Republic, which has for so long constituted a menace to health conditions on the Canal Zone. It is hoped that the report which this mission will furnish will point out a way whereby the modicum of assistance which the United States may properly lend the Ecuadorian Government may be made effective in ridding the west coast of South America of a focus of contagion to the future commercial current passing through the Panama Canal.

In the matter of the claim of John Celestine Landreau against the Government of Peru, which claim arises out of certain contracts and transactions in connection with the discovery and exploitation of guano, and which has been under discussion between the two Governments since 1874, I am glad to report that as the result of prolonged negotiations, which have been characterized by the utmost friendliness and good will on both sides, the Department of State has succeeded in securing the consent of Peru to the arbitration of the claim, and that the negotiations attending the drafting and signature of a protocol submitting the claim to an arbitral tribunal are proceeding with due celerity.

An officer of the American Public Health Service and an American sanitary engineer are now on the way to Iquitos, in the employ of the Peruvian Government, to take charge of the sanitation of that river port. Peru is building a number of submarines in this country and continues to show every desire to have American capital invested in the Republic.

In July the United States sent undergraduate delegates to the Third International Students' Congress held at Lima, American students having been for the first time invited to one of these meetings.

The Republic of Uruguay has shown its appreciation of American agricultural and other methods by sending a large commission to this country and by employing many American experts to assist in building up agricultural and allied industries in Uruguay.

Venezuela is paying off the last of the claims the settlement of which was provided for by the Washington protocols, including those of American citizens. Our relations with Venezuela are most cordial, and the trade of that Republic with the United States is now greater than with any other country.

CENTRAL AMERICA AND THE CARIBBEAN.

During the past summer the revolution against the administration which followed the assassination of President Caceres a year ago last November brought the Dominican Republic to the verge of administrative chaos, without offering any guaranties of eventual stability in the ultimate success of either party. In pursuance of the treaty relations of the United States with the Dominican Republic, which were threatened by the necessity of suspending the operation under American administration of the customhouses on the Haitian frontier, it was found necessary to dispatch special commissioners to the island to reestablish the customhouses and with a guard sufficient to insure needed protection to the customs administration. The efforts which have been made appear to have resulted in the restoration of normal conditions throughout the Republic. The good offices which the commissioners were able to exercise were instrumental in bringing the contending parties together and in furnishing a basis of adjustment which it is hoped will result in permanent benefit to the Dominican people.

Mindful of its treaty relations, and owing to the position of the Government of the United States as mediator between the Dominican Republic and Haiti in their boundary dispute, and because of the further fact that the revolutionary activities on the Haitian-Dominican frontier had become so active as practically to obliterate the line of demarcation that had been heretofore recognized pending the definitive settlement of the boundary in controversy, it was found necessary to indicate to the two island Governments a provisional de facto boundary line. This was done without prejudice to the rights or obligations of either country in a final settlement to be reached by arbitration. The tentative line chosen was one which, under the circumstances brought to the knowledge of this Government, seemed to conform to the best interests of the disputants. The border patrol which it had been found necessary to reestablish for customs purposes between the two countries was instructed provisionally to observe this line.

The Republic of Cuba last May was in the throes of a lawless uprising that for a time threatened the destruction of a great deal of valuable property—much of it owned by Americans and other foreigners—as well as the existence of the Government itself. The armed forces of Cuba being inadequate to guard property from attack and at the same time properly to operate against the rebels, a force of American marines was dispatched from our naval station at Guantanamo into the Province of Oriente for the protection of American and other foreign life and property. The Cuban Government was thus able to use all its forces in putting down the outbreak, which it succeeded in doing in a period of six weeks. The presence of two American warships in the harbor of Habana during the most critical period of this disturbance contributed in great measure to allay the fears of the inhabitants, including a large foreign colony. There has been under discussion with the Government of Cuba for some time the question of the release by this Government of its leasehold rights at Bahia Honda, on the northern coast of Cuba, and the enlargement, in exchange therefor, of the naval station which has been established at Guantanamo Bay, on the south. As the result of the negotiations thus carried on an agreement has been reached between the two Governments providing for the suitable enlargement of the Guantanamo Bay station upon terms which are entirely fair and equitable to all parties concerned.

At the request alike of the Government and both political parties in Panama, an American commission undertook supervision of the recent presidential election in that Republic, where our treaty relations, and, indeed, every geographical consideration, make the maintenance of order and satisfactory conditions of peculiar interest to the Government of the United States. The elections passed without disorder, and the new administration has entered upon its functions, The Government of Great Britain has asked the support of the United States for the protection of the interests of British holders of the foreign bonded debt of Guatemala. Government is hopeful of an arrangement equitable to the British bondholders, it is naturally unable to view the question apart from its relation to the broad subject of financial stability in Central America, in which the policy of the United States does not permit it to escape a vital interest. Through a renewal of negotiations between the Government of Guatemala and American bankers, the aim of which is a loan for the rehabilitation of Guatemalan finances, a way appears to be open by which the Government of Guatemala could promptly satisfy any equitable and just British claims, and at the same time so improve its whole financial position as to contribute greatly to the increased prosperity of the Republic and to redound to the benefit of foreign investments and foreign trade with that Failing such an arrangement, it may become impossible for the Government of the United States to escape its obligations in connection with such measures as may become necessary to exact justice to legitimate foreign claims.

In the recent revolution in Nicaragua which, it was generally admitted, might well have resulted in a general Central American conflict but for the intervention of the United States, the Government of Honduras was especially menaced; but fortunately peaceful conditions were maintained within the borders of that Republic. The financial condition of that country remains unchanged, no means having been found for the final adjustment of pressing outstanding foreign claims. This makes it the more regrettable that the financial convention between the United States and Honduras has thus far failed of ratification. The Government of the United States continues to hold itself ready to cooperate with the Government of Honduras, which, it is believed, can not much longer delay the meeting of of its foreign obligations, and it is hoped at the proper time American bankers will be willing to cooperate for this purpose. NECESSITY FOR GREATER GOVERNMENTAL EFFORT IN RETENTION AND EXPANSION OF OUR FOREIGN TRADE.

It is not possible to make to the Congress a communication upon the present foreign relations of the United States so detailed as to convey an adequate impression of the enormous increase in the importance and activities of those relations. If this Government is really to preserve to the American people that free opportunity in foreign markets which will soon be indispensable to our prosperity, even greater efforts must be made. Otherwise the American merchant, manufacturer, and exporter will find many a field in which American trade should logically predominate preempted through the more energetic efforts of other governments and other commercial nations.

There are many ways in which through hearty cooperation the legislative and executive branches of this Government can do much. The absolute essential is the spirit of united effort and singleness of purpose. I will allude only to a very few specific examples of action which ought then to result. can not take its proper place in the most important fields for its commercial activity and enterprise unless we have a merchant marine. American commerce and enterprise can not be effectively fostered in those fields unless we have good American banks in the countries referred to. We need American newspapers in those countries and proper means for public information about them. We need to assure the permanency of a trained foreign service. We need legislation enabling the members of the foreign service to be systematically brought in direct contact with the industrial, manufacturing, and exporting interests of this country in order that American business men may enter the foreign field with a clear perception of the exact conditions to be dealt with and the officers themselves may prosecute their work with a clear idea of what American industrial and manufacturing interests require.

CONCLUSION.

Congress should fully realize the conditions which obtain in the world as we find ourselves at the threshold of our middle age as a Nation. We have emerged full grown as a peer in the great concourse of nations. We have passed through various formative periods. We have been self-centered in the struggle to develop our domestic resources and deal with our domestic The Nation is now too mature to continue in its foreign relations those temporary expedients natural to a people to whom domestic affairs are the sole concern. In the past our diplomacy has often consisted, in normal times, in a mere assertion of the right to international existence. We are now in a larger relation with broader rights of our own and obligations to others than ourselves. A number of great guiding principles were laid down early in the history of this Government. The recent task of our diplomacy has been to adjust those principles to the conditions of to-day, to develop their corollaries, to find practical applications of the old principles expanded to meet new situations. Thus are being evolved bases upon which can rest the superstructure of policies which must grow with the destined progress of this Nation. The successful conduct of our foreign relations demands a broad and a modern view. We can not meet new questions nor build for the future if we confine ourselves to outworn dogmas of the past and to the perspective appropriate at our emergence from colonial times and condi-The opening of the Panama Canal will mark a new era in our international life and create new and world-wide conditions which, with their vast correlations and consequences, will obtain for hundreds of years to come. We must not wait for events to overtake us unawares. With continuity of purpose we must deal with the problems of our external relations by a diplomacy modern, resourceful, magnanimous, and fittingly expressive of the high ideals of a great nation.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 3, 1912.

PHYSICAL VALUATION OF RAILROADS.

Mr. Speaker, I call up House bill 22593, to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, by providing for physical valuation of the property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks and bonds and boards of directors, made privileged under a special order of the House, and ask for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. SIMS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill mentioned, and, pending that motion, I wish to ask if there can not be some arrangement made as to general I believe the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Stevens]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 22593, for the physical valuation of railroads, and, pending that, he desires to make some arrangement about the length of time to be consumed in debate.

Mr. SIMS. About how much time does the gentleman from Minnesota desire for general debate?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I think, Mr. Speaker, that this side would like about two hours.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman mean two hours for that side?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes. The time that has been asked for will consume nearly two hours. It is a very important subject, and quite a number of bills have been presented to the committee, and quite a number of gentlemen desire to discuss their measures.

Mr. SIMS. I am anxious, under the request of the Chair, to try and get the bill passed this afternoon.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I have half a dozen bills here, and the authors of those bills desire time in which to discuss this very important matter.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman think we can complete the consideration of the bill this afternoon under the five-minute

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. There are some amendments to be offered. I have some amendments, and I understand others have some which they desire to offer under the fiveminute rule, but the consideration of those amendments ought not to consume very much time. They are for the correction of obvious defects in the bill.

Mr. SIMS. If we conclude the general debate in less than four hours, the gentleman will have no objection to taking up the bill under the five-minute rule?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Not at all. We desire to expedite the passage of the bill. We have no objection whatever to the general features of it.

Mr. SIMS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the general debate on this bill be limited to four hours, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Stevens] to control one half of that time and myself to control the other half.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] asks that the general debate on this bill be limited to four hours, two hours on a side, one-half the time to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS].

Mr. SIMS. With the understanding that if we consume less time than that, we may enter upon the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule at the conclusion of the general debate.

The SPEAKER. And with the further understanding that the general debate will not necessarily have to run four hours, but that if it runs out in less time, then the bill may be taken up under the five-minute rule. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union,

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 22593) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, by providing for physical valuation of the property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks and bonds and boards of directors, with Mr. RAINEY in the chair.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill,

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important bill, as its title indicates. It was introduced by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson], and was reported by him. It was his intention to call up the bill this morning under the special rule which authorizes it to be called up, and he had intended to take charge of it himself. As the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson] reported the bill, some members of the committee, I for one, did not give to its details that attention that would have been given had I expected to have charge of it on the floor of the House.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Adamson] was called home this morning by a telegram announcing the serious and dangerous illness of Mrs. Adamson. In view of the fact that he is so familiar with this subject, and that he wrote the report, I ask that the report be read in my time as a part of my

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will read the report in the time of the gentleman from Tennessee.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

read the report in the time of the gentleman from Tennessee. There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2503) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, by providing for physical valuation of the property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks and bonds and boards of directors, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass,

The Interstate Commerce Commission in its annual reports has often set forth the importance of an official valuation of the property of the carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce. The difficulties encountered in the effort to correct rates through the claims as to valuate the property of the carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce. The difficulties encountered in the effort to correct rates through the claims as to value have have have set sees spont the element of valuation as a factor in determining rates. The people not only acquiesce in those views but they desire accurate information on the subject. Perhaps at one time or another every Member of the House of Representatives who has served more than one term has voted to authorize such official valuation. It seems to be universally favored regardless of partisan lines. Not less important is the matter of information as to the stocks and bonds of the carrier corporations, the manipulation of the finances which control those carriers, and the boards of directors, stockholders, and bondholders themselves, who really give direction to all their affairs, grown up in the courts themselves as well as the commission, that public carriers are to be allowed to charge an income on what they owe as well as on what they own. Nobody else in the world with whom we are acquainted is allowed that privilege. First, there is a claim set up of the investment, actual or watered, and an income is allowed

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, the very able and clear report which has just been read, and which was prepared by the chairman of the committee, Mr. Adamson, explains the objects and purposes of the bill. This is not a new subject. This matter has been before the committee many years, as I am informed by Members who have served longer than I have on the committee. The question of the physical valuation of the property of common carriers is made necessary in every question in which the reasonableness of a rate is involved in the courts and before the Interstate Commerce Commission and before the various State commissions. I am informed by those who have served longer than I have on the committee that this bill, or similar bills, have been favorably reported frequently by the committee. This is a unanimous report from the committee. There is no objection to the bill that I know of coming from any member of the committee, and for the present, not knowing what objections, if any, there may be to the bill, I will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Would not the gentleman be willing to inform the House what the bill does do?

Mr. SIMS. The bill speaks for itself. The report analyzes the bill and states the objects and purposes of the bill, I expect, with more clearness and precision than I am prepared to do.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman from Tennessee always speaks with clearness of definition in the House, and I am sure he will be able to explain what this bill will accomplish.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman from Illinois mean what the effect of the bill will be?

Mr. MANN. What will be done under the provisions of the

Mr. SIMS. The bill states what ought to be done, what is expected, and what will be done.

Mr. MANN. If we should proceed on that theory we never would have any speeches explaining a measure, but only the reading of the bill. The bill always speaks for itself. Still, it seems to me, the gentleman from Tennessee ought to explain the provisions of the bill so that it will be in the RECORD.

Mr. SIMS. At present, Mr. Chairman, while I would like very much to grant the gentleman's request, but inasmuch as this is a unanimous report of the committee, put in shape by the chairman of the committee, it seems to me that any statement of mine would be a mere repetition at least in substance, and at present I hope the gentleman from Illinois will excuse me from taking further time of the committee in explaining the bill

Mr. MANN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question in reference to the provisions of the bill, as he is familiar with it. I notice, next to the last paragraph of the bill, on page 6, there is a penalty provision which provides that in case of failure or refusal on the part of any carrier, receiver, or trustee to comply with all the requirements of this act, and so forth, he shall forfeit $500 for each such offense. The language "this act" there means, as I understand it, the inter-state-commerce act, because this is a new section of the interstate-commerce act. Here is a penalty provision relating to the failure to comply with all the requirements of the interstatecommerce act, but there are now many penalty provisions in the interstate-commerce act itself. The question I want to ask the gentleman is, Would not this operate as a repeal, this being a new provision relating to penalty, assuming that you can not have two penalties for the same violation of the law?

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I think this amendment which has just been read, which is an amendment to the interstatecommerce law, has reference to the penalty that will be applied to the violation of the provisions of this amendment and will not apply to the entire interstate-commerce act. That is my opinion.

Mr. SABATH I think it is quite clear, Mr. Chairman, that the language of this section applies to the refusal of the carrier, receiver, or trustee in this section alone.

Mr. MANN. I think my colleague from Illinois did not hear what I read from the bill. Immediately following the provision which my colleague refers to is a provision relating to the requirements of the act. The act is the interstate-commerce act, and it is so treated in all amendments of the interstate-commerce act.

Mr. SABATH. I notice what the gentleman has in mind. Mr. MANN. I think that ought to be made the provisions of the section, because some of the penalties provided in the interstate-commerce act are much more onerous than the penalties provided in this section. I did not know whether there was any reason for it or not.

Mr. SIMS. Of course it is not the purpose of the committee to relax, reduce, or minimize any penalty now in the law with reference to other matters.

Mr. MANN. I am quite sure that is not the desire of the committee.

Mr. SIMS. And the words "this act," I feel, were intended to apply only to this section. I think that would be a fair construction, especially in penal cases. Mr. MANN. I think that would not be the construction given by the act, because in all the amendments to the interstatecommerce act, and there are many of them, wherever the term "this act" is used in any of the amended sections it means the entire interstate-commerce act and not the act making the amendment. Mr. SIMS. And if it should be thought by the committee that the word "act" should be stricken out and the word "section" inserted in lieu thereof, of course that can be done when we consider the bill under the five-minute rule. As I stated before, I did not prepare this bill.

Mr. MANN. I thought possibly it would be easier to arrive at an understanding now than it would be when we had exhausted the general debate.

Mr. SIMS. I would not be willing myself to say what the committee would be willing to do without consulting the other members of the committee.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman sits down I desire to ask him a question. It is stated in the report here that a measure similar to this has been voted for by the Members of the House who have attended more than one session of Congress. No such bill as this has ever passed the House, has it?

Mr. SIMS. I can not state from my own knowledge. I have been a member of this committee only one Congress prior to this Congress

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, I think I can answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Certainly.

Mr. MANN. When there was up for consideration in the last Congress a bill to amend the interstate-commerce law, on the floor of the House my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] offered an amendment very similar to the provisions of this bill, providing for the physical valuation of railroads, which amendment was agreed to. In conference I tried to have that provision retained, but was unable to do so. It was not in the law when it was enacted. The provision went out in conference.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time, and ask that the gentleman from Minnesota now use some of his

IMr. STEVENS of Minnesota addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cullor], a member of the committee, such time as he may desire to use.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this measure is to ascertain the physical valuation of the railroads, for the purpose of preventing impositions on the public, in the sale of capital stock, bonds, and the fixing of transportation charges.

There can be no question that there is a demand for such legislation, and the object of this bill is to satisfy that demand.

Railroad rates are to-day fixed in a manner which is absolutely unjust to the ultimate consumers and the shippers of the Transportation rates are fixed on three items of consideration as the basis, first, to pay operating expenses and improvement charges; second, to pay interest on the bonded indebtedness; and, third, to pay a reasonable dividend upon the capital stock. The first basis is just. The second is absolutely wrong, and if the second and third are both employed, as is now done, they constitute a double charge upon the shipping public, which must be paid by the ultimate consumers of the country and thereby constitutes a burden on them. It is not fair to charge a rate that will make a sufficient earning to pay the interest on the bonded indebtedness and a dividend on the capital stock. Either the money raised by the bonded indebtedness went into the pockets of the owners of the railroad as a net profit, or it was invested in the construction and equipment of the road. If, therefore, a rate is charged which will create earnings to pay the interest on the bonded indebtedness and also a dividend on the capital stock-which more than covers every dollar of bonded indebtedness-such a basis necessarily constitutes a double charge. For that reason the present basis of fixing railroad rates in this country is absolutely erroneous, and gives the owners an unjust advantage over other business enterprises.

I call attention to the fact that the ultimate consumer necessarily pays every dollar of freight rates imposed in this country. Those freight rates are a charge upon the products which are shipped, and are added to the cost price, which the ultimate consumer must inevitably pay. He suffers the unjust consequences of such a method and bears the burden of the intolerable system.

Again it is a well-known fact that there is an overcapitalization of nearly every railroad in the country. The capital stock, as a usual thing, is more than double the actual cost of the building and equipping of the railroad. In many instances not only is the capital stock double the amount of the bonded indebtedness, but sometimes three or four times the value of the road, and in many instances the bonded indebtedness, the mortgage indebtedness, of the railroad is greater than the actual cost of the building and equipping of the road itself. So that, therefore, to charge a freight rate and fix it on the basis now employed enough to pay the interest on the bonded indebtedness and a dividend on the capital stock is an outrage against the ultimate consumers of the country. It is this manner of fixing rates as now employed in this country, this manner of fixing transportation charges by the great common carriers of the country, which retards the development of the country and prevents the full realization on investments in other industrial

Many things are produced on the farm and in the factories for which there is a demand in the congested centers of population, but because the cost of the conveyance of these things from the point of production to the point of consumption is so expensive such articles can not enter the commerce of the country and are valueless to the producer. The manner in which these rates are fixed does injury to the investment of the people in other lines of business as well as to the ultimate consumers of the country. Producers and consumers are affected alike.

That is why a new policy and a new system for the levying of transportation rates should be adopted by every line of common carriers throughout the country. This is why the demand for this legislation is so universal and is hailed as a relief.

Some objection has been made to this measure because of its cost. On this subject I wish to call the attention of the committee to what the institution of this system of ascertaining the physical valuation of railroads would cost the country. I want to read from the testimony of Judge Clements, a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, upon this subject. On page 4 of the hearings before the committee he said:

of the hearings before the committee he said:

Speaking of the probable cost, it is, of course, very difficult even to make an estimate that would be at all reliable. Prof. Adams, who was our former statistician, and who was employed as a special agent of the commission to aid us in putting in practice the operation of a system of bookkeeping and accounting of reports under the twentieth section of the Hepburn Act, considered this matter when he was with us a few years ago, and his final estimate was, as well as he could judge, that it would probably take $3,000,000 for valuation. He had previously made a smaller estimate than that, but on account of increased mileage and a review of what would probably be necessary in the way of employing a sufficient corps of engineers and experts to do this work, and do it accurately and satisfactorily, he revised his estimate and, in the year 1908, when this subject was up, expressed the view, in connection with a bill that was pending before the Senate committee and some correspondence we had with President Roosevelt, that it would probably take $3,000,000. Mr. Adams had aided in making the valuation in Michigan of the railroads in that State some years ago, which I understand was made for taxation purposes.

Now, it may be further added that it will probably take from

Now, it may be further added that it will probably take from three to five years' time to do this work properly, thoroughly, and well. This demand made for the revision of the method of levying rates now requires early action in order to afford the facilities necessary to aid the public in seeking lower rates for transportation and relief from unjust burdens which bear heavily on the business of the entire country.

There is another thing about this bill that ought to be considered, and that is that it will to a large degree, if not altogether, stop the overcapitalization of railroads and the overbonding of them. It will stop the imposition which to-day and for years has been practiced, the abuse of selling watered stocks and inflated bonds to innocent purchasers. I am aware of one argument that will be made against it, and that is that these stocks have passed into the hands of widows and orphans of the country and superannuated preachers. I take it that that argument is not sufficient in the mind of any gentleman upon this floor to oppose the passage of such a measure as this. If such people have been unfortunate in their investments, they must stand upon the same basis with other people who have been likewise unfortunate. But it is not fair to 90,000,000 of people that they should be required to pay unjust and enormous transportation tolls and have the development of our country restricted in order that the investments of a few may be made safe and good. Better it would be that Congress would appropriate the money to make restitution to them than to impose upon 90,000,000 of people, as is being done now in the fixing of transportation rates in this country, and retarding the commerce of a great country. It would be cheaper to the people in the end.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. I will. Mr. COX of Indiana. In that connection I want to ask this question, if I can make myself plain to the gentleman. I do not remember the total bonded indebtedness of the railroads, but it is several billion dollars.

Mr. CULLOP. And then some.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I do not remember the total capitalization; but the gentleman stated a moment ago, and I think truthfully, that now railroads charge freight rates with the view of paying the interest on fixed charges, and some of the fixed charges are the bonded indebtedness of the railroads. Suppose this bill becomes a law, and then suppose the commission finds that certain railroads in this country are overcapitalized—that they have more bonds issued which are making fixed charges against the railroad than are really necessary. Does not the gentleman believe that still the railroads will have the right to fix their freight rates with a view to meeting those fixed charges?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I will answer the gentleman in this way. It is the object of this bill, according to my understanding, that the capital stock and bonded indebtedness should have nothing whatever to do with the fixing of the railroad rates in this country. It should be the policy of the Govern-ment that private business is never to be guaranteed; and if the owners of railroads make bad investments in their business methods, make extravagant purchases, and the construction of the roads is imprudently done, then the innocent public should never, as a matter of common justice, be taxed to make up for the errors of any man's business judgment. It is not right as a public policy, and it is not the intention, I will say to the gentleman, to let the bonded indebtedness or the overcapitalization, the creation of great financiers, those engaged in high finance, be the subjects for the plunder of the innocent people of the country or to retard the development of the greatest country on earth, as is now being done. In every line of business men suffer for their own mistakes in judgment and not the public.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman permit me further?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly. Mr. COX of Indiana. Right in that connection, that may all be true, but does the gentleman believe that the Supreme Court of the United States would stand for the Interstate Commerce Commission or any other power fixing freight rates to the extent that the freight rates thus fixed would become confiscatory of the bonded indebtedness or capitalization of the railroads of the country?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, the term "confiscation" has been used as a scarecrow in this country for more than a quarter of a century. It has been made do overtime. Why should the Government guarantee anybody's private investment? has no more right to do that than to guarantee the investment of a man in his farm, in a store, or in a factory.

Yet it is proposed by some that when a man undertakes to build a public utility, building it for making profit, for earning money on his investment, the Government ought to step in and permit him to fleece the public in order to make his business successful. Such a proposition is indefensible, and whenever presented it should be rebuked. Governments were instituted for the benefit of the governed and not the governed for the benefit of governments. Courts should uphold, if it can reasonably be done, the will of the people as expressed by their lawmaking powers, and the principle involved in this measure is not repugnant to the rule of our courts so far expressed on similar questions.

To-day, under the method in which railroad rates are levied, the basis employed, there is not a railroad in the country that can lose money if it employs intelligent business methods. If it does not earn profits, it is because of its bad business management. Against this no legislation could safely be enacted which would assure good business management.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for one other question?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Does he believe it would be just and equitable to any person, innocent or otherwise, who is the holder of railroad stock or bonds, for any commission or power to fix freight rates to the ex-tent that the railroad company that had issued the bonds or the stock would be unable to meet those obligations when they fell

Mr. CULLOP. Which side does the gentleman mean to be fair and just to? There are two sides. I want to be fair and just to both; but that question implies to be fair to only one side, and that is the railroad side of the question. The public, which bears the burdens, have some rights which should not

Mr. COX of Indiana. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. I mean the investors in the stock.

Mr. CULLOP. But it was the duty of the investor in the stock to examine before he invested. If he was careless, he must suffer the consequences.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Suppose he did examine before he invested and satisfied himself that he was safe in investing his money?

Mr. CULLOP. Then he stands upon the same basis as every other investor in this country. He can ask no more and should expect no less.

Mr. COX of Indiana. He stands upon the basis, then, of an innocent purchaser for value.

Mr. CULLOP. No; he took his chances. He was not an innocent purchaser if he knew there was more capital stock than the property was worth. If he purchased inflated stock he, rather than the public, should suffer.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But suppose he did not know that? Mr. CULLOP. But it was his duty to examine and see. He was not an innocent purchaser if he knew or by vigilance could have known there were more bonds or stock issued than the railroad was worth.

Mr. COX of Indiana. But perhaps the fault might have been in Congress or in some other legislative body.

Mr. CULLOP. Then his duty was to examine more carefully before he put his money into the project, and if he did not he would be estopped from complaining.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Suppose he exhausted his ability in examination? Then, does the gentleman believe that man should be cut out?

Mr. CULLOP. Then he made a bad business venture, and, like many others have done, must suffer the consequences. the same arguments were made as to the reduction of the tariff? Then revision downward could never be made—and here is a greater source of fleecing the public as now employed than ever existed by virtue of any protective tariff in this country, because where the protective tariff takes one dollar out of the pockets of the ultimate consumers the railroad companies take five every day in the year.

Now, if some man, in his zeal to buy cheap stock and earn large dividends or large interest on his investment, steps in and takes his chance with the rest of the world, he can not come to Congress and demand legislation to make it good at the expense of the public. The many who are made to suffer by it have as much right to be protected in the fruits of their toil as does the man who buys railroad stock or railroad bonds or any other speculative security.

Mr. SABATH. There is nothing in this bill that would prevent anyone from disposing of any of his stocks or bonds?

Mr. CULLOP. Nothing whatever. Every holder is at liberty to sell when he pleases.

Mr. SABATH. And anyone could easily dispose of his hold-

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly he could. Now, let us look at the origin of the present system employed. Fifteen years ago there started in a movement for legislation to make just such a thing as we have now constructed the basis upon which rates should be levied. Railroad companies increased their capital stock three, four, and five hundred per cent without adding values, Why? Because it was to be taken as the latest and the latest and the latest and the latest are Because it was to be taken as the basis for earning dividends for them on the amount of capitalization. It was well-directed and well-conceived plan to get exorbitant rates—dividends on watered stocks, on fictitious values. There was a well-directed plan to get at the basis which is now employed, and with that purpose in view the railroad companies began to increase their capital stock without additional investment of any consequence until they increased it in many instances more than three hundredfold. What was the result? Then they began to bond, and many of the best railroads of the country to-day are bonded for more than enough to build and equip them. What was the object in all of this? The object was to increase earnings, and not to improve facilities. It is the only institution so far known which earns a profit on its indebtedness. Indebtedness is always loss, but here is an instance in which indebtedness is a great profit to the transportation companies. Such has been the method all along the line in the regulation of this great busines

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield just for a question or suggestion?

Mr. CULLOP.

Mr. HARDY. It seems to me by way of answer to what the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] asked, or the proposition he has suggested, that the supreme courts themselves have already held that the standard of rate or measure of rate is not to be determined by the capitalization of the road.

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.
Mr. HARDY. And that the capitalization is only to be considered by the court, if at all, as one of the elements of evidence as to what is the real capital upon which the companies are entitled to earn a dividend, and they are entitled to earn a dividend upon nothing more than their real capital. I think that is the holding of the courts.

Mr. CULLOP. The gentleman is correct. Now, I will call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] to the cases collated in the hearings in which the doctrine is laid down in a number of them, in which the very basis that the gentleman from Indiana incorporated in his question is denied by the court and the opposite contention is sustained.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I beg the gentleman's pardon, I am not assuming any position; I was simply seeking information.

Mr. CULLOP. Well, the one involved in your question.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I was trying to get at the gentleman's views, taking it for granted that the gentleman, being a member of the committee, has given it a lot of study. I have not.

Mr. CULLOP. The courts all over the country have held, as I recall the cases, that the proper basis of levying of rates for transportation is not by taking into consideration alone the capital stock and the bonded indebtedness, but it is the real invest-ment as the true basis. The actual investment is the proper basis, and that is a fair way to look at it; that is an equitable basis that the courts ought to and do assume and which individuals ought to assume in adjusting this matter by legislation. This question has become a public matter-one of the greatest importance. Its proper solution requires the serious consideration of every lover of our country who has its welfare at heart. Every year upon the farm go to waste great values in products, cheap products, because the cost of conveyance to market is too expensive. In the congested centers of population hungry mouths are pleading for them, but the cost of transportation between the points of production and the points of consumption is so great that the people can not afford to have these products; neither the producer nor the consumer can afford to pay the cost charged for conveying them to points of consumption. Now, that is the situation which confronts us. Go to your coal mines, and to-day coal rates in the best part of the coal-mining districts of the great Mississippi Valley are so high that it hampers this great industry and retards its development. Cost of transportation eats up the profits and retards the industry.

It is the cost of transporting the coal from the mines to the places of consumption which is holding back in our country one of the greatest industries ever developed in it. It is reducing the amount of production in the manufactories. ing back industrial pursuits, because the cost of putting the goods upon the market is so great. The cheaper you make an article to the ultimate consumer the more of it is consumed. The higher you make it the less of it is consumed. And the cost of transportation to-day is doing more to affect the high cost of living than perhaps any other one item which enters into it at this time. Products which are going to waste on the farms, for which the farmer ought to realize profits on his investment, on his labor, could be, if properly regulated, transported for less money to the places where there are demands for them and thereby be of value to the country and the people who desire them and a profit to the men who produce them. But this is prevented because of the cost of transportation as levied upon the basis fixed at the present time.

It is not fair to the public that it be taxed to earn dividends on watered stock; that freight rates be fixed at such price as to pay dividends upon watered stock that cost the railroads nothing. When such a procedure is permitted nothing is turned into value, and millions are made by such a policy which have never been earned. Such a policy is unjust and unfair. This bill will in a very large measure eliminate that system and will to a certain extent wipe out the system of high financing in this country by which the innocent public is exploited so often. That is one of the objects of it, and the country will approve it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly. Mr. BUCHANAN. I am aware that there is a great difference between the price of products at the farm and the price in the cities, but I do not know that it is all due to the high freight rates. For example, I have known potatoes to sell for 30 cents a bushel on the farm and probably sell for 40 or 50 cents a peck in the cities. I am not certain that the railroad rates has all to do with that. I think commission merchants and stock exchanges have often something to do with this great difference in the cost of the price to the producer and the price to the consumer. Can the gentleman give any informa-tion in regard to that? Has there been any explanation given in the hearing?

Mr. CULLOP. I will be pleased to answer the gentleman so far as I can. I do not claim, and never have claimed, that the cost of transportation was the sole cause of the high cost of living. But I do claim it is an element which enters into it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman will please permit— Mr. CULLOP. Let me answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to get at just one thing. that due to the fact that the farmer can not often ship his produce because of not being able to get a market for it and abnormal high price for the product that the producer can not

Mr. CULLOP. In part, yes. What I do claim is that one of the items which enters into the high cost of living is the high cost of transporting the products to market. There are other items which enter into it. This bill will not eliminate all of them. We are not claiming that for it. But we must eliminate those, if we can, one by one. You will not eliminate all of them with one great legislative swoop, because there is a combination of circumstances which brings about that result, and this is one of them. Now, it is true that sometimes the want of transportation facilities does have something to do with it. The scarcity of cars, bad roads, and a number of things may enter into it which prevent producers from putting products on the market.

Why is wheat higher in the district of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] than it is in my district? Is it because he is nearer the initial market than the people of my district? The difference in transportation alone makes the difference in the price of wheat between my city and his city.

Why is wheat higher in Indiana than it is in Oklahoma? Because of the difference in the cost of the difference in distance from the initial market. Chicago is the initial wheat market for all the Mississippi Valley. Why is wheat higher in Chicago than it is in St. Louis? Because Chicago is the initial market and the cost of transportation from St. Louis to Chicago is the difference. Now, just as long as the present system prevails that long will the public have to bear this unjust burden. Just as soon as it is eliminated the burden it imposes will be removed and the producer and consumer alike will be benefited

It is unfair to the public that the Government should guarantee the investment in stocks and bonds, and yet that is the effect of the present system. If the stock and bond speculator wants to go on the market and speculate, the Government ought not to guarantee his investments. Who ought the Government to protect? The producers and consumers, and not alone the speculator who thrives by the manipulation of the stock market. The speculator is taking his chances in the mad race of specu-Should the Government throw its strong arm around him and protect his chance speculation at the expense of the innocent producer and the helpless ultimate consumer of the country, or should it protect the one who earns his living by the employment of his muscle and mind? That is the proposition involved here. For me, I want to stand by the producer: I want to help the helpless consumer of this country, and not the stock speculator who takes his chances on the opportunities of trade of this country, because he is not so deserving as the other, whoever he may be. It would give a great impetus to every manufacturing industry, to every mining industry, to every farmer in this country, and it would multiply the productions of the farm, factory, and mine, and the cheaper products which now go to waste could be put into the markets of the world where there is a demand by the ultimate consumer, and it would thereby help all.

Now, Mr. Chairman— Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. With pleasure.
Mr. FOSTER. Is there anything in this bill which excludes watered stock in railroads, or which in the future would prevent the issuance of watered stocks, or which makes the investment secure in stocks where the railroads do not go out and sell watered stocks?

Mr. CULLOP. I may state to the gentleman from Illinois that the theory of this bill is that the physical valuation of the properties shall be determined irrespective of their capitalization and their bonded indebtedness, and the rates fixed upon that, so that there will be no inducements to the overzealous speculator of the country to rush in and buy watered stock or inflated bonds

Mr. FOSTER. Well, is there anything in this bill to prevent

Mr. CULLOP. No, there is nothing to prevent it; but the basis for regulation, if adopted, will of itself prevent it. to ascertain what is watered stock, how much is overbonded indebtedness, and get at the genuine or real value of the property, and fix the transportation rates upon what the real values That is the purpose and object of the bill. Then it takes away, when fixed on that basis, the inducement to persons to buy watered stocks, because the opportunity to earn dividends on such stocks by the operation of the properties will be destroyed, and hence there will be no demand on the market for

I can say further to the gentleman, here is the trouble about that proposition in Federal legislation: These corporations, as a rule, get their charters from States and not from the National Government, and that regulation necessarily belongs to the several States of the Union. But when you fix the rate on the basis contemplated by this bill, there will be no inducement for overcapitalization or excessive bonded indebtedness.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, does the gentleman think that when this valuation is made that will prevent the issuance of watered stock by common carriers?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; I think there would be no inducement, and if there is no inducement to issue watered stocks, then none would be issued. Such stock is issued only upon the inducement that it can be sold, and if you will eliminate the inducement entirely, then you will have removed the evil from the public. Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; certainly.

Mr. ADAIR. Would not the very fact that the valuation of

Mr. ADAIR. would not the very fact that the valuation of these roads is known make it impossible to unload watered stock on the public, because the public would know the value?

Mr. CUILOP. Exactly. That is it exactly.

There is another proposition which I want to call to the attention of the committee. These companies give one valuation for purposes of taxation, to raise public revenues, and then an altogether different valuation of the property to the Interstate Commerce Commission for the basis of charging the public for service to earn revenues from the public, which all, I take it, will concede to be unfair to the public. If the roads fix one value for taxation, why should they not be bound by the same valuation for the fixing of service charges. If it is fair that they should be taxed upon a certain valuation, then it is also fair that the public should be taxed on the same valuation for the transportation services performed. I do not believe any man will deny that proposition.

The question involved in this legislation is of vast importance to the public and upon the result depends much the conditions which shall follow, whether it shall retard or accelerate the development of our country and inspire the prosperity of the people. Common carriers render public service and should be regulated to the end that the country should be benefited thereby.

We are living in an age of wonderful progress and the evolution of the times produces marvelous strides in the development of every human activity. More is being done daily and more is required to be done to aid every agency human ingenuity can employ to facilitate the progress of the times so essential to secure the contentment and happiness of the people and to inspire and accelerate the prosperity of our country. Legislation to this end is demanded in order that the requirements of public weal may be assisted and public wants supplied for the promotion of the common welfare and the general benefit of the entire public.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Esch] 10 minutes.

[Mr. ESCH addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenroot].

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote very cheerfully for this bill, although I am not wholly in favor of certain provisions of it. My chief criticism is found in the first paragraph, which is a mandate to the commission to find the value of the property of every common carrier subject to the provisions of the act and used by it for the convenience of the public. That is a mandate to the commission to find the value of the property, and the value so found is to be taken as the value for rate-making purposes.

Now I believe, Mr. Chairman, that that is a mistake, for the question is far from being settled in this country, either by judicial interpretation or legislation, as to what elements go to make up the value of the property of the railroad for ratemaking purposes. No hard and fast rule has ever been declared by any court; but the courts are unanimous upon one proposition, and that is that the physical valuation of the railroads is an indispensable element to be taken into consideration in the making of rates, and for that reason I wish, instead of a mandate to the commission to find what the value of the property is, that this bill had been limited, as far as value is concerned, to finding the physical value of the property, and then leaving to the commission to determine the question of value in each particular case as it comes up.

Now, Mr. Chairman, there are a great many questions that remain to be settled with reference to this question of value. For instance, take this great passenger station of the Pennsylvania Railroad here in this city, their station in New York, and the North Western Station in Chicago. Under this bill I take it the commission in finding the value of the property of the Pennsylvania Railroad used for the convenience of the public, will include the value of this station, running into many millions of dollars, and I take it that the policy of this bill is that that shall be included as a basis of rate-making purposes. Mr. Chairman, it is not at all certain that that is the correct basis for rate-making purposes, especially for freight rates.

It is certainly a doubtful question whether those who ship freight upon the Pennsylvania Railroad should be compelled to pay in freight rates for these expensive passenger stations, erected exclusively for the use of passenger traffic. one of the questions; and yet if we have the commission in an ex parte way find the value of these properties as an entity, I take it that the railroads will claim that Congress has declared the policy that they shall be entitled to exact such rates as will a fair return upon the total value of the property so

And so, Mr. Chairman, I wish that the very first paragraph might be limited to ascertaining the value of the physical property of the railroads, leaving the question entirely open, to be decided in each given case, as to what the value of the property is when used in that particular case for the purpose of rate making. If the commission had the value of the physical property-and that is the difficult thing to ascertain always-and kept it corrected and revised and changed from time to time as is provided in this bill, there would be no difficulty for the commission to apply the other elements as the cases may arise.

Further, Mr. Chairman, we have now a case pending in the Supreme Court, which will shortly be decided, namely, Minnesota case, which will no doubt settle many of these questions and may indeed form a new basis, or at least a somewhat different basis, for the fixing of valuations for the purposes of rate making. Let me say here, Mr. Chairman, that the value of the property of a common carrier for purposes of taxation or for commercial purposes may be and very often isyes, usually is—a very different one than a valuation used for rate-making purposes. If we are fixing the value of a railway for taxation purposes we look at the market value of that property, and the market value of that property depends almost wholly upon the earnings that the property makes

The earnings depend upon the rates that the railroad charges, and if the railroad is permitted to charge rates 50 per cent bigher than it ought to charge, 50 per cent greater than are reasonable, that is immediately reflected in the market value of the road; and the very purpose of regulation is to get a reasonable rate, and with a reasonable rate the market value of the road would be very much less than it is, of course, with an unreasonable rate.

I should seriously object to, and in fact feel compelled to vote against, this bill if it rested with the first paragraph as to the value of property; but there is another section later on that permits the commission to revise its valuations from time to time and change and correct them, so that I do not know that any great harm will come; but when this bill comes up for amendment I shall offer an amendment limiting the valuation of the property to a physical valuation. If we have the physical valuation, if we have the other information that is provided for in the bill, which I am heartily in favor of, then I see no occasion for the commission at this time in an ex parte proceeding going any further. I doubt if the railroads will be heard in this proceeding, because they will have an opportunity, a coustitutional right, to be heard upon the question when the matter gets into the courts, for, after all, we make this valuation only prima facie evidence of the value and that is all we can I shall offer an amendment limiting the finding to the physical valuation, and then we will have all of the elements: but so far as the final conclusion of the commission is coucerned, in fixing the value of a particular road, we can well leave that until the question comes before the commission with reference to the rates of that carrier. [Applause.]

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman takes his seat I desire to ask him a question. On what does he base the physical valuation of the property?

Mr. LENROOT. Just what the term implies-the value of the right of way, the value of the rolling stock, the rails, the equipment, and everything that is physical that is used for the convenience of the public.

Mr. FOWLER. The gentleman means the cost value of these articles

Mr. LENROOT. I do not. The value of the physical property in a railway is derived in this way: First, one consideration is the original cost both of equipment and right of way. Another is the present value. That is readily ascertainable. The cost of reproduction is another element, and from those elements we arrive at the present value of the physical property of the railway company.

Mr. HARDY. Is not that just the standard this bill pre-

Mr. LENROOT. It does when you go into detail, but the commission is required to ascertain the valuation of the property

Mr. HARDY. And the gentleman would add the word " physical "?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. And the gentleman would define it——
Mr. LENROOT. Exactly.
Mr. HARDY. So that there is no real substantial difference? Mr. LENROOT. No; except that I do not think it is confined, so far as the final conclusion of the commission is concerned, to the physical property.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Borland].

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, waiving any criticism as to the details or language of this particular bill, it seems to me that there is a very unanimous sentiment in this House in favor of it. I am heartily in favor of the measure and substantially in accord with the language in which the bill is There is no problem now before the people of the great interior sections of this country so serious, so constant, or so pressing as the problem of railway transportation. Many of the Members of this House come from districts the whole commercial and economic advancement of which depends entirely upon railroad transportation, and most of us come from districts where that is substantially true. In a great extent of the interior country such as we have, a great productive area removed from the seaboard, railroad rates are a general tax upon the entire consuming and producing public. I would not undertake to set up as an authority on economics and say who ultimately pays the cost of transportation, whether it be the producer or the consumer. I have always believed that as to the foreign transportation, as to export goods, the producer in this country pays the cost of transportation. When we export a bushel of wheat we must sell it upon a free-trade market in competition with the strongest competitive forces in the world, the wheat of South America, of Australia, of Russia, of India, of Canada, and of every wheat-producing area on the globe. The advantage we have over them is in the quality of our wheat and the cheapness of getting that wheat to the seaboard, for in water transportation distance is rarel the main factor. The great cost of putting our wheat on the foreign market is ordinarily the cost between the farm and the seaboard, and every penny saved in the cost of transportation from the farm to the seaboard is a penny left in the pocket of the producer of the wheat to enter into the channels of legitimate trade in

As to domestic commerce, so much of our products as were consumed here in our own country, I have always believed that the consumer must ultimately pay the cost of everything that went upon his table or upon his back. No matter how much the cost of transportation was, he must ultimately pay a price sufficient to cover it all. Regarding, therefore, the two great elements of the transportation business, the export and the domestic consumption, as to one it has occurred to me we were in competition with the nations of the world where every facility and improvement of transportation was a direct economic gain and growth to the wealth of this country in placing our products on the foreign markets, cheaper, quicker, and better than our competitor; and as to the other, the feeding of our own home people, it is a factor in the cost of living of the man who earns a daily wage to take home on Saturday night and hand over to his wife for the necessities of his family. So there is no class of the public that is free from this universal tax of railroad rates. We have come to a time when the question of the physical valuation of railroad properties is an absolute pressing necessity. We have come to a time when the conditions are ripe for such a physical valuation. The speculative age of railroad building is probably at an end in this country. A generation or a generation and a half ago all the great West was eagerly bidding for railroads. Land grants, aid bonds, public subscription of stock, anything on earth was offered to get a railroad out there in a country that could not produce the business that justified a railroad when it was first built. Now all of those railroads have been built. They were cheaply built; many of them built entirely out of land grants or aid bonds, and yet stocks and bonds were put upon the market based upon such properties. In 1893 came a period which was a clearing house of all these western railroads. Almost without exception they went through a period of receivership and all scaled down their indebtedness and all wiped out public stocks and bonds and all control the public had over the management, and they all consolidated great systems. began to rebuild out of the earnings and capitalization of that property an entirely new and adequate system of transportation throughout the West. But now the period of railroad specula-tion is almost at an end and a period of railroad operation has come when the roads are putting in heavier rails, straighter roadbeds, broader ties, better bridges, double tracking in most cases, running bigger trains, heavier engines, and fewer men to the train crew.

So they have more opportunity now to operate upon a purely operative basis than they ever did during the speculative age. Railroads were built to sell originally, like the jackanapes razors which are mentioned in the old poem. Now they are built to operate, like any other business property on the market. The great question we have had to confront is what is a fair rate between the shipper and the railroad. In this question the railroad has universally had the advantage of the shipper, for the railroad would not disclose the value of the property upon which it operated. It never undertook to disclose that fact. Much has been said about the difficulty of getting at the value of railroads. Unquestionably there is a practical difficulty in getting at the value of anything. Even 10 feet of ground necessary to open a public alley will cause a great deal of controversy. Value is a question of opinion, but the difficulty in getting at the value is not insurmountable, and great as it may be it is necessary to be met and met just as early as possible.

I believe, with the gentleman who last spoke, that we should confine this investigation to the physical valuation of the railroads. I do not believe we ought to value a railroad as a going concern, for the minute that you do that you add something to it besides the physical valuation of the property itself for taxation or sale purposes. Now, what do you add to it in valuing it as a going concern? You must add one of two things, either good will or franchise. Which of those belongs to the railroadthe good will or the franchise? The franchise does not. It is not the franchise of the railroad, but of the public. Did not the railroad seek the franchise on the ground that it would invest its capital in a business productive to the public and that the public might have the right of control by reason of the franchise that was given to the railroad? The railroad does not own the franchise, and I have never believed in the capitalization of the franchise of public utilities. There never has been a more vicious principle in this country than the capitalization of the value of a franchise, for the franchise is the free gift of the country upon consideration by which the railroad invests its property.

Mr. HOBSON. Does not the gentleman recognize the same principle as in the capitalization of monopolies?

Mr. BORLAND. Unquestionably it is the same principle as capitalization of monopolies. We give the railroad a right to do a certain business a private individual can not do, and then they undertake to capitalize that right, which is practically a monopoly, because no person can invest a similar amount of money without the proper franchise and compete under the same terms.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BORLAND. I will.

Mr. OLMSTED The gentleman is discussing the matter from an intelligent standpoint, and it has occurred to me to ask him a question which has troubled me a great deal, namely, What would be the physical valuation of a railroad that had no freight or passengers to carry?

Mr. BORLAND. I will answer that question.

Mr. OLMSTED. And then I follow that by asking what would be its physical valuation if it had no franchise to carry freight or passengers? And, after all, does the physical valuation of a railroad have anything to do with what would be a proper rate of transportation over it?

Mr. BORLAND. The physical valuation of a railroad that had no freight or passengers to carry would be only, of course, the value of the rails when they were torn up and the value of the land when it was turned back for some other purpose. Of course, there would be no question about the physical valuation of a railroad with no freight or passengers to carry.

Mr. OLMSTED. Ordinarily that would be a mere right of way, which, when the rails were torn up, would go back to the original owner.

And the terminal facilities in the city. Mr. BORLAND. The physical valuation of a railroad which had no freight or passengers to carry would not be a hard thing to determine. As to the second question, I would say the physical valuation of a railroad with no franchise would not be conceivable.

Mr. OLMSTED. Which would be permitted in any State if built on private ground.

Mr. BORLAND. But a railroad without a franchise could The difficulty which the gentleman from not be a carrier. Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted] has not touched upon in his question, but which I thought he might touch upon, is the physical valuation of a railroad which is operated at a loss. There is some difficulty connected with that proposition. Some branchline railroads operated in connection or under the control of trunk lines are operated at a loss, but whether that is due to the management of the company or the conditions of the community is a matter of dispute. Ordinarily it is due to the policy of the company which owns the road.

Mr. OLMSTED. I can name several independent railroads that are operated at a loss, that never have paid a dividend, and probably never will, and yet they are railroads which cost several millions of dollars.

Mr. BORLAND. That is true. It sometimes happens, frequently happens, that money is improvidently invested in railroad enterprises that do not pay a dividend and never will pay a dividend. But it has been universally true also that all money invested in railroad enterprises was unprofitable at the first investment and only grew into profit as the community grew and the business of that road increased.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not wish to take up the gentleman's time, but I have only another instance to present. It is a matter of history that one of the steam railroads from here to Baltimore cost a great deal more to construct and to establish than the other one, because the first road interfered with the second one in getting a franchise into Baltimore and the second one had to take an expensive route. You will see it every time you go over to Baltimore. It has to go through long and costly tunnels. Now, does the fact that one road cost possibly twice as much as the other increase its physical value, or would that physical valuation have any bearing at all on the ascertainment of what would be a proper rate for the transportation of freight or passengers from here to Baltimore?

Mr. BORLAND. That is a very important question, and I may say to the gentleman that instances of that may be multiplied all over the country, where one railroad has cost more to build, competing with another one, than the original line by reason of the cost of terminals, or the scarcity of terminals, or the difficulty of entering into a city, or whatever the reason

Mr. OLMSTED. One road secures a right of way through a canyon or narrow defile and another company, to build a competitive line, may have to tunnel through a mountain.

Mr. BORLAND. Unquestionably.

Mr. OLMSTED. How, then, are you going to determine the physical valuation of the railroads under such circumstances?

Mr. BORLAND. This bill takes care of that by providing for the ascertainment of the original cost of the property for railroad purposes. Whether that would result in a uniform standard of physical valuation for all railroads that were competitive on the question of rates is another question that has not yet been reached by this bill. This bill, as I understand it, is to get at the original cost of the railroad and the present value of it, and ascertain how much of that present value is due to added improvements. If that is done in the case of each railroad, then whether or not it will serve as a basis for the fixing of rates is a matter for the court and the commission to decide as the question arises.

Mr. OLMSTED. Would we not get at it more effectively and readily by a bill regulating the issuance of stocks and bonds, so that there could be no fictitious increase of either?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I do not think there can be any possi-bility of regulating the issuance of stocks and bonds except on the basis of the known physical valuation of the property.

Mr. OLMSTED. Well, we have it in New York. They have an excellent public utilities commission there. No increase of stock or bonds can be made except by its permission, and other States have similar commissions.

Mr. BORLAND. It is possible to provide limits and safeguards to the issuance of stocks and bonds, but I do not think there could be any real and effective limitation on the issuance of stocks and bonds short of a physical valuation of the property upon which the stocks and bonds are issued. Now, it certainly is an evil in the transportation business that bonded indebtedness and fixed charges to pay interest on bonded indebtedness are figured into the rate making. If I guarantee a mortgage for a man who has mortgaged his house for $5,000 when it is worth only $4,000, and he has sold to your client the mortgage for $5,000, he can not sell it for any greater sum or rent it for more than it is worth any more readily than he could have done before I gave him the guaranty.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri? There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. As the bill now stands, would it not compel the commission to decide the very question that has been raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted], as to two roads doing the same line of business, one costing very much more than the other, whereas if it were limited to the valuation of the physical property that question would remain to be decided in each particular case?

Mr. BORLAND. It might in this respect, that the bill provides that the commission shall report the present value of the property for railroad purposes, which might raise the cheaper and earlier railroad to the value of the competitive railroad that was afterwards put in.

But those are simply questions of information and enlightenment for this House which I regard as absolutely essential that we should have. We can not have too much of this information. The use we make of it afterwards will be such as occasion may require, but I think the bill itself is right in theory. We ought to know the cost of the physical property in the first instance. We ought to know the cost of the added improvements, and we ought to have the commission's estimate of the present value for railroad purposes. We ought to have at least those three items.

Mr. LENROOT. If I am correct in assuming that the bill is a mandate to find out the ultimate value, then is it not beyond the power of the commission itself to fix rates other than on that basis afterwards?

Mr. BORLAND. It probably would be. Now, I wanted to say this-that I believe the time has come when a physical valuation of railroads can be made on a fairer basis than ever before in the history of the railroads of this country, fairer to the railroads themselves and fairer to the shippers. I believe that railroading has gotten down to a legitimate basis. I believe that 90 per cent of the railroads of this country are entirely out of the realm of speculation and are being operated as closely and cheaply as any other large business can be

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I have not studied this bill thoroughly. I wish to ask if there is anything in it which requires that when this value is ascertained that shall be the standard upon which rates shall be fixed.

Mr. BORLAND. No; there is no requirement of that kind. Mr. SIMS. The physical value would only be prima facie evidence.

Mr. BORLAND. It would only be prima facie evidence on which the commission could act.

Mr. HARDY. As I understand, it would just be one element to be taken into consideration in passing on rates.

Mr. BORLAND. It would be one element.
But I wanted to say this further, that we have now had about 25 years of railroad legislation, and I do not hesitate to say that all of it has redounded to the profit of the railroads themselves more than to the profit of the shipping public. The railroads have put an end to discriminations between shippers by wiping out rebates to favored shippers. There was a time, a few years ago, when no large dealer ever expected to ship a carload of stuff on the published tariff. He went to the soliciting agent of the railroad company or the soliciting agents chased him around town to get him to ship his carload of watermelons over their road at a special rate. Every railroad had a commercial agency, consisting of a number of young men of pleasing appearance, who went about town soliciting every pound of freight shipped in that community, to get it carried over that line at a special secret rate. Now the railroads have abolished all that, and they are getting full rates. getting any rebate. Who is getting the benefit of that? Ulti-mately and directly the railroads themselves. The railroads used to give a pass to every respectable man in the community. There was hardly an exception. The man who did not ride on a pass felt himself to be beneath the social standing of other persons in that community. Now every man pays his fare. Even some of the members of the lordly State legislatures pay their railroad fares.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has again expired.

Mr. SIMS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri five min-

Mr. BORLAND. The railroads used to take all the baggage you wanted to send, even theatrical and traveling men's baggage, and ship it all over the country on a passenger ticket. Now you can not even take a collar box without paying excess baggage. I have never made the trip from Kansas City to Washington without paying from $4 to $9 excess baggage.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman carries too many clothes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The gentleman has too many

Mr. BORLAND. I do like a clean collar, but beyond that I do not plead guilty to being a dude. The railroads are getting more money for their business to-day than ever before in the history of transportation, and the regulation in which we have been indulging has not been reflected in cheaper rates to the consumer or to the producer or to the shipper in any single, solitary instance.

Now, the railroads claim that they are paying more for ma-terial and more for labor. I have no doubt that in many cases they are paying more for material, but my judgment is they are paying less in the aggregate for labor. We find that they have raised the labor cost 15 to 18 per cent on the average, but I think they have raised their rates much more than that. They have cut down the number of men employed on the railroads very materially. The consolidation of terminals, the consolidation of switching facilities, the running of heavier trains, the cutting out of a flagman here and a shopman there, the cutting out of little repair shops have reduced the labor roll very materially, and I doubt very much whether any portion of the increase of the rates of the railroad are justified by an increased pay roll, although there may be an increase in the rates of individual employees.

But, Mr. Chairman, the time has come now when some of this railroad regulation should be reflected in cheaper and more uniform rates for the shipping public, and I hope that that will be the outcome of this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BORLAND. I will.
Mr. BUCHANAN. Is it not a fact that the labor cost on a tonnage basis over the railroads is very much less than what it

Mr. BORLAND. It is very much less than what it was, and that is the only true test of the labor cost, and it is smaller now than it has ever been in the history of the railroads and is getting smaller every day.

The railroads have no reason to complain of the physical valuation of their property as a basis for making rates. If this Minnesota case is confirmed, there will be practically no power left in a State to regulate railroad rates. In that Minuesota case the court said that the making of an intrastate rate so directly affected the interstate rate that the intrastate rate could not be reduced without affecting the transcontinental rate. This is true. Any man who has studied railroading knows that the change of a rate from a point to a point in Minnesota will affect every rate between Chicago and Puget Sound. There is no doubt about it, and so there is but one agency through which the regulation of rates can effectively be made and but one basis upon which they can make that rate, and that is cutting out the value of the franchises, the value of the good will which the shipper has created, and give them a fair and just return on the property they have invested. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hobson].

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, this bill is in the interest of truth and honesty in offering a way to establish the facts in the various controversies arising between the public carriers and the public. The bill is in the interest of promoting an orderly evolution of our social system. The transportation system of a nation is closely analogous to the circulatory system of a living being. It is first in evolution in passing from a lower order to a higher order, and upon the development of the circulatory system depends in large measure the development of the organism. The Interstate Commerce Commission is closely analogous to the vasa motor center of a human being. The Interstate Commerce Commission is The world is passing from a cold-blooded creature to a warm-blooded creature, and nations are evolving centers which can systematically regulate transportation for the whole nation as the vasa motor center regulates circulation for the whole body.

Now, our Interstate Commerce Commission itself may be likened to the vasa motor center, but the evolution of the Interstate Commerce Commission is still in its early stages.

This bill removes the obstacle in the path of its next stage of development. The references made here in the remarks of various gentlemen who have preceded me will convince anyone that the time is fully ripe for this whole question to be systematized. We are a warm-blooded creature now, and the circulation is the very life of our development. We can not proceed in an orderly system of development unless we can have transportation properly systematized and regulated.

To illustrate, take the conditions now found in my State of Alabama. One system of railroads in our State maintains that the 21-cent passenger rate fixed by statute is confiscatory, while the other railroads accept that rate and have not been going into bankruptcy on account of it.

But this particular system has had the matter referred to the Federal judge of the district, and that judge has decided that the rate is confiscatory; and, Mr. Chairman, the search for evidence on the part of the State to present its case was met by insuperable barriers and obstacles; so that it was decided substantially, as all such cases must be decided, from one state-ment—the statement of one side—ex parte evidence. This bill if enacted would enable us to get recourse and relief.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.
Mr. CULLOP. What was the passenger rate on the railroads before you passed your statute in Alabama?

Mr. HOBSON. It was variable. It was usually 3 cents on the larger railroads.

Mr. CULLOP. Is it not true that the railroads which have accepted the 2½ cents a mile statute rate are carrying more passengers and making more money out of the passenger traffic than ever before?

Mr. HOBSON. It certainly is a fact that whenever a passenger can travel by one of those other roads he always chooses it, and whenever a shipper can ship by one of those roads he always ships by it; but there are many localities where there is no choice. The railroads charging the rate in violation of the statute have been issuing coupons, in which they agree to return the difference in the rates if they are not sustained in the higher court. Nobody can keep those coupons, and the railroads know it, and they will not allow those coupons to be bought and sold, so as to insure their being lost. In some cases they make you sign your own name and announce that only the original purchaser will be reimbursed. This is the case in Oklahoma. They pretend that they will abide by the decision of the superior court, but they make the conditions such that when the time comes it will be a physical impossibility for the refund to be collected, showing a clear intent to hold the increase, whether lawful or unlawful.

Mr. CULLOP. I will ask the gentleman if the courts have not made this proposition of confiscatory rates do overtime in the last few years:

Mr. HOBSON. Unquestionably. Where reduced rates have been fixed by law and accepted, I find no evidence of the railroads going out of business or of any great decline in profits. I cite these as instances of the obstacles still remaining in the path of proper regulation. I travel a good deal between States. I find now many railroads, most of the roads passing through the gentleman's State [Mr. CULLOP] and the other States of the Middle West, charge more because of the simple act of crossing the State line; so that in effect the rate in both States violates the State law. In other words, they charge a rate that, separated in two parts, is illegal in both States.

Mr. CULLOP. I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that there is now pending before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce a bill introduced by myself to correct that practice on the part of the railroads.

Mr. HOBSON. I will say to the gentleman that I am surprised that the great self-governing people of the Central West, who have passed the 2-cent rate bills in their States and have found that they are fair and just, have submitted all these years to the common carriers between the States charging illegal rates under the cloak of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. CULLOP. It is not an illegal rate, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. HOBSON. Only because it is interstate. The rates charged within the States have not been declared unreasonable, nor in practice have they proved unreasonable.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes; the Interstate Commerce Commission is opposing the proposed remedy on that subject, I will say to the gentleman. I want, furthermore, to say that in my State we have a 2-cent fare bill, passed some years ago, and the railroads have been carrying more passengers and have been making more money out of the passenger business since that was passed than they ever did before, when they charged a 3-cent rate.

Mr. HOBSON. Showing that there was no warrant whatsoever, in fact, for them to charge a larger rate in passing from Indiana to Illinois. Each of those States has a 2-cent rate, and yet if you pass from one State to the other you are charged

Mr. FOSTER. Three.
Mr. HOBSON. Some of them charge three, but most of them, I think, charge two and a half, though many times they do charge three. I have been traveling recently, and the question arises in my mind, Why are we confronted by such a situation? Is there no recourse for the people of those States? Is the Interstate Commerce Commission to be an intrenchment for re-calcitrant roads to defy the just laws of the States? As long as the physical valuation of the roads is not made the Interstate Commerce Commission is thwarted in its best intentions to relieve this condition, and State authorities are thwarted in their legal processes for relief. Is this to continue forever? course the railroads go to the Interstate Commerce Commission and actually put up what looks like a reasonable argument that the lower rate between those States would be confiscatory. I can not understand any other reason why the Interstate Commerce Commission should submit to it. At this point I wish to bring out another point where the railroads are unreasonable. We have declared that the Pullman Co. is a public carrier, and yet if you buy mileage to Pittsburgh on one of the roads from here to Pittsburgh, having a mileage book from Pittsburgh west, say on the C. P. A., and have both mileages in your pocket, the Pullman Co. will not sell you a berth to Chicago or a point be-yond Pittsburgh; it will not sell you a berth across the point where you change your mileage books. Going west you pass through Pittsburgh usually about 2 o'clock in the morning and do not want to get out of your berth to go down to get mileage exchanged for a ticket. They will not let the conductor or porter get it done, and you either have to buy two berths, one to Pittsburgh and one from Pittsburgh on, or you just have to pay the full fare of 21-cent through rate from the starting point instead of the 2-cent rate. Those two public carriers are cooperating to practically interfere with the reasonableness of rates both on the Pullman and in transportation. I made complaint to a railroad and they announced the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission for their unreasonable practice. I simply state this not to make a case out here, but with large experience in traveling throughout the country I find great irregularities, and I believe that this bill will be a most effective means of finally getting a basis upon which our transportation can be systematized, which will be for the best interests of the public carriers as well as for the traveling and ship-Mr. SIMS. Will the ping public.

Will the gentleman from Minnesota use some of his time?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the gentleman from Tennessee used?

The CHAIRMAN. One hour and twenty-six minutes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. How much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. Forty minutes.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the power to make a rate involves the power to levy a tax. The people all over the United States are always solicitous that taxes are not levied too high, and if we should be able to get the correct values of railroad properties and those values were made one of the elements in rate making we would have a more intelligent conception than we have now of whether we were having a just and reasonable tax for railroad transportation. The taxes levied by railroads in the United States every year for the transportation of freight and passengers amounts now to about $3,000,000,000, so that the railroad-transportation revenues in the United States are nearly three times as much as the revenues derived from taxation by the Treasury of the United States. The people all over the country are looking forward to the time when everybody will understand whether a rate is reasonable or unreasonable. Up to the present time there has been no sufficient information given to the public to enable the public to understand whether the rates are right or wrong. Everybody believes they are wrong in most cases. The railroad companies' representatives throughout the United States are constantly arguing for power to levy higher rates on the theory that the wages of the men employed by the railroad companies are much higher now than they used to be and the volume of work done by each man employed is much less, and that the total aggregate cost per ton of freight carried by the railroads of the country is greater than it ever was before, and that the dividends paid on the capitalization of the roads are much less than they ever were before. The question arises whether railroad rates should be based upon the amount of money to be earned to be applied to the payment of dividends or whether the rate should be made upon the basis of the actual value of the property of the railroads, regardless of whether the property is considered in a going concern or not. My own judgment is that where a railroad claims to be running at a loss and its capitalization is more than twice what it ought to be the question of gain or loss in such case ought not to be taken into account. If the railroad rates are fixed on the basis of valuation provided by the first section of this bill, it looks to me that in some cases they will be fixed at much higher rates than they ought to be fixed at, because this bill provides that the commission shall ascertain the value of the property for railroad purposes or for rate-making purposes, and then in the case of the railroad referred to by my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted], where it was required to construct expensive tunnels to get into Baltimore, if the rate were made on the basis of cost to that road in order that it might be able to earn dividends the earning power of the railroad running in competition with it would be twice as much as it ought to be.

I believe that in many cases the values of railroad properties will be found to be greater than the actual capitalization of the railroad. But, on the other hand, I believe that in many other cases the values of the railroad properties will be found to be materially less. At any rate, whether it is higher or lower, the public is entitled to the information which this bill will enable the commission to obtain, and I am very glad that the time has come when Congress feels that the legislation demanded for so long a time by the people ought to be enacted into law.

I am fully committed to the policy of the bill, and have a bill for the same purpose pending before the committee reporting this bill, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. But while I may give my vote for the principle at stake, my views as to what ought to be done in the form of legislation do not fully conform to that of the committee and members of the Interstate Commerce Commission on this subject. Indeed, views will be found widely divergent.

I have advocated the appraisement or valuation of railroad properties in every Congress of which I have been a Member. In the last Congress I introduced, and the House adopted, an amendment to the Mann bill providing for a valuation. amendment was stricken out in the Senate and not restored in conference. Immediately thereafter I introduced the bill to which I have already referred and addressed the House at some length upon its subject matter and provisions

Before taking up the provisions of the bill which has been reported I shall address myself to the history of Government regulation of rates, and the situation surrounding a valuation essential to be thoroughly understood before there can be any effective regulation.

This bill provides that the Interstate Commerce Commission "shall investigate and ascertain the value of the property of every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act and used by it for the convenience of the public." It then directs how and through what instrumentalities the duty shall be performed. I will now, for a text, state a definite proposition, namely, that this imposes, or seeks to impose, upon the commission an impossible and a useless task.

Ignoring for all present purposes telegraph, water, and pipe lines, and express companies, all common carriers subject to the act, there are over a thousand railroad corporations in the country hardly one of which is not in some respect or to some extent engaged in interstate commerce. I would be surprised if shown a single little road anywhere that did not connect in some way either with a longer line or a water carrier whose business extended directly or indirectly across a State line. And to the extent at least of the business done by virtue of such connection the corporations owning these short lines, though wholly within particular States, are subject to the interstatecommerce act.

It is safe to say that not one line of railway wholly within a State is distinct, independent, and free from the control of some more important carrier with respect to rates on traffic going beyond or coming from beyond the State boundary. In fixing the proportion of a joint or through rate which each shall receive or retain, the value of the investment in or the entire value of the shorter line, if ever an element at all, is one of the simplest propositions imaginable. But not one time in a hundred that such a rate might come before the commission would the value of the properties of one of these lesser and subordinate carriers become an essential fact. If it ever did become necessary in any particular case, that could then be done by the commission for that particular case without difficulty and without any provision for it in this bill. In fact, however, a controlling interest in the stocks of the intrastate and of many short interstate lines is held by great railway systems, which are comparatively few in number.

I now advance another proposition. It is neither expedient, just, nor economical to ascertain the values of all the railroad properties devoted to interstate commerce, and it will best subserve public as well as private interests if the investigation and valuation be by entire organized railway systems and limited to the important and dominating even among these. With all the light obtainable from every source, with a force of engineers, experts, and other helpers equal in number to the Standing Army of the United States at work all the time gathering and tabulating data, even if when assembled any finite mind could grasp it all, the question of what is a reasonable rate or a just and reasonable schedule of rates would still remain a matter of opinion and judgment. Compromise and the arbitrary striking of averages are an incident of all rate fixing. It is as impossible now to fix rates which in the future will pay all outlays and leave a definite sum for dividends as it would be to fix next year's prices for eggs or potatoes, and for almost identically the same reasons. All those railway economists, whether holding professorships in colleges or seats in Congress or on the Interstate Commerce Commission, who expect to make or to see made of rate fixing an exact science or even susceptible of becoming subject to any definite rules or standards are doomed to disappointment. Nevertheless it is possible to fall into habits of thought and accept principles and standards which being conformed to in practice destroy public justice and deeply wrong the freight-paying public.

am about to discuss and expose some of the mischievious dicta of commissioners and others, but lest I forget it I will, with the permission of the House, here insert without reading my amendment in the form of a substitute bill:

dicta of commissioners and others, but lest I forget it I will, with the permission of the House, here insert without reading my amendment in the form of a substitute bill:

Section 1. Section 11 of the act to regulate commerce approved February 4, 1857, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC, 11. That a commission is hereby created and established to be known as the Interstate Commerce Commission, which shall be composed of 1 chief commissioner and 14 commissioners to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice of the Senate: Provided, That any commissioners holding offices as such at the taking effect of this act shall continue in office until the expiration of their respective terms, and for all the purposes of this act such incumbents shall participate in the organization of the commission hereby created with the same vided for new appointees. Before discussing its provisions I will combat and endeavor to overthrow some of the errors and fallacious views before alluded to.

First, I fear that we do not sufficiently and at all times appreciate the importance of transportation. It is the one thing under human control that is essential to every human being in the world under modern conditions and not living in the most primitive and simple condition. Those uncivilized nations not dependent upon some form of transportation are so few in number or so obscure as not to be factors in present-day affairs. It is not only a universal necessity but one of common public interest. That may be one reason why so few outside the comparatively small class profitably engaged in conducting trans-portation devote special and persistent study to it. Few give more than a transient thought to the atmosphere so essential to life or to the water supply for domestic use until it is vitiated or its supply is reduced to the danger point. So with respect to transportation, especially that by rail. Not only have we here-tofore and do we now leave the management, the character of the service, and the rates to the care and keeping of the private corporations engaged in it, but we have allowed them almost exclusively to educate the people and their official representatives as to the rules and economic principles to govern herein.

We are living in a haze or glare of illumination, but without much steady, instructive light. There was, at a former period, a proper conception of the true relation of organized society to public-service agencies, but new ideas and strange doctrinesdoctrines which are totally destructive of public justice and private right-have been sprung and industriousy inculcated during the last two decades. They have found lodgment not only in the minds of the representatives of shippers' associations, boards of trade, and other commercial bodies, but of judges, Interstate Commerce Commissioners, Senators, and Rep-The most dangerous and far-reaching of these is the economic view that, at any rate and aside from all other considerations, the corporation conducting business as a common carrier is entitled as of right to a fair return, usually asserted to be equal to the prevailing rate of interest, upon the value of the property devoted to the public service. Sometimes the expression varies, and it is said that the carrier is entitled to some such measure of return as the prevailing rate of interest on its investment. But the whole question of what is or what should be the proper basis or measure of rates is encumbered and befogged with inconsistencies and conflicting theories, the result of which is seen in the adoption by the committee and report of the pending bill, which provides for an investigation and report by the commission upon numerous incongruous and, as I insist, nonessential matters.

Transportation has been a matter of common as well as of vital interest from the dawn of civilization. Carters, charioteers, draymen, and cabmen for hire were, by ancient law as well as by the common law of England, subject to regulation as distinct classes, and strict rules and principles of law were applied to them for the protection of the public. So when I say that the earlier decisions of our courts in cases involving corporations employed as carriers and in other public services, before interests in transportation became so vastly valuable and inextricably interwoven with all commercial and industrial activities, and prior to the organizations for the propagation of error and confusion, are entitled to the greatest respect. The heresy that it is the duty of government to safeguard the earnings of any particular class of business men up to the point of realizing a reasonable, or, indeed, any, profit upon their ventures is a most vicious form of paternalism which finds no sanction or encouragement in the decisions of the courts or otherwise until within the last few years, during which serious attempts were made to regulate the rates for service by carriers in interstate

I shall not encumber my remarks with citations to the extent of making it resemble a lawyer's brief, but will call attention to such decisions as are necessary to prove my point. the case of Covington & Lexington Turnpike Road Co. v. Sandford (164 U. S., 578), involving rates or tolls to be charged over a turnpike, was decided. We see, upon a moment's reflection, that the question there was exactly the same as that raised in any case involving a railroad rate. In that case successive acts of the Legislature of Kentucky had greatly reduced the tolls until in 1896 the company sought to prevent the final reduction by suit in court on the ground that the rate fixed by it was confiscatory, but in the proofs it failed to show that the rate did not yield some small profit or even if it did not that insolvency would not be attributable to competition and loss of business rather than to the reduction of rates.

Here are some of the principles stated by the Supreme Court of the United States, after stating the facts and quoting literally from the complaint:

from the complaint:

It is proper to say that if the answer had not alleged, in substance, that the toils prescribed by the act of 1890 were wholly inadequate for keeping the road in proper repair and for earning dividends, we could not say that the act was unconstitutional merely because the company (as was alleged and as the demurrer admitted) could not earn more than 4 per cent on its capital stock. It can not be said that a corporation is entitled, as of right, and without reference to the interests of the public, to realize a given per cent upon its capital stock. When the question arises whether the legislature has exceeded its constitutional power in prescribing rates to be charged by a corporation controlling a public highway, stockholders are not the only persons whose rights or interests are to be considered. The rights of the public are not to be ignored. It is alleged here that the rates prescribed are unreasonable and unjust to the company and its stockholders. But that involves an inquiry as to what is reasonable and just for the public. If the establishing of new lines of transportation should cause a diminution in the number of those who need to use a turnpike road and, consequently, a diminution in the toils collected, that is not, in itself, a sufficient reason why the corporation operating the road should be allowed to maintain rates that would be unjust to those who must of ouse its property. The public can not properly be subjected to unreasonable-rates in order simply that stockholders may earn dlyidends. The legislature has the authority, in every case, where its power has not been restrained by contract, to proceed upon the ground that the public may not rightfully be required to submit to unreasonable rates in order simply that stockholders may earn dlyidends. The legislature has the authority, in every case, where its power has not been restrained by contract, to proceed upon the ground that the public may not rightfully be required to submit to unreasonable rates in order simply that

The court here plainly said in effect that the matter of first importance was the interest of the public in having reasonable rates, and that that should outweigh all other considerations so long as any profit whatsoever was in sight for the company and its stockholders. The court refused to hold an act of the legislature fixing rates to be confiscatory until a point of reduction of rates was reached at which business could only be done at a loss. The court did not deem it necessary to set forth the reasoning underlying this rule in that case, but did state them in a subsequent case, Cotting v. Kansas City Stock-yards Co. (183

U. S., 79), as follows:

U. S., 79), as follows:

If in such a case an individual is willing to undertake the work of the State, may it not be urged that he in a measure subjects himself to the same rules of action, and that if the body which expresses the judgment of the State believes that the particular services should be rendered without profit he is not at liberty to complain? While we have said again and again that one volunteering to do such services can not be compelled to expose his property to confiscation, that he can not be compelled to submit its use to such rates as do not pay the expenses of the work, and therefore create a constantly increasing debt which ultimately works its appropriation, still is there not force in the suggestion that as the State may do the work without profit, if he voluntarily undertakes to act for the State he must submit to a like determination as to the paramount interests of the public? * * * The authority of the legislature to interfere by a regulation of rates is not an authority to destroy the principles of these decisions, but simply to enforce them. Its prescription of rates is prima facie evidence of their reasonableness. In other words, it is a legislative declaration that such charges are reasonable compensation for the services rendered, but it does not follow therefrom that the legislature has power to reduce any reasonable charges because by reason of the volume of business done by the party he is making more profit than others in the same or other business. The question is always not what does he make as the aggregate of his profits, but what is the value of the services which he renders to the one seeking and receiving such services.

The latter was not a railroad case, but like principles apply The gist of these decisions is that it is for Congress or the Interstate Commerce Commission in its place or stead to fix the rates, which the courts should presume to be just and reasonable until the carriers affected thereby show them to be confiscatory; that it is not sufficient merely to show that the rates are low or even unreasonably low, which being a matter of opinion is not susceptible of exact proof; that a public-service corporation assumes duties pertaining to government, such duties as the Government might, except for the interposition of the individual or corporation, itself perform for the people to be served; and finally that so long as the governmental authority fixing the rate stops short of a deprivation of all profit, or of any whatever, the party affected can not complain, he may at any time abandon the service and allow it to be resumed by the Government. So the proper question in all such cases is, not whether the rate is reasonable in point of profityielding power, but reasonable from the standpoint of the man who pays it; and this consideration ought to control the case, notwithstanding that the rate may be low, or even unreasonably low, until the actual confiscatory point is reached.

But the Covington Turnpike case was the last of a long line of decisions beginning with Munn v. Illinois. The railroad economists had, by 1897, when Smyth v. Ames (169 U. S., 466) was decided, succeeded in creating a hesitating state of judicial mind and a reluctance to carry forward into cases involving railroad rates the principles which they had previously established and adhered to. The decision in the last-mentioned case was, we might say, rather hazy. It was what in chemistry would be called a blend, rather than a compound. The sound views in prior cases were ingenuously mixed with the self-serving views of the railroad lawyers and economists. In one part of the opinion it was said that the sole criterion was the value of the property devoted to the public use, while in another several other matters were mentioned to be properly considered. and, among them, the market value of stocks and bonds.

was said (p. 546) :

was said (p. 546):

We hold, however, that the basis of all calculations as to the reasonableness of rates to be charged by a corporation maintaining a highway under legislative sanction must be the fair value of the property being used by it for the convenience of the public. And in order to ascertain that value, the original cost of construction, the amount expended in permanent improvements, the amount and market value of its bonds and stock, the present as compared with the original cost of construction, the probable earning capacity of the property under particular rates prescribed by statute, and the sum required to meet operating expenses are all matters for consideration, and are to be given such weight as may be just and right in each case. We do not say that there may not be other matters to be regarded in estimating the value of the property. What the company is entitled to ask is a fair return upon the value of that which it employs for the public convenience. On the other hand, what the public is entitled to demand is that no more be exacted from it for the use of a public highway than the services rendered by it are reasonably worth.

There may be those blessed with sufficient mental skill or subtlety to state how all the matters here mentioned can be brought together, with other matters intimated but not specified. as a basis of fixing a rate. But I must confess myself unequal to the task. If the value of the property is to receive principal consideration, as the court asserts, then what consideration should or can the market value of stocks and bonds receive?

We need not dwell upon one or two decisions of the Supreme Court and several by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal courts intermediary between those above referred to and that in Wilcox v. Consolidated Gas Co. (212 U. S., 19). The latter case-evidences progressive strides in false and vicious economic education. Now, the Consolidated Gas case presented exactly the same issue as that presented in any rallroad rate case. The body of gas consumers answer to the whole body of transportation consumers on the lines of a railway system anywhere, and the relation of the gas company to the public is in all essentials similar to that of the railroad company. While the action of the court was not conclusive of the ultimate rights of the parties, yet the views of the court, expressed in the course of its opinion, are significant of its changed economic attitude since the decisions in the turnpike and stockyards cases.

There must-

Says the court-

be a fair return upon the reasonable value of the property at the time it is being used for the public.

The word "must," inserted by the court in lieu of the words "may, on condition that the rates to consumers are just and reasonable," contained in earlier opinions, marks the great change wrought by the schools for the propagation of economic error maintained in this country. They are maintained out of the vast profits realized on exploitation of the public through exorbitant rates. But the court declared that the franchises of the company, which it was admitted did not cost it a penny and represented merely the voluntary abdication by the State of New York of a particle of its sovereignty, should also be valued as part of the aggregate upon which the consumers should be compelled to pay rates. The court said:

It can not be disputed that franchises of this nature are property and can not be taken or used by others without compensation.

We do not fully comprehend the significance of this declaration, principle, or dogma of rate fixing unless we reflect that the Consolidated Gas Co. is an absolute monopoly, with the usual history of such monopolies of which flagrant dealings with municipal authorities and scandalous stock inflations were prominent incidents, and that the so-called franchises simply stand for monopolistic power acquired through practices which I would not care to properly designate unless willing, which I am not, to take up your time to insert the proofs. But that gas company, like all such, and like all railroad companies, possesses real taxing powers within and throughout the territory in which it operates. The folly and injustice of placing a valuation upon the monopolistic sovereign power after valuing all tangible assets is readily seen. But that is a right or privilege that municipal monopolies and railroad companies now insist upon, and what, I regret to say, the courts and Interstate Commerce Commission now concede.

That the assets of the Consolidated Gas Co. represented little, if any, original investment but what Thomas Lawson would call "made" dollars, is shown by another part of the opinion, where it said:

The evidence shows that from their creation down to the consolidation in 1884, these companies had been free from legislative regulation upon the amount of the rates to be charged for gas. They had been most prosperous and had divided very large earnings in the shape of dividends to their stockholders, dividends which are characterized by the Senate committee appointed in 1885 to investigate the facts surrounding the consolidation as enormous. The report of that committee shows that several of the companies had averaged, from their creation, dividends over 16 per cent, and six companies in the year 1884 paid a dividend upon capital which had been increased by earnings, as in the case of the Manhattan and the New York, of 18 per cent, and, had it been upon the money actually paid in, it would have been nearly 25 per cent.

It is these views and similar views of the courts and their echo and repetition by interstate commerce commissioners which have led me to offer the substitute amendments already inserted in the record. The true theory is that the Government shall regulate and control rates. But the views which I have quoted and intend to quote would make the Government the guarantor and underwriter of profits, and the vice of such views is but slightly alleviated, if at all, by the use of the qualifying word "fair." The Government has no better authority from the people or from the laws of the land to insure fair profits to a particular class of business men than to insure to them the re-ceipt of an unfair or exorbitant profit. The one rule makes of public-service corporations the servants of the public, which was the original and is the proper conception of them. The other rule makes of them the unbridled masters of the people. The proper view is that the citizens of the Republic are freeholders in their relation to common carriers and that the latter are their agents. The perverted view adopted by judges and commissioners makes every ratepayer a taxpayer to each and all of so many little sovereignties or municipalities within their own domain and hewers of wood and drawers of water under sublords ruling them in the name and right of private corporations clothed with sovereign powers of taxation and exploitation. In the report of the commission for 1908 on the question of what constitutes the reasonable rate we find this language:

When, however, all has been said along these lines that may properly be said it nevertheless remains as a fundamental proposition that the actual investment in an enterprise needed for giving the public adequate transportation facilities is entitled to and should have a reasonable return, and no more than a reasonable return, in the form of a constant profit; and a reasonable schedule of rates is one that will produce such a result.

So, here we see the words "constant profit" used; so, here the commission declares its policy to be to fix its eyes constantly and exclusively upon railroad interests until they are secure in receipt of a "constant profit." And the same in some form is to be found in each subsequent annual report. The statement is on its face plausible and well calculated to deceive one who is simple-minded or indiscriminating in thought and expression.

The true rule is that if the public be well served at fair and reasonable rates, or rates fixed under really competition conditions, then there should be no reduction of rates so long as they produce only a reasonable return on the property. rule of rate making compels the rate-fixing authority to begin at the shipper's side of the question and to only take up the carrier's side if that becomes necessary; that is to say, when it is alleged that fair and reasonable rates for the shipper are confiscatory of the carrier's property. It is no valid objection to rates which are only fair and reasonable from the shipper's standpoint that they are unreasonably low from the carrier's standpoint, because even unreasonably low rates may yield some profit, however small, and be therefore nonconfiscatory. What the courts and commissioners have done in recent years was to start the consideration of each question from the carrier's side; to start with this heresy that at all events, aside from all other considerations and regardless of the effect upon the fortunes of shippers, the carrier was entitled not merely to protection against a confiscatory rate, but to a return, usually placed at or a little above the rate of interest on mortgage loans. To give such a rule universal application is to guarantee not only the solvency but the financial success of the most recklessly, dishonestly, and wastefully managed roads in the country, or those which but for the Government sanction thus given to exploitation of the public would have to go into liquidation and reorganize on a sound and honest basis. An exemplification of the practical application of this modern theory is seen in the Spokane rate case, where the commissioners decided that rates which satisfied the financial needs of the Northern Pacific and gave the holders of its enormously inflated stocks the dividends which they demanded were just and reasonable, though the same rates in the case of its competitor, the Great Northern, yielded nearly twice the same dividend rate in addition to enabling it to pile up a large surplus for extensions and outside investments.

It was in view of the earlier decisions of the courts that the words "fairly remunerative" in the provision requiring the commission to ascertain and enforce reasonable rates were stricken out of the Hepburn bill in the Senate in 1906, as the record of debates shows. But, contrary to congressional intent, as thus expressed, these words were, by the commission, in the Spokane case and in other cases, interpolated by construction as part of the statute, and the real purpose of the law nullified. Another proposition, well established by former decisions, has been completely ignored or overlooked by the commission, as well as the courts, in recent years; that is, that no loss, whatever its form or extent, is protected by the rule against confiscatory rates unless resulting directly from the action of a legislative or official body, though such loss might be so great as to end in insolvency. If in fixing reasonable rates on one road another in competition with it finds its rates so reduced that it can not do business except at a loss, that should be attributed to the operation of competition and only indirectly, if at all, to the action of the commission.

The decision of the commission in such a case would be unassailable and invulnerable as against any constitutional objection. The disastrous and far-reaching effects of the non-observance of this principle can scarcely be exaggerated. The counter proposition that the weaker, worse managed, more injudiciously located or constructed facility, or the one whose mechanical form has been antiquated and superseded must nevertheless be secured and safeguarded against loss and the possibility of destruction from competition has found favor in the official minds of the commissioner. Outside the commission there is no help and but little sympathy for one who has been struck down by the wheels of progress; but with carriers in interstate commerce, under the interstate-commerce act as paternally administered by the commission, it is very different. The whole situation is best shown and illustrated by a discussion of the history of some of the trunk lines, and a statement of the relations between the carriers between the Atlantic seaboard and Chicago and other cities of the Central West. I deem it unnecessary, however, to encumber the record with the details of that history which must be already well known to many Representatives.

But in the case of what are known as the trunk lines, there is presented a striking and important illustration of results flowing from the adoption by the commission of the "constantprofit" theory of rate making. The rates of the Pennsylvania and New York Central, whose lines reach all the important business centers of the West, have been fixed exclusively by the railroad managements themselves, with no limitations whatever except with reference to what the traffic would bear. Their rates have never been examined or investigated by the commission as to their reasonableness or unreasonableness It appears to have been considered entirely proper that the public should pay these companies considerably more for a given passenger service than is paid for the same service to the Baltimore & Ohio, the Erie, and certain other trunk lines. Now, it is undeniably true, a fact admitted by the railway managers at the rate-advance hearings in 1910, that a hard and fast agreement exists between all the trunk lines, and that they maintain a central association, or bureau, in New York City. Their combination would, however, be powerless to maintain unreasonable rates without the recognition given by the commission to the "constant-profit" theory. But with that recognition and adherence to their established practices, the associated trunk lines are able to exactly reverse the natural order and substitute self-interest for the interest and welfare of the public. If the economic law of competition were allowed to operate in trunk line territory the lowest rates between the East and West would be those over the most natural and direct and the best equipped routes-that is to say, over the New York Central and Pennsylvania. They have eliminated all difficult grades and curves, duplicated trackage, acquired terminal facilities, and provided themselves with superior motive power and rolling stock until they can move a given tonnage over a long distance at less than one-half what the same would cost over other and inferior roads.

By acting secretly in concert and by constant readjustment and classifications of rates, thus working them up from one level to another, they have escaped entirely the regulative powers of the commission and become a law unto themselves. The commission could not now, under existing law, even if so inclined, examine and pass upon the rate question in its application to the whole trunk-line situation and establish in trunk-line territory a system of rates. Indeed, Congress has heretofore, unwisely I think, withheld from the commission any such power. Without it it is idle to talk about any general rule for ascertaining the reasonable rate, and the rule of a constant profit for the carriers, in addition to being destructive of all other interests, is a pure invention to serve the selfish purposes of the railroads.

The difficulty of fixing reasonable rates for a single railroad lies in the great differences between conditions affecting railroads which under normal conditions would be in competition. In this same trunk-line territory are lines of varying financial strength and condition with reference to the cost of operation and volume and profitableness of traffic. For instance, there is in trunk-line territory the Pennsylvania and the Erie. The financial condition of the Pennsylvania is such that it can refund its bonds at 3 and 3½ per cent, and its stocks, though inflated and consisting largely of duplications through absorption of subsidiary lines, is far above par, and the company could continue its 6 per cent dividend rate with even lower rates than it now charges and still accumulate large annual surpluses. The Erie, according to testimony given by its vice president in the rate-advance cases, has the most pressing financial needs, paying no dividends on its common stock and being under an immediate necessity of raising $13,000,000 for general improvements. He also stated that $35,000,000 was required to put it in effective condition of construction and equipment. Now, the rates which are necessary to keep so weak an enterprise as that in a competitive position as against the stronger trunk lines must necessarily render the same rates on the business of the latter exorbitant. To reduce their rates on through traffic without a reduction also of the Erie's rates, or to increase the Erie's rates without also increasing theirs, would do the Erie no good, because the immediate effect would be to divert to them most or all of the Erie's through business. So, in order to make a practical application of the theory of a constant profit to all carriers and keep water-logged enterprises afloat, the public must pay annual bounties amounting in the aggregate to hundreds of millions of dollars over and above what the shippers consider just and reasonable rates.

The uniformity and stability of rates required by the business interests of the country can never be secured through the commission so long as its functions and powers are limited as at present by the interstate-commerce act. It must have power to revise and readjust entire schedules, and not only entire schedules of particular roads, but of whole systems and by large areas, thereby producing uniformity, justice, and reasonableness on all lines; for instance, on all the lines in trunk-line territory, on all lines in central, western, and southwestern territory, simultaneously, and from time to time, as often as is necessary to maintain justice, reasonableness, and equal treatment of shippers. The commission must be authorized to harmonize inconsistent rates, to equalize discriminating rates, and to reduce high rates wherever found. These powers it can not exercise without the enlarged powers which would be conferred by the adoption of my amendments. The only uniformity provided for in the interstate-commerce act is uniformity in the treatment by each railroad of its own patrons. The second section of the interstate-commerce act prohibits a common carrier from charging one person more than another for the same service, but it does not prohibit a carrier from charging one person more or less than another railroad charges the same person or another for an equal service.

The third section of the interstate-commerce act forbids a carrier giving any undue preference or advantage to any person or locality, or kind of traffic, over another. But this only applies to the action of a railroad toward the people or places served by it. It does not protect them from monopolistic and exorbitant rates when no competition is at hand, and so, too, with reference to the long-and-short haul provision in the fourth section.

To enable the commission to fully perform its duties, it should have power, as contemplated by my amendments, to increase, as well as to reduce, a rate. Without this additional power it can not effectively harmonize and equalize rates or deal with entire schedules.

Two principal reasons have been heretofore urged against conferring the power upon the commission to formulate or revise The first was presented by the railroads. claimed the right to initiate all rates themselves. that to confer so broad a power upon a governmental agency was to take from them the only power which rendered their properties of any value. The second objection was constitutional, though probably originating in the same fertile brains of counsel for the railroads. It was argued that if the commission could adopt and put in force rates by wholesale for one company, it could do so for all at once, which was not merely applying a statute to facts, but the exercise of outright legislative functions. The constitutional objection was not clearly, if at all, distinguishable from that based upon policy. Without turning aside to debate the Issue, I venture to pronounce both objections untenable. The Supreme Court in the Southern Pacific Lumber rate case, decided last year, limited the construction of the powers of the commission under the present law as I have just stated.

We are disadvantaged by our environment in the very midst of events constantly transpiring all around us in the world of railroad construction, finance, and operation. Transportation of persons and property are interwoven with our every-day affairs and our very existence, so that we have failed to see the trend and drift of the matter, or to discern the final solution of the problems presented to us. The figures representing the present financial status of the railroads mystify us by their magnitudes. We can only understand their significance by comparisons.

The present capitalization upon which we are paying interest and dividends by way of rates and fares is, according to the latest report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, eighteen billions of dollars. In so far as this vast sum represents actual investment, it is for the most part investment made by the people who use—and who have no choice in the matter—the facilities provided, comparatively few of whom own any of the stocks or bonds. Yet the holders of these are constantly referred to as investors whose investments must be safeguarded against any diminution of returns which have gone on increasing proportionately as their property has been added to by accretions from collections which their patrons had no option but to pay.

My theory, and that upon which my substitute is based, is that existing rates on the strong and dominating lines in each group of railways are kept too high in order that their weaker competitors may enjoy, as of right, this constant profit; that this ignores the right and interest in the subject of the public; that the commission should be constrained by law to take up the rates on each of these stronger lines as a schedule or body of rates and reduce them to the point of reasonableness and justice to the shippers, ignoring the claims of the stockholders until in the course of the reduction the confiscatory point is reached. The rates of the weaker lines are now regulated by their stronger competitors, the rates of the latter not being regulated at all. If the commissioners be given power to take up the schedules of the strong roads upon their own initiative and without having to wait for complaints, and to regulate them, by which I mean reduce their rates, the rates of the weaker lines will be thus indirectly and automatically regulated, without attention and labor on the part of the commission. That is what I have in mind in confining the physical valuation to selected systems and dealing with all the lines and subsidiaries constituting such systems in their entireties. My purpose is to have regulation assume a direct, practical, and effective form, to be more economical, and not to continue as a mere farcical but costly pretense, as it has been thus far.

There is nothing, either in the law or in what is popularly known as equity, as applied to matters of public concern, to warrant the commission in giving consideration to the alleged financial necessities of any corporation. A railroad corporation is not a public institution, nor public in any other sense which would place its affairs under the care of the Government or make it the duty of the commission to provide for its safe deliverance from the inconvenience of scant revenues, or even from The railroads are not of public concern in any such sense and their managers do not so consider them, when discussing their legal relation, except when insisting upon being safeguarded by the Government through high rates against the results of each other's competition. No matter how important any single railroad company may be to a particular city or section, not one of them is of common interest to all the people of the Nation. The transportation business of the whole country, which practically resolves itself into what may be designated as "the railroad business," is of general, or, rather, of universal interest; and it is that business rather than any particular railroad corporation which Congress has been empowered by the Constitution to regulate. This is the view thus far taken by Congress; and the proposition that the financial welfare or the financial affairs of any particular railroad ought to be considered by the commission as the subject matter or part of the subject matter of any rate case or question before them, or otherwise than as a limitation to be pleaded in a proper case by the particular carrier involved, was never within the purview of any legislation thus far enacted, but was a pure invention by commissioners unwilling to perform their full official duties.

The services and the rates are the only matters pertaining to common carriers with which the public have to deal or with which they come in contact. They have nothing to do with internal management, nor should their interest in just and reasonable rates be confounded or complicated with those of stock and bond holders. The commission would have plenty to do if they looked carefully after the rates and service.

The provision of the committee bill injecting the subject of stock and bond issues into the scheme of valuation is one, which in my judgment, is fraught with mischief. It imposes upon the commission a useless, if not in fact an impossible task. But the strongest argument against it is that it carries with it an assumption that the Government is under some sort of obligation to the carriers with respect to their internal finances and private relations to the holders of stocks and bonds. An inquiry, such as is provided for in the bill, as to the minute history of every issue of railroad stocks and bonds is one from which a commission composed of many members and provided with unlimited revenues might well wish to be excused. It appears to me as impossible as it is useless; and if the expenditures by the commission during recent fiscal years when it was engaged in only its routine duties may be accepted as an indication of the cost of the work directed by the bill to be done, we would do well to give that phase of the subject our most serious consideration. The estimates of cost given by the commissioners are mere guesses and not very shrewd guesses at that. It will take several years to obtain the data, and at the end of that time it will be fit only for the junk heap. So many changes will have occurred that the data would afford no satisfactory light on any question properly before the commission, even if it could ever be placed in manageable form. None of the commissioners nor any member of the committee was able at the hearings or is able now to suggest any definite use for the outcome of all this laboration outcome of all this labor and expense. I do not deny the power of Congress to obtain all the information specified in the bill and to spend all the money necessary to obtain it. But I look upon the theory of rate making underlying it as peculiarly and stupendously vicious. I favor a fair valuation of the properties of not more than 10 great dominating railway systems, not with a view to making the values found a basis of rates, but in order that when the commission undertakes to establish a rate or a schedule of rates in any particular instance, it may have at hand a minimum standard below which it can not go. That is not any standard prescribed by Congress, but that already fixed in the Constitution. The rule given by Congress to the commission that all rates shall be just and reasonable is the equivalent to no rule at all and leaves with the commission unlimited arbitrary power anywhere and everywhere above the confiscatory point. With the transfer of this great discretionary power I find no fault. It is the best that Congress could do under all the circumstances.

But I am interested in having the power justly and wisely executed in the public interest. And inasmuch as I know that the commission has been controlled in the exercise of power by theories which were subversive of public interests and of great practical and unfair advantage to special interests, I have provided in the substitute bill for a complete reorganization of the commission. The substitute contains a comprehensive new grant of powers to the commission, as heretofore explained, and the people are entitled to have these broad and far-reaching powers exercised by men who are untrammeled by their records and unfettered by their preconceptions of duty under the law. It is provided that the terms of office of the present incumbents shall end upon the appointment of their respective successors, but the present incumbents are not disqualified for reappointment. The membership of the commission is increased from 7 to 15, a provision which is obviously proper and necessary if these important and comprehensive new powers and duties are conferred. But I do not care to go into the details of procedure.

The revision of a vast schedule of rates for one of our great systems, affecting directly the salability and market price of thousands of articles of commerce, consulting and conserving the material interests of all the people of large sections of the country, are of equal importance with a revision of one, and if the power conferred upon Congress herein is not to remain a dead letter, or its exercise not to be purely farcical and perfunctory, this great power must be lodged somewhere. The policy of vesting it in a commission is too firmly established to be reversed; and the time has come when the work of regulation must be begun in earnest. The matter can not longer be trifled with on any shallow pretext or false theory whatever. It is a work having the practical effects of legislation, though the unquestionably constitutional form will be administrative.

There are those, and their number is not small nor are they without influence, who will object to the giving of such large discretionary powers to a commission. But to continue the methods pursued thus far is to make a mere pretense of regulating the rates and service of the railroads. Congress, after illegalizing all except just and reasonable rates, has left the determination of the question of what rates are just and reasonable entirely to the commission with the due process of law clause of the Constitution, forbidding confiscation, as an irreducible minimum, with all the traffic will bear as the maximum limit. The policy and practice of the present commissioners has, as a general rule, allowed the railroads to reach, practice, and maintain the maximum. As to what constitutes a just and resonable rate is, and under any plan of regulation through a commission that can be devised must ever remain, largely a matter of opinion, and yet it should be understood by the present commission and by any commission that may be appointed hereafter that the freight-paying public will consider any rate too high which gives the carrier too much of the margin of profit between production and sale, a margin which is represented in the selling price and must be divided between producer, carrier, and one or more intermediaries, and that any schedule or system of rates is too high which produces in any one year a large surplus to pay dividends on watered stock, or to be laid out in the same year in additions and permanent im-provements. To merely say that rates on a given kind or class of goods, or on a given commodity, are too low, or that they do not yield enough revenue to suitably compensate for the service performed in their transportation proves nothing. Nor would the fact that the service actually cost more than the rate charged necessarily justify an increase of the rate, since many services of carriers are performed at rates which do not equal Nor would evidence that any single rate produced less revenue than the outlay to have the service performed be accepted as satisfactory proof that such rate was confiscatory or even uneconomical.

These points have been decided and settled from time to time by the courts and by the commission itself, and by such decisions have conclusively established the necessity for the consideration by the commission of the relation of rates and of the combined effect of entire schedules of rates. The commission has in fact, and necessarily, exercised the power to consider such relation, to make comparison of particular rates in issue with rates not in issue—in short, to consider correlated rates in order to reach anything like intelligent conclusions, notwithstanding that the courts have, as before shown, denied to the commission the exercise of any such ample and essential powers.

The railroad managers and representatives earnestly and even persistently cultivate in the people those hopes and fears which make for corporate enrichment and popular loss. them and their activities more than to aught else is due that morbid appetite for commercial conquest which has led to a wasteful exploitation of our diminishing natural resources. a few square miles are found remote from railroad lines, the residents of that area are soon convinced of their complete isolation from the balance of the world and made to believe that the only thing needed to insure them plenteous prosperity and content is the advent of a railroad. And urban populations are in divers ways and through various channels and instrumentalities of false construction convinced that any legislative interference with railroad extension is a dire menace to progress, and that the financial condition of the railroads, reflected in earnings and dividends, is the true barometer of general business, and that a showing therein of a large balance in favor of the railroads constitutes the mainspring of universal as well as individual prosperity. Much that is promulgated on this subject begs the question and ignores not only the presence in the statute books of the interstate-commerce act but also the public duties of the carriers.

With a view to promoting general prosperity the carriers would compel large contributions from the purses of rate payers to those who in the opinion of the railroad economists are best qualified to bring about and maintain it by the circulation of money that such extensions would require. The railroad corporations dominate all other business, in addition to having absolute dominion over their own, and often rob particular sections of the country of the advantages which would naturally belong to them by reason of water transportation or otherwise, and the brazen claim is now made that their demand for high rates should be sustained in order that the shortest through route to general prosperity is by way of increased employment for labor by them, to be paid from large surpluses, only possible if high rates be charged and collected.

There was recently published an article by a leading railway president and publicist containing a eulogistic passage concerning the tendency of present freight adjustments to give to purchasers the choice of supply from various producing regions, inducing and compelling competition to hold down prices and give them uniformity. Thus we see that the railroads, while claiming and receiving exemption from each other's competition and clamoring at the doors of Congress to have legalized their practice of eliminating competition by combination, yet claim and exercise the prerogative of promoting and intensifying it among persons engaged in the production and sale of commodities.

The Interstate Commerce Commission made a report in 1904 showing that the railroads were then realizing dividends on their outstanding stocks of 5½ per cent. They also showed that at least one-half of the stocks did not represent any original investment. So the equitable owners of the railroads were then enjoying at least 11 per cent net profits on investments. Since that report was made there have been vast issues of stocks, estimated by competent authorities at $5,000,000,000. That means upon this new doctrine of "a constant profit" a vast inflation of the mortgages held by the railroad financiers ostensibly upon the properties, but in reality upon the Nation's commerce and industries. Nevertheless, the average dividend rate has increased until, according to the 1910 report of the commission, it averaged 6.43 per cent, and according to the latest report is nearer 7 per cent. And the railway overlords and those who officially favor them now claim that a guaranty of this, or at any rate some fixed income, should become a settled policy of the Government.

As a further illustration of the view taken by railroad managers the testimony of Vice President Gardiner, of the Chicago & North Western, in his testimony taken at Chicago by the Interstate Commerce Commission, in 1910, is interesting. His opinion coincides with that of the commissioners thus far expressed, that the railroads should collect rates high enough to safeguard them against embarrassment and enable them to accumulate surpluses in anticipation of all possible contingencies and periods of general depression, without reference to the nature or cause of its effect upon other interests. Speaking of the size of this surplus, he said:

It should be large enough, however, as an insurance against the loss of crops for two or three years, or a calamity, or something of that sort, It would take a wise man to say even how much surplus the North Western should have. The directors would be the only body I know of who could say that finally.

I would like to know what Vice President Gardiner and others would say to a proposition coming from the merchants, farmers, and shippers generally of the Northwest that the balance of the people of the country should be compelled to pay them for what they have to sell prices sufficiently above the competitive market price to enable them to carry their indebtedness, pay wages to their employees, profits equivalent to the dividends paid by the railroads, and still enough more for large bank balances to meet all reverses and misfortunes, including those resulting from bad management. And the company for which Mr. Gardiner spoke has carried out his theory in practice. In the past 10 years not only has it paid out of its surplus $56,000,000 as dividends on $85,000,000 of capital stock, but accumulated an mappropriated surplus of $30,000,000, constituting in the aggregate a net return to its stockholders of more than 10 per cent per annum.

In view of the fact that consideration of the pending bills and of my substitute in comparison therewith renders proper, or rather necessary, an examination of the whole subject of railroad finance, I will call attention to the railroad returns for 1910, the latest available which are complete as shown by the report of the commission. It will be remembered that in that year there was a concerted and preconcerted increase of rates, which was checked by timely action on the part of Congress authorizing the commission to suspend the increases and placing on the carriers the burden of proof to show necessity for the increases. The figures for that year are a study by themselves and an object lesson of the limitless greed and rapacity of railroad managers when left without legal check or control. The total net operating revenues—that is, the profits of operation—were $938,121,000, or an increase over 1909 of $110,306,000. One significant fact about the figures is that the gross revenues or collections for 1910 were $335,934,000 more than for the preceding year. For 1909 they were $2,443,312,900, and for 1910 $2,799,246,000. At the same rate of increase they will soon reach and pass, if indeed they have not already reached and passed, the three-billion mark, while if the increase in net revenues is maintained, these will soon reach and exceed the billion mark. Another significant fact is that the increase of net, despite all that was then said about increased cost of operation, almost exactly kept pace with the gross increase, being 131 per cent. It was a substantial increase not only of aggregates and per unit of service but per mile of railroad.

Here are the figures:

	average	Operating revenue per mile.	expense	come per
1909	233,002	$10,486	$6,983	$3,553
	236,690	11,742	7,778	3,964

The ordinary business man may, out of the profits of one year's business, buy an adjoining lot and enlarge his store or otherwise invest money to make it more convenient and attractive. He does not thereby acquire any claim, based on right, to increase the price of his goods, even if not prevented by competitive conditions. He enlarges his plant by investing more money. If he has the capital, so much the better. If he has it not, it may be expedient to borrow it in order to meet the demands of a growing business. In the latter case he must pay interest. In either case he must take the risk and determine at his peril whether the enlargement or addition will result in profit or loss. He never attempts to add the cost of enlargement or the interest on the indebtedness so increased to the price of what he has to sell, but looks to an increased volume of sales at the usual and normal profit. But the railroads object to any such view being taken of their business. Not content to await the growth of business and the rise of normal demand for the utilization of their improved facilities of transportation to restore their cash or meet their obligations, they are constantly insisting upon increases in the price for the service which they furnish and increased profits. Nor is there anything in the bill reported by the committee to prevent or check this tendency and practice of the railroads, but its inevitable effect will be to sanction, aid,

There is an important phase of railroad finance which has thus far received very little public attention, but which becomes important in any thorough consideration of the issue presented by the committee bill. Notwithstanding that the railroad corporations have worked up their net revenues from operation to the billion dollar mark, they are in receipt of additional large incomes from investments in what is really a banking or moneylending business. This refers to the large holdings of some of the principal companies in the stocks and bonds of other companies. According to the latest report of the commission on the subject the aggregate of all issues of stocks and bonds is eighteen billions of dollars, of which about four and a half billions are duplications. Most of these duplications consist of "trusteed" stocks, upon which interest-bearing bonds have been issued, constituting two distinct capitalizations, the one concealed beneath the other, upon both of which profits, to wit, dividends on the stocks and interest on the bonds are received by the holding company. But as I went into this phase of the subject at some length on a former occasion I will not now dwell upon it,

The indifference of large shippers with reference to increases of rates by changes of classification is remarkable. This remark is especially applicable to the big eastern shipper. His goods are sold "free on board," and he has no interest in the movement and but little in the rates. He leaves the classification exclusively to the railroads as a matter of no personal concern, and without even noting the changes through which the carriers gradually and almost imperceptibly work up the rates until they are actually unjust and unreasonable, without anybody being able to prove it otherwise than by comparing them with the rates made years ago, the burden being shifted to the West and South. But though we may be unable to trace out and describe the minute steps and processes by which rates have been increased, or the dates and methods, except in particular instances of litigation before the commission, yet we are able to demonstrate from general statistics that there has been a general increase in the cost of transportation. The aggregates of increased earnings and profits are no doubt due in part to increased volume of business, but that falls short of accounting for all of it. If all or nearly all of it were assignable to that cause it would involve the assumption that there had been an abnormal increase in railroad traffic during the last decade, an increase out of due proportion to that shown in the preceding decade, and we know that there was no such disproportion. Nor can it be, except in some small part, attributed to the increased capacity and effectiveness of railroad mechanism, because locomotives and cars had almost reached their maximum capacity and roadbeds had already been placed in good condition 10 years ago. Whether attributable, however, to increased rates or not, this increased and constantly increasing profitableness of railroad operation has its origin in the rates paid by shippers, rates which should be reduced, especially in view of the fact that net earnings have reached a glaring disproportion to the average returns to persons engaged in other occupations.

We all know that this question, presently and prospectively, is one of greatest concern. The question of transportation finance is scarcely less important nationally than that of government finance. The establishment by legislation of an incorrect principle or policy for dealing with the railroads may be as fatal to general prosperity as would be a vital change in our form of government. It is much to be deplored that we can not fully understand the effects of a new economic power until it has grown to gigantic proportions, and even then by long and painful experience. With respect to the railroad-system policy and practices we are now far into, but not near the end of, the educational and experimental stage. We are now in that stage of mental unpreparedness where we are liable to make huge mistakes, to be much regretted afterwards. To pass the committee bill in its present form will in my opinion be such a mistake. We have already endured many of the evils of our almost fatal optimism on this subject. We could not believe that the predicted and threatened abuses of power that we recklessly surrendered to the railroads would occur until after they had occurred in an aggravated form. We feared at first that they would displace labor and in various ways disturb our peace, but we could not foresee that they would turn the advantages we gave them to the complete domination of all other kind of business.

I would not care to go into an analysis of the meaning of railroad finance during the past 35 years. But it should not be overlooked that more than half of the $8,000,000,000 going into railroad property as the basis for the huge capitalization consisted in profits on profits. That is to say, large surpluses collected from rate payers were used in betterments, extensions, and other improvements and then more money was obtained from money lenders on these as additional security. were issued to them and a further drain on the pockets of rate payers thus instituted to keep down the interest as fixed charges. So the people were taxed in the first instance to pay for the improvements, and the same people are now being taxed to pay interest on investments in what might be equitably considered the proceeds from, or profits upon, their own invest-ments. Legally, of course, all these new constructions belong to the railroads, in addition to being a basis for the interest charges, and also operated to earn dividends for the stockholders. But I can not detain you to explain all the intrica-cles of railroad finance. When, however, we begin to discuss fixed charges and dividends we should fully understand what we are discussing. If any man could exchange eighteen billion quarter dollars, hand them over to the Federal Government, and the Government should hand over in return its perpetual obligations to pay eighteen billion 100-cent dollars, bearing interest at 7 per cent, that would be a fair illustration of what is contemplated in the constant-profit scheme of rate regulation. The man who received and held these obligations would bankrupt the Nation in 50 years. And that is what the railroads will do, if we do not right about face in our views of duty to the people in this matter. We must not permit ourselves to be won over or misled as to the meaning of this self-serving doctrine which seems to have found acceptance by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The rate of interest here specified, waiving the point that part of the investment was of surplus and not original, is really 14 per cent, or nearly five times the rate at which the Government can refund its bonds. would be thought of us if we authorized and the executive department sanctioned and carried out such a funding scheme with some powerful syndicate enjoying a monopoly of favor just as the railroads enjoy their power in the absence of legal

The impossibility of dealing with rate increases and inequalities in detail, or with any such purpose as that of reducing or equalizing them or more equitably distributing them among the 8,000 and more commodities and between the many thousands of shipping points, without conferring additional powers upon the commission must be so clear as to require no elucidation. The equalization, adjustment, and distribution of the increases and changes of rates is being constantly referred to as a science by itself, and one of great difficulty. All writers on the railroad question emphasize the delicacy of the existing rate adjustment and strive to show why the change of a single rate between any two important points necessitates thousands of changes so as to prevent widespread market disturbances, notwithstanding that the carriers have never hesitated to make many rate changes arbitrarily and by sweeping decrees of councils of traffic managers without reference to any rule or scientific basis or knowledge of or regard for the effect of such changes upon producing, shipping, and trading interests. How can the commission ever reach the ends of justice in all these matters without the possession of the broadest and most searching powers?

The fact had better be given recognition now than later, that any effective Government regulation of railroads partakes of the imperialistic, but should never be allowed to become paternalistic. The right to regulate grows out of the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution and the close connection between interstate carriers and interstate commerce itself, and the regulation itself is the exercise of a power which is to some extent arbitrary. But this attitude toward the carriers should never be held to impose upon the Government an obligation to safeguard the interests of that particular class of persons and corporations engaged in transportation any more than if they were engaged in any other line of business—any more than where the law of the land is enforced against the private citi-All business is subject and subjected to legal restrictions, regulations, and penal provisions. And in addition to the many laws which encompass the ordinary business man, he is always in contact with the law of competition, from which the railroads find ways to exempt themselves. Any Government going into the insurance business and guaranteeing constant profits in all lines of business would be proclaimed a failure and disappointment, and by none more promptly than by the prudent and conservative business men, the manufacturers, merchants, miners, and farmers of the country.

Much has been said about a claim of great and prosperous lines to enjoy, in form of greater profits, the rewards of superior engineering foresight and managerial ability. It is said that such a great institution should be conceded an organization value in the establishment of rates. Those who make that claim will regard as presumptious any attempt to answer this plausible claim, appealing as it does to our natural inclination to applaud those who have achieved success in any pursuit or line of activity. But that the claim is superficial and utterly destitute of merit is not so difficult to demonstrate as it seems to be upon first impression. In the first place it entirely ignores the distinction between private and public service. It must be borne in mind that recognition for this claim is presented at the bar of the legislative body of the Nation and consideration is asked for it as a feature of the pending bill. It is therefore to be treated as a claim preferred for recognition at the hands of the general public, and as such I will examine and discuss it.

In the first place, it entirely ignores the distinction between private and public service. Men devote superior talent and industry to the public on the same terms and subject to the same sovereign powers as they devote talent and industry of mediocre and inferior quality, or as one devotes more and another less of capital. In the second place it is impossible to find any deserving recipient of any reward that it might, upon this new theory be proper to bestow. No man living, nor the descendants of any that have died, are entitled to compensation in any form for projecting, for instance, the New York Central as it was projected. In addition to the fact that the original and builders quickly pocketed great fortunes by manipulating the stocks and bonds, and not by superior public service, is the fact that they enjoyed the favor and aid of State and municipal authorities without which their enterprise and foresight would have availed them nothing. In the third place, speaking now with reference to the present active managers, there is no basis for any claim of superior management. But assuming that the management is excellent, it is a safe assumption that all in a supervisorial capacity are in the enjoyment of adequate salaries. Then we have the corporation itself, the nonsentiment figment of the imagination which need not be considered aside from its stockholders. as to the latter, the question of why their dividends should be rendered constant and secure by action taken by the Government has not been answered and will remain unanswered. Finally, as for the claim of the New York Central and other such companies based on superior management, it does not appear that a well constructed, highly improved, and thoroughly equipped railroad is any more difficult to manage, or even as difficult, as one of a different kind. Of all mechanical appliances that used in the transportation of persons and property from place to place is the simplest, involving a comparatively low degree of mechanical skill.

Of course, a railroad system is complicated in its entirety, as would be a great department store, but the task assigned to each man is simple. Again, transportation considered apart from its instrumentalities is too important a function to come under the absolute unsupervised control of any person or persons, either in an individual or privately organized capacity. It is to modern life what chemical forces, gravitation, and motion are to the earth. It is the one thing that makes production worth while and exchange possible, as the recurrence of the seasons causes vegetation to grow and the fruits of the field to multiply. Therefore these great conquests of the wilderness, these great advances of civilization, for which so much credit is claimed for individuals and corporations, were the mere applications of forces which belong to the whole people. Those in control temporarily of these powerful instrumentalities are the mere accidents of a day. Their achievements were not attributable so much to their superior business sagacity as to popular tolerance, credulity, and optimism.

The railroads are now claiming that rates should be maintained or increased so as to produce surpluses beyond a fair return on existing capitalizations in order to sustain the credit of the railroads. In other words, they expect Congress, the President, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and everybody having anything to do with regulation to depart from all fundamental principles governing railroad rates and set up a new rule, a rule which, while leaving the control of stock and bond issues, as well as the financial and operating control, exclusively in private hands, would impose the duty first upon Congress and then upon the commission, and ultimately upon the people to insure a market price for stocks and bonds such as will facilitate the borrowing of money and steady the market for stocks and bonds. To all familiar with the subject, to all who have in mind the public interest, the proposition is absurd and preposterous on its face. It would impose a task which, even if supportable on any just principle, would be impossible to perform, even though all the constitutional powers of the Government were fully exerted.

The doctrine of an assured constant profit to unwisely projected or badly managed roads was touched upon at the hearing in the rate-advance cases in 1910, but the discussion was quickly dropped and did not receive any further serious consideration.

One of the vice presidents of the Chicago & North Western answering a query of one of the commissioners, said:

I admit that what might be justice to some lesser line would extravagantly increase us, if you please, but I have not the wisdom to say how that thing shall be disposed of.

The people's representatives in Congress and other legislative bodies had been then for a long time insisting upon a reduction of rates and had freely expressed themselves to the effect that substantial reductions should be made. And there are ample reasons for saying that few railroad officials entered upon that scheme of wholesale advances with the expectation that the commission would dare establish the advanced rates as just and reasonable. The purpose of the railroads in taking the and reasonable. The purpose of the familiar action taken by them was, no doubt, to make a demand such as the people are now making for a decrease of rates—a demand which was then and is still being urged—appear pre-posterous and unreasonable. I, for one, shall be surprised and disappointed if the millions of rate payers in the country allow their just demand for a reduction to be thwarted by such tactics. Of course the heads of some of the weaker roads, those which pretend to be having a hard struggle at best, think that any general reduction of rates would be very harsh and unjust to them, notwithstanding that the maintenance of present rates would unduly enrich the stronger companies, and of course the latter are ever ready to grasp whatever may come within their So that the question finally resolves itself into one of sacrificing general interests to temporarily sustaining and keeping afloat these weak but ambitious enterprises which might otherwise have to liquidate and reorganize on a narrower financial basis.

The rate issue thus shifts and the contest comes on between the people and greatest of all the railroad systems. We are constantly invited to consider, not what is good business policy, for the public, but to be profoundly impressed with the promotion of the financial prosperity of private corporations having extensive control of general business interests.

Of course-

Said Mr. McCrea, president of the Pennsylvania, at the rate increase investigation on October 12, 1910—it would be possible to get money by raising the interest on bonds to a substantially higher level.

But he did not think such a course would be good finance. His alternative was to increase the price of what his company has to sell. To do that is not a difficult task for monopolies of its class, in the absence of objections by the commission. But men in other business, contemplating new acquisitions for enlargement of plant or extension of operations, must obtain the needed funds as best they can and at the prevailing rates of interest. Moreover, they must find the security for their financial accommodations. But these transportation monopolies, now that the trick of concealing surpluses expended under various heads, practiced by them hitherto, is exposed and generally understood, are urging the need for further railroad extensions and facilities, and backing up their demand for high rates with an implied threat that if they be not allowed a free hand in continued and more drastic exploitation of the Nation's freight payers the extensions and facilities will not be provided and that the quality of service which they give their patrons will depreciate. What they really have in reserve is the acquisition of more and more of the weaker lines, further consolidations, and more impregnable monopolies. Any pretense that they intend to stand still is the baldest assumption, and any fear that they may or can create a commercial or financial collapse is The statement that there has been any advance in the cost of borrowed money except when borrowed by commercial and industrial interests is incredible in view of the fact that nearly all the bonded indebtedness of the New York Central, funded only a few years ago, bears interest at only 31 per cent and that of the Pennsylvania at even a lower rate. What the railroad presidents say on the subject is, to take a charitable view of it, mere speculation. They make no pretense of ever having even an unpleasant experience in testing the money market. In fact, the financial conditions of all the controlling railroads are such that no test of their ability to borrow money at the lowest rates of interest has been necessary.

In resisting measures looking to effective regulation of their rates and services the railroads are inviting something even more drastic and far-reaching. The high-handed attempt made two years ago to arbitrarily and generally increase their rates aroused the country to a high pitch of indignation and moved Congress to place what proved for that occasion an insuperable obstacle in the way in the form of the burden-of-proof provision. The action thus taken by Congress, the general and widespread discussion which ensued, and the final action adverse to the railroads taken by the commission served to focus public attention upon railroad management and finance as never before. The whole period was educational. The people will claim the full measure of justice at our hands and in the end will find ways to obtain it. The country is rapidly filling up, population is greater and more homogeneous, and the proportion of articles for use and consumption not produced on the spot but requiring to be transported is increasing year by year. In other words, and in railroad parlance, the traffic is becoming denser, and all these are pointing to the necessity for lower rates. That necessity will not regard with favor any law not having for its primary object the common interest.

I will now call attention to certain phraseology of the Adamson, or committee, bill. I pass by for the present the fact that the investigation which the commission is to undertake covers so many important subjects and so many conditions which are constantly changing that it can never be concluded. The bill limits the commission to no standard or rule of procedure and confers the widest range of authority. Among other matters, it is authorized to-ascertain and report in such detail as it may deem necessary as to each piece of property owned or used by said common carrier, the original cost for railway purposes, the cost and value to the present owner, and what increase in value is due to cost of improvements. Such investigation and report shall also show separately that property actually used in transportation and that held for other purposes, and shall contain a statement of the elements forming the basis of the estimate of value

What I have quoted is but a fraction of all that the bill authorizes the commission to do at public expense, much the larger proportion of it being, in my judgment, not only entirely futile and worthless if done but impossible of being done at all. the midst of many authorizations is the ascertainment of the value of each piece of property to the present owner and in each instance the elements forming the basis of the estimate of value. One of the meanings which I extract from all the verbiage used is that a valuation shall be placed upon railroad property as such. To value the right of way of the Pennsylvania through the gaps and narrow valleys of the Alleghenies and of the New York Central along the Hudson or of their terminal facilities in New York City for railroad purposes is to place valuations upon properties which are essentially and unqualifiedly monopolistic. The task would be vain even if possible. It would be like attempting to value the taxing and governing powers of a State or city. The bill contains not even an intimation of what the commission shall do with its valuation and report when completed; and I now call attention to tion and report when completed; and I now call attention to the fact that the commission would be, according to its own oftrepeated declarations, at a loss as to the use to make of it.

Without quoting from the hearings before the committee, I call attention to the fact that the commissioners appearing and making statements were even more vague and noncommittal as to any uses that might be made of their valuation, notwithstanding their willingness to undertake the labor, with its incidental expenditure of millions of dollars.

I will now state what I consider a very important practical objection to making the investment a standard. Some railroads were started with very small original investments of private capital. For instance, the Union Pacific and Central Pacific, now a continuous line from Council Bluffs to San Francisco, were started with enormous land grants and Government guaranties, out of which the roads were built and equipped, leaving to the stockholders the stocks and to the corporations extensive areas of land which cost them nothing. The Union Pacific was subsequently bankrupted to construct the Oregon Short Line and other unprofitable branches, and the Central Pacific was brought to the verge of insolvency by a diversion of business to the Southern Pacific. the revenues of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific became very large. Enormous sums were taken from earnings and invested in betterments, additions, and branch lines, still leaving a great annual surplus for dividends. Now, take the Sante Fe, a competing line: It represents a very large percentage of original investment, but a great deal less money has been used in its construction per average mile than in the cases of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific, notwithstanding that it is just as efficient and necessary. Now, suppose you take invest-ment as a standard, without distinguishing between original investment and investment out of income. First you would authorize the Union Pacific and Central Pacific lines to fix much higher rates from Missouri River points to the Pacific than those fixed by the Sante Fe. To say nothing of its primary injustice, that would at once divert the great bulk of traffic to the Sante Fe and defeat the very purpose of giving the Union Pacific and Central Pacific lines the higher rate.

But many roads other than the Union Pacific have been built up almost entirely out of earnings. For instance, the original invest- lack of mandatory rules of procedure for the commission, and ment in the Erie was much less than in the Pennsylvania, and yet the ultimate cost of the Erie was double per average mile that of either the Pennsylvania or the New York Central, owing to engineering difficulties. The inherent injustice of allowing rates to pay income on reinvestments of earnings is shown by Commissioner Lane's report in the recent rate-increase cases and illustrated by the result, if the theory were applied to the Burlington. (See p. 28 et seq. of Commissioner Lane's report in rate-advance cases.)

I also find very serious objections to making a separate valuation of each corporate property a rigid basis of rates. There would result nonpermissible inequalities. But that objection would be to a great extent obviated by making valuations in the aggregate of whole systems, as is provided for in my substitute. I suppose if you value the thousands of miles of the Pennsylvania system and the thousands of miles of the New York Central system you will not find a material difference per average mile. The deduction for obsolescence and depreciation will constitute an enormous subtraction from cost in many instances. The Pennsylvania will under my plan have its New York City and West Philadelphia improvements valued, but much of their total will be subtracted from cost of Jersey City and Broad Street terminals. But in each of the exceptional values it is to be spread over thousands of miles. And you may remember it is my plan to directly regulate these dominating lines and thus indirectly regulate the secondary or dependent lines.

I find some foundation for the objection recently advanced that a valuation would in some instances equal or exceed the capitalization. But you will note that I have anticipated that objection. With reference to equipment and trackage I make cost of reproduction, less a deduction for obsolescence, the standard or measure of value, in addition to averaging the mileage. I think we have no reason to fear that an excessive valuation would result if to this were added the land values of rights of way, terminal, and station grounds (actually used), plus actual cost (less depreciation) of improvements.

There remains to be noticed the objection that much, and in some instances nearly all, of the value was contributed out of earnings and were in fact contributed by rate payers. But, except in aggravated cases, which I think might be dealt with by the commission under power given it in the substitute to establish additional rules, I do not think it either just or expedient at this late date to rigidly distinguish between the values created by original investment and those added from current revenues. Nearly all the capital now employed in farming, manufacturing, and in trade represents surpluses resulting from farming, manufacturing, and trade. Besides, the difficulty, or rather impossibility, of segregating investment from reinvestment in these lines I could see no justice in it, if proposed with a view to giving them different treatment in legislation. I am aware that effective regulation requires a departure from the prevailing habit of thought, and that railroad properties must be recognized and treated more and more as governmental instrumentalities and less as subjects for private investment and profit. But if we try to begin upon too low a level we may not be able to begin at all. We have been discussing the subject of making a valuation or appraisement for years. Some one should come forward with a concrete plan. If the plan I propose in this substitute is not the best, let us hear from others and adopt the best. As for myself, I assure you that I am open-minded on the question.

I had thought of asking for the views of the Interstate Commerce Commissioners and others before introducing a substitute, but I know I would find them timid and unprepared. The quickest way to stimulate thought, elicit expression, and get it is to introduce a bill containing a practical, progressive plan, and get the question before the House.

This plan is not too moderate or conservative. It will not satisfy the railroads. They will strenuously object to the exclusion of so-called franchises or good will. Most of them will begin lobbying against it, and keep it up to the end.

It hardly seems necessary on this occasion to further call attention to amendments which should be made to the interstatecommerce act to make it effective. The whole mass of exising legislation, although much of it was well directed and intended, has proven ineffective to prevent an enormous increase of aggregate cost of transportation, dangerous massing and concentration of wealth with attendant general distress, and enormous and startling inflation of corporate securities, the dividend and interest charges on which constitute an ever-increasing burden and drain from all business and all industry.

If I am not much mistaken, there has been thus far no real bona fide regulation of interstate commerce. There is a total so much is left to discretion that the commissioners can, without a violation of law, exercise at once and over the whole subject powers which are as extensive as and, in some respects, more extensive than those exercised by either of the three departments of the Government or by all combined.

The present law amounts to just this: The carriers shall deal fairly by the public, and when a question of fairness or unfairness is raised the commission shall sit as an arbitration board with full powers in the premises. The reports in the rateincrease cases fully supports this view. I understand from these reports that the value of property devoted to the public use, even if any satisfactory proof of it had been made, would have constituted only one of many important elements in the And I infer from the language of both Lane and Prouty, commissioners, that if the railroads had made strong showings as to revenue requirements many of the proposed increases would have been allowed. Be that as it may, it is a fact, one which should arouse serious concern, that the railroads are now engaged in the preparation of a valuation of their properties to be used in making up a case upon which the commission can not reasonably prevent further increases in their rates. So the issue before the commission between the carriers and the public has been within two years converted from one raised by shippers demanding a reduction of rates to one now raised by the railroads for an increase. Though widespread protest, amounting almost to a popular uprising, stand in the way of a wholesale increase, practically the same end may now be reached gradually, covertly, and in detail, and without attracting public attention.

Transportation rates, both for freight and passengers, are too high in this country, and if I had the power I would materially reduce them. Measures of public justice are often harsh. And if rates were properly reduced on the great dominating railways, that would without any further legislative act whatever force several important and many unimportant railroad companies into receiverships and reorganizations. And yet, sooner or later, Congress must assert its constitutional powers. And ver.

Why do newspapers, lawmakers, and Interstate Commerce Commissioners discuss this as they would a humanitarian question? The corporations are artificial, nonsentient. The officers and agents are presumably interested only to the extent of their salaries, which are not to be affected by any reduction proposed by anyone. The stockholders are but a small percentage of the entire population, having no better right to obstruct measures in the public interest than have the smallest beneficiaries of exorbitant taxation.

While the commission now has unlimited discretion in determining the reasonable rate and in allowing a just and reasonable or in disallowing an increased rate, it has no power to increase a rate. Lacking this, it can not take up a schedule of rates in which inequalities and discriminations exist and adjust and equalize them. If, to illustrate, the commission could increase the rates of sugar and coal going West, that would permit of a material reduction on many other commodities without or with only moderate diminution of revenues. This would also diminish the power of the sugar trust and coal trust to injure western interests. The commission should be given the power to revise and readjust whole schedules. In other words, it should be given real rate-making power. Along with this increase should come a numerical increase in the membership of the commission and its division into departments.

And in view of the fact that the railroads have been vastly aided and benefited by the existence and work of the commission, the fee system ought to be established requiring them, in each instance of a decision adverse to the carrier, to pay all the costs and expenses of the contest. I have not seen fit to provide for that in the substitute because I did not care to insert a mere matter of detail upon which there might arise wide differences of opinion and extensive discussion, but I would heartily accept an amendment to that effect. Undoubtedly Congress should give attention to the great and increasing expenses of the commission, and the institution of the fee system would much more than offset the increased cost to result from enlarging the membership of the commission.

Notwithstanding the extreme length of my discourse, I have not said all that I would like to have said nor have I explained all the features of the substitute which I ask you and each of you to carefully examine. The subject is one the importance of which is second to none with which we have to deal. Indeed, the problem of railroad transportation, especially the monopoly and cost phases of it, is of such magnitude as to cast a shadow over the land; but I trust we shall prove equal to meeting it courageously and dealing with it intelligently and justly.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hobson] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] 10 minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it will be noted that the bill itself provides that the commission shall investigate and ascertain the value of the property of every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act and used by it for the convenience of the public. It is to ascertain the value of the property. In making investigation the bill further provides that the commission shall ascertain and report in such detail as they may deem necessary as to each piece of property owned or used by the carrier, the original cost for railroad purposes, the cost and value to the present owner, and what increase in value is due to cost of improvements. Then the bill provides that the valuation made by the commission shall be fixed and considered as What is that valuation made by the commission? It is the value of the property to the present owner, so far as we can ascertain from the bill; the valuation of the property of the carrier, used by it for the convenience of the public, to the present owner. It is true the bill provides the ascertainment of the original cost for railway purposes and what increase in value is due to the cost of improvements; but the value which is finally to be ascertained is the value of the property to the All of the rest of the detail provided in the bill present owner. is a mere method of making the valuation, which ought to be left out of the bill, because the commission itself ought to be the ones who are the best judges as to the method of proceeding and making a valuation for their information and their benefit when they arrive at a judgment concerning the rates. This valuation, if no protest is filed by the railroad company, becomes final, but if a protest is filed by the railway the commission is obliged to take the protest into consideration.

I am not entirely clear as to what will be the result of ascertaining the present value to the railway companies of the property used for railway purposes. Some years ago a railroad desired to enter the city of Chicago and expended for that purpose, I believe, some $10,000,000 or $15,000,000 to have the right of way into the city. That road and another road somewhat similarly situated have no such right of way yet, but some of the original road that came into the city of Chicago. Those original rights of way cost very little. The Illinois Central original rights of way cost very little. The Illinois Central Railroad, which comes into the city of Chicago along the lake front, with which most of you are familiar, came in over the lake bed, and cost practically nothing at the time. The value of that right of way to the present owner of it amounts to millions upon millions of dollars now. It could not be replaced to the Illinois Central Railroad probably for $50,000,000.

Under the provisions of this bill the commission is required to ascertain the present value to the railroad company of that roadway, and it is supposed to take that into consideration in fixing the rates of the railroad. Of course there is no other object in ascertaining the value of this property on this basis except as it may affect the fixing of railroad rates. There is not a railroad in the United States probably passing through towns that have grown in size since the road was constructed where the present value of that property to the railroad company for its uses does not far exceed not only the cost to the railroad company but its capitalization, which it goes into and

There are people who believe that you can take the value of any one railroad property and thereby determine absolutely the rate. There are seven or eight or nine trunk lines between Chicago and New York, all engaged in carrying in competition freight between those points. Some of those roads run fairly directly between Chicago and New York, Some of them run through Kentucky and Virginia; some through Canada. roads which have the nearest routes probably cost the least. I do not know. The roads which have the longest routes probably carry the freight the cheapest. The longer routes require a little cheaper freight rate in order to get the freight carried over that line, because few shippers will prefer to send their freight up through Canada and around through the New England States in order to reach New York when they can send it directly east over the Lake Shore or the Pennsylvania Railroad. And yet it is perfectly patent to anyone that after you arrive at the physical valuation, or the present value, or whatever you please, the capitalization of those roads—and they will not be the same—the rate that is to be fixed must be the same, practically speaking. The Pennsylvania Railroad Co. can not make a different freight rate between Chicago and New York from that of the Lake Shore and the New York Central Railroad Co., and the Canadian railroad company can not make a rate much different, at least, from the roads which run through Kentucky-the Big Four and the Chesapeake & Ohio.

The valuation of the railroads ought to be known. judgment the original interstate-commerce law gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to make a physical valuation of the railroads or to acquire any other information which relates to the railroad business. It is possibly true that they have not done so because of a lack of appropriations. It is mainly true, I think, because they thought it was easier to keep on telling Congress how much they needed the power to make the valuation instead of doing that which they already had the power to do. It became the custom of the commission in every one of its annual reports to ask for increased authority from Congress. I presume that custom will continue, no matter what Congress does, although I am in favor, so far as I am concerned—as we have undertaken to carry out the theory of letting the Interstate Commerce Commission practically manage the railroads of the country-of giving them all the information that is possible.

I do not believe the present bill, if enacted into law, will accomplish a great deal of good. It will not fix rates by ascertaining the present value of the property. What we ought to do is to govern and regulate the issuance of stocks and bonds by the railroad companies and prevent the manipulation of stocks and bonds by a few gentlemen for their own benefit with secret information which they obtain. I wish I could have my way, so that every man and woman in the United States who desired to invest a little of savings might know something true in reference to the stocks and bonds which they might desire to buy, and then feel that that investment on their part could not be taken away from them by manipulation, which has been the custom in the past. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPLELL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this bill, although I regard it as incomplete. Merely providing for finding the valuation of railroads accomplishes but a short step in the right direction. The provision in the Mann bill as it passed the House in the Sixty-first Congress on this subject was more complete, and it is unfortunate that that provision went out of the bill in another part of the Capitol, where it was contended that Federal control of the issuance of stocks and bonds of railroads was an interference with the doctrine of State rights. assume this bill is the best we can hope for at this time.

Two results should follow the ascertainment of the valuation of railroads: First of all, a regulation of the issuance of their stocks and bonds. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] closed as I would begin, if I had the time, with a discussion of one of the most vital subjects connected with this matter-the issuance of stocks and bonds of common carriers. Every investor eight to know, by the valuation of the property, what his stock is worth. He ought to know the amount of stock that has been issued, the amount of bonds that have been issued, and by that be able to place some value upon the property that he has purchased. Then let the manipulators manipulate. Then let the stock gamblers gamble. If the investor who owns the stock does not see fit to throw his property upon the market for sale, it will still represent a value based upon the actual value of the road.

The time is coming when investors will be found in every part of the country who will purchase stocks of the transporta-tion companies of the country, and that sort of investment should be encouraged.

The stock of transportation companies ought to be made a safe investment for every person who has the money to invest.

It ought not to be a speculation or perhaps, more properly, gambling. The matter ought not to be left to the manipulators who sometimes gamble in the price of the stocks of railroad This has been done and no doubt will continue to commanies. be done until either the State where the gambling places are operated or the Nation that controls interstate commerce shall find a way to put a stop to that species of stock manipulation and gambling. The day is past when promoters should have the right to fix the amount of either the capital stock or the bonded indebtedness of railroads without limit or check upon

The bill therefore ought to be completed by providing for a control of the issuance of stocks and bonds of these companies, based upon the valuation as found by the commission.

Then the second step should follow, that of fixing rates upon the valuation so found. The discussion by Members here this afternoon has related almost wholly to the question of freight rates, while as a matter of fact the bill does not provide for the fixing of rates at all.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. CULLOP. Is it the gentleman's idea that there ought to be a provision in the bill that when the commission ascertains the value of the property all stocks in excess of the ascertained value shall be canceled?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; increases prohibited in the future.

Mr. CULLOP. But the stock has already been issued. These corporations exist. They are organized in the States, under

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand that, but Congress assumes the right here to find the valuation of railroad property. It does not do so to gratify the caprices of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and it should be for the purpose of fixing the amount of stock or bonds that may be issued upon railway property in the future and to fix rates.

Mr. CULLOP. It would give notice by such reports to the public of the excess in amount of stock over the actual value of the property, but it is also for the purpose of ascertaining the facts upon which an equitable rate can be established.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The bill does not so provide, and I want to call attention to that if the gentleman will let me have my time. I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana on this subject. Until this afternoon I had heard it said that the tariff alone was responsible for the high cost of living; but after listening to the gentleman from Indiana I came to the conclusion that, after all, the campaign of last fall was made upon an entirely erroneous hypothesis, and that the cost of living is attributable wholly to the high cost of transportation on the railroads. But this bill does not propose that the value of the railroads shall be used as a measure for fixing rates.

Mr. CULLOP. I beg the gentleman's pardon. That is one of the elements that enters into it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CAMPBELL. My contention is that this bill should provide that the information obtained as to the value of railroads shall be used as a basis for fixing rates. Otherwise, what is the object of ascertaining the value of the property if not for the purpose of fixing the amount of stocks and bonds that shall be issued and the freight and passenger rates that may be charged in the use of the property of the common carriers? Believing that the information the commission is authorized to get by this bill may be put to these uses, I shall vote for the

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Escu].

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] five minutes.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I desire merely to make a general observation.

In my travels over the country I have not found any man who wants any corporation to give him anything or to sell him anything for less than what it is reasonably worth, and the idea that is now in the minds of the American people, known as the Progressive movement, does not mean anything more than that they desire laws passed by Congress that will provide that they shall not be charged unreasonable rates by public-utility cor-porations and that they shall not be charged unreasonable prices by industrial corporations that have acquired monopolies in their several lines of business.

The remedy is simple. Whenever you get a majority of men in Congress who desire to serve the public it will not require the brains of a Daniel Webster, of a John C. Calhoun, of a James G. Blaine to formulate laws suitable to meet the present situation in the United States. The only requirement is that we get a majority of men in our legislative bodies, both in the States and in the United States, who desire to do the right thing.

Now, for years there has been an agitation in favor of giving to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to make physical valuation of the property of the common carriers coming under the interstate-commerce act. I desire to congratulate the committee for having reported this bill, also the Committee on Rules for having brought in a rule making it a privileged bill, and to congratulate the majority party in control of this House at this time upon its certain passage. You are on the right track, and so long as you stay on the right track you will enjoy the confidence of the American people.

I agree entirely with the minority leader in the comments he made here this afternoon and the comments of several of my colleagues on the Republican side of this House that this bill does not go far enough. It should be made broader; it should specify that the making of this valuation of the common carriers is for the purpose of fixing reasonable rates; and it should specify also that the Interstate Commerce Commission may regulate the issuance of stocks and bonds in the matter of carriers engaged in interstate commerce.

But I wish to be frank enough as a member of the Republican Party to say that our party was in control here for 16 years and did not give to the country as good a bill as this in this connection.

We passed one in the House, I think, in 1910. Mr. MADDEN.

I introduced the bill.

Mr. LAFFERTY. My colleague reminds me that a bill of this character was passed in the House. I was not aware of that, and I want to say that the Republican House that passed it is entitled to great credit. However, we are all here now to represent the country regardless of party lines, regardless of any other considerations than those of the public welfare. That is why, Mr. Chairman, I desire to remind my colleagues that as poor as I may be in merit and ability I went back to my district and was reelected by an increased majority on the 5th day of last month. Any Member of this House who comes here and serves the public to the best of his ability, as he holds up his hand and takes a solemn oath that he will do, will be trusted by the people of this country. Of course we may be misrepresented and may not be able to meet the false accusations, but if the man is in reasonably good health and has a good nervous system and gets out and meets the opposition in an open fight he will win out.

The point I desired to make was that the people of the United States do not demand anything radical or unreasonable. We had a little illustration of the conservatism of the people in Oregon at the election on the 5th of last month. A proposition was submitted to pass a graduated income-tax law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, the proposition was submitted to the vote of the people as to whether we would adopt a graduated single tax which provided that any man owning more than $10,000 worth of real estate should pay a specific, graduated tax of $2.50 per thousand, and so on up, as the amount of his holdings increased, until it got to $30 a thousand on $100,000 and over. Naturally, nine voters out of ten who went into the voting booths on the 5th of last month in Oregon would have benefited upon the surface of things by the passage of such a law. If the voters were actuated by their selfish interests, if they did not look beyond that, they would have passed the graduated single tax. It was urged by the Fels fund commission, and was ably presented in an argument to the voters and in the voters' pamphlet of that State. Yet the people of Oregon went into the polls and defeated that consti-tutional amendment by a vote of 5 to 2. That is only an illustration going to show that you can trust the people to be conservative and that they will not pass a law until thoroughly satisfied that it will work no injustice to any man.

In conclusion, permit me to say that when each State in this Union has created a State public-service commission having the power to fix the rates of monopolies doing business wholly within the State, and the power to make physical valuations to that end, and when Congress has made the Interstate Commerce Commission a Federal public-service commission for the same purpose, having jurisdiction over interstate monopolies, the question of the control of monopolies will have been settled. And when you reduce the tariff properly—and I am in favor of a reasonable protection for the people of this country-and provide for an asset currency to prevent a few men in Wall Street from cornering our money and bringing on a panic whenever they feel like it, you will enjoy in this country, in the whenever they feet like it, you will enjoy in this country, in the future as in the past, the greatest advancement, both moral and temporal, of any country in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I think that the bill has been so ably and thoroughly and exhaustively discussed in general debate that we may close the general debate at this time and read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule. If no one wishes to use further time, I will ask that that be done.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment under the five-minute rule.

There was no objection, and the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 19 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, be amended by adding thereto a new section, to be known as section 19a and to read as follows:

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry. This bill consists of one section and a number of paragraphs. Is it subject to amendment by paragraphs, or may amendments to any part be offered at the conclusion of the reading of the entire bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that this bill is subject to amendment by sections only.

Mr. MANN. There is but one section in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It so appears to the Chair. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. MANN. There is but one section in the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sic. 16a. That the commission shall investigate and ascertain the value of the property of very common carrier subject to the provisions of this act and used by it for the convenience of the public. For the purpose of such an investigation and ascertainment of value the commission is authorized to employ such engineers, experts, and other assistants as may be necessary, who shall have power to administer assistants as may be necessary, who shall have power to administer of every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act in detail, and shall classify the physical elements of such property in conformity with the classification of expenditures for road and equipment, as prescribed by the interstate Commerce Commission.

secretain and report, in such detail as it may deem necessary, as to each piece of property owned or used by said common carrier, the original cost for railway purposes, the cost and value to the present owner, and what increase in value is due to cost of improvements, actually used in transportation and that held for other purposes, and shall contain a statement of the elements forming the basis of the estimate of value. They should also show, as the commission may deem necessary, the history of the organization of the present corporation which are the state of value. They should also show, as the commission may deem necessary, the history of the organization of the present corporation which are the state of the state of the commands of such companies, and how the moneys were expended or paid out. The said investigation and report shall also show the amounts and dates of all bonds cutstanding against each public-service corporation and the amount paid therefor, and the names of all stockholders and bondholders with the amount held by each, and also the name of each to the commercial commands of the commercial property of the commission shall be commenced within 60 days after the approval of this act and shall h a protest of the same with the commission. If no protest is filed within 30 days, said valuation shall become final.

If notice of protest is filed by any common carrier, the commission shall fix a time for hearing the same, and shall proceed as promptly as may be to hear and consider any matter relative and material thereto which may be presented by such common carrier in support of its protest so filed as aforesaid. If after hearing any protest of such valuation under the provisions of this act the commission shall be of the opinion that its valuation is incorrect, it shall make such changes as may be necessary, and shall issue an order making such corrected valuation final. All final valuations by the commission and the classification thereof shall be published and shall be prima facie evidence relative to the value of the property in all proceedings under this act.

The provisions of this section shall apply to receivers of carriers and operating trustees. In case of failure or refusal on the part of any carrier, receiver, or trustee to comply with all the requirements of this act and in the manner prescribed by the commission such carrier, receiver, or trustee shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500 for each such offense and for each and every day of the continuance of such offense, such forfeitures to be recoverable in the same manner as other forfeitures provided for in this act.

That the district courts of the United States shall have jurisdiction, upon the application of the Attorney General of the United States at the request of the commission, alleging a failure to comply with or a violation of any of the provisions of this act by any common carrier, to issue a writ or writs of mandamus commanding such common carrier to comply with the provisions of this act.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: On page 6, line 19, substitute the word "section" in place of the word "act," after the word "this."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, line 19, strike out the word "act" and insert in lieu thereof the word "section."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Page 7, line 7, strike out the word "act" and insert in lieu thereof the word "section."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 5, line 10, by adding after the word "property" the following: "showing such revision and correction as a whole and in each of the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia."

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Exactly the same language is used on page 4, lines 3 and 4, so that not only the original report but all subsequent reports shall conform to the State laws as much as may be possible. That will coordinate with the State authorities.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a suggestion, with some hesitation, and still I believe it is an improvement.
In line 8, page 3, the words "for the purposes of such payment," seem to me to be surplusage or to convey no clear menning, because there are no payments mentioned above, and "such payments" seems to refer to something foregoing. I think the sentence would be complete just to let it end with the word "out," so that that part of the sentence would read "the net and gross earnings of such companies, and how the moneys were expended or paid out." I would strike out all after the word "out," in line 8.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY. Certainly. Mr. MANN. I think the word "for" ought to be made Mr. MANN. I think the word "for" ought to be made "and"—"and the purpose of such payments."
Mr. HARDY. Well, with the word "and" it would be all

Mr. MANN. It may possibly be a misprint somewhere.
Mr. HARDY. I will offer, then, the amendment to strike out the word "for" and substitute the word "and." However, that would still leave in the words "such payments," when there are no payments referred to before that.

Mr. MANN. It provides for the moneys expended and paid out and the purposes of such payments.

Mr. HARDY. I will make the motion to strike out the word

"for" and insert the word "and."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 8, by striking out the word "for" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "and."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

In line 2, page 2, insert, before the word "property," the word "physical"; also, in line 2, page 4, insert, before the word "property," the word "physical."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I do not know I can add anything more to what I said when I had the floor before with reference to this question, but the more I think of the matter the more important it seems to me that this valuation of the commission should be confined to a physical valuation of the property. Now, it has been said during the afternoon a number of times that this valuation was not necessarily for ratemaking purposes at all, but I call the attention of the committee to this fact-that this valuation must be for no other purpose, for the bill itself provides for a valuation when certain procedure has been taken, so it seems to me that it is for no other purpose than the purpose of a basis for making rates. I want particularly to call the attention of the committee to the familiar and leading case of Smyth against Ames. There it is held:

We hold, however, that the basis of all calculations as to the reasonableness of rates to be charged by a corporation maintaining a highway under legislative sauction must be the fair value of the property being used by it for the convenience of the public.

Just exactly what is proposed to be done by the bill in its present form, the fair value of the property of the carrier. Then the decision goes on to say:

And in order to ascertain that value, the original cost of construction, the amount expended in permanent improvement, the amount and market value of its bonds and stock, the present as compared with the original cost of construction, the probable earning capacity of the property under particular rates prescribed by statutes, and the sum required to meet operating expenses are all matters for consideration and are to be given such weight as may be just and right in each case.

Now, there are several elements that the Supreme Court speaks of in this case that are to be considered in arriving at the value, but there are only three of those elements that relate to the physical valuation of the property.

A great many illustrations have been given this afternoon, or a great many questions asked, as to what shall be done in a given case. For instance, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted]. Here is one railroad, the cost of which was twice, perhaps, the cost of another, and the value actually might be twice the value of another, and yet as the bill reads in its present form you are asking the commission, you are compelling the commission, in an ex parte proceeding, to find the value of those two roads, and when they have found the value the commission itself will be governed by the value so found, for it is the value of the property that becomes the basis for rate-making purposes.

Now, I do insist that that question, so far as the ultimate question of value is concerned, should not be left to be decided in this ex parte proceeding. When we have the physical valuation we have one of the indispensable elements that are When we have the physical necessary. The commission should have that, should keep it revised from time to time, but in determining the ultimate question of value of a given property of a common carrier, it seems to me that with this information they should be left free to make that value in a given case when the carrier itself has an opportunity to be heard and presents all the facts before it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman convinced that in making the rates the court ought not, or can not, or will not, take into consideration the value of a franchise?

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. Well, if you are to obtain the value of a property as an aid to rate making, is it not desirable to obtain both the value of the physical property and also the value of the franchise?

Mr. LENROOT. That might be.

Mr. MANN. Would not that be the case under the provisions of this bill?

Mr. LENROOT. That is the point exactly. They might find the value of a franchise, and find the value of a great many other intangible things that become settled-that become finalin this ex parte proceeding. But I say that ought not to be done in that kind of proceeding, because those things can be determined in a given case by testimony. It is the physical valuation that takes one or two or three years of time. It is that valuation that the Interstate Commerce Commission has been asking for; it is that valuation that the commission could not get under the 9 or 10 months' suspension of the interstate commerce law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin have five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection,

Mr. MANN. Here is the point I wanted to get at: The ascertainment of this information is for the aid of the commission. They may have a case before them involving the freight on lemons, and another on eggs, between two points not far apart, where it is absolutely impossible to acquire the information in reference to the value of the property for the settlement of that case. In ascertaining the information is it not desirable to ascertain the value of all of the property, differentiating, as the gentle-man would suggest, the value of a physical property and the value of the other property, which is for the aid of the com-mission and for the aid of any shipper who has a complaint? Is it not desirable to obtain all the information?

Mr. LENROOT. I think it is, and I would have no objection to that being a separate element to be found by commission. My point is that I am opposed to the commission making the ultimate finding in this proceeding of the value of the property, which will bind the Government or the commission afterwards.

Mr. MANN. I am not sure that the gentleman is not correct, but the bill provides that the statement of the valuation shall contain a statement of the elements forming the basis and elements of value. Under this bill would not the commission be required to obtain the value of the property and ascertain how much of that is the physical value and how much is the value of the franchise, if any, and the other elements that go into

Mr. LENROOT. I think the gentleman from Illinois has helped me to make plain what my idea is. I have no objection in the world to the commission finding all these different ele-What I do object to is the commission combining all of those into a final, ultimate finding at this time of the value of the property as a whole.

Mr. MANN. Of course, I agree with the gentleman

Mr. MADDEN. In a single item, does the gentleman mean? Mr. MANN. That that is not the proper method of doing it, although it is probably better than it is now.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman yield? Mr. LENROOT. I would like to call attention to one other Evidently from the title of the bill it was the intention or thought of the committee that the valuation should be confined to a physical valuation, for the title of the bill is, "Providing for physical valuation of the property of common carriers.'

Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am somewhat confused about the question of fixing rates on the basis of the valuation of transportation lines, for the reason that sometimes the addition of value is made by an additional expenditure of money that increases the facilities of the transportation line to such an extent that it can reduce the rates and be able to pay a greater dividend than ever on the amount of money invested, as, for instance, by shortening a line or by bridging or by tunneling.

I have in mind one place in Utah where they constructed a line across Salt Lake at great expense. I am informed that it is a great investment. At other places they have added tunnels which add to the expense of the line. In still other places they have constructed elevated roads, as has been done in Chicago. In such cases there has been a great expenditure of money, but, due to the fact that they can transport much faster and with a reduced force of workingmen, made possible by the elimination of watchmen, and so on, they have reduced the cost of transportation to such a extent that even though the value of their property is much greater they still can reduce their freight

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, that is often true. The gentleman understands. Mr. BUCHANAN! Can the rates be fixed justly and equitably to all concerned on the basis of the valuation of the property?

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman understands, and the committee will understand that, with certain exceptionsrare—the carrier is always entitled to such a rate as will pay operating expenses and bring a fair return on the value of the property; and that is why the value of the property becomes a very important question.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield? Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Has the gentleman considered the paragraphs beginning on page 5, perhaps, with the paragraph in the middle of page 6? Those two paragraphs in substance state this, that after the commission shall have completed the valuation, and before the valuation shall have become final, the commission shall give notice to the carrier, stating the valuation placed upon the several classes of property. Now, that would include the physical property and the franchise-

Mr. FOWLER. And it might not—
Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. And the going value of the property in actual use.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin

[Mr. Lenroot] be extended five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? There was no objection.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Then the commission shall make a separate valuation of those several classes, covering everything that the gentleman has stated. Then the notice shall be given to the carrier. The carrier then has its hearing before the commission before the value of these several classes has been definitely fixed by the commission. Now, after the commission receives all the evidence that it sees fit from the carrier as to the different classes, it makes an order, as provided on line 11 of page 6; it issues an order making such corrected valuation final, and after that it provides for making such corrections as it sees fit later; and then these final values, including the values of the various classes, shall be made public and become prima facie evidence. Now, do not these two provisions of these two paragraphs accomplish what the gentleman has in mind? Mr. LENROOT. I think not, because experience has demonstrated that they do not in every case where the question has come up. I know it is true in the case of railroad litigation in Wisconsin, where I was interested as one of the attorneys in that litigation. The cases of valuation comprehended all of these different elements, but in my opinion it is impossible, when you come to fix the valuation, to divide it up into these various elements.

For instance, after taking all these elements then you must add a sum because of its being a going concern, a sum for the cost of building up the business for a series of years. That has been approved by the courts; and yet it will not show in any of these separate elements that are provided for by this schedule; and when the commission comes to make its final valuation, in my judgment, it will be compelled to add things that it can not distribute into the different elements; and the commission should be left free, according to the testimony in each case, when it comes to make its final determination, having these elements in the findings as provided in the bill; but when it comes to determine the question finally, it should be left free to consider all of these questions. In my judgment, it is not left free to do so under the bill as it now stands.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Does not the method proposed by the gentleman put a much heavier burden on the shipper who desires to contest a rate than the provision that I have just read from the bill? In other words, if in each contest the shipper is compelled to prove the additional facts stated by the gentleman, while in the bill these matters are made matters of record with the commission, does it not put an additional burden on the shipper which in some cases may be very

Mr. LENROOT. I think not; because in nearly every case these will be matters of judgment for the commission, considering the property of the carrier as a whole and the character of its business. It can not be separated into different elements. They will have all of this information, so far as the different elements are concerned, all that any investigation can produce. It will remain a matter of judgment on the part of the commission, but my idea is that the judgment should be exercised at the time the question is up for rate-making purposes, rather than in an ex parte proceeding.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.
Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will permit me, my understanding of his proposed amendment is that it inserts in line 2, page 2, just before the word "property," the word "physical."

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That does not require, does it, that the physical valuation of property shall be made separate from the valuation of all other classes of railroad property? simply requires the physical valuation of the property to be

Mr. LENROOT. It is limited to the valuation of physical property

Mr. CRUMPACKER. So that the purpose of the bill is simply to ascertain the value of the physical properties of railroads?

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, these other provisions with reference to stocks and bonds are not affected by this amendment. They remain the same.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. So that the question of the value of frauchises and other rights that may vitally affect even the physical value will not be included in the bill at all if the gentleman's amendment is adopted.

Mr. LENROOT. The franchises will not.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Or any other intangible rights.
Mr. LENROOT. No other intangible rights.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin and the strong argument which he has made, but I hope this amendment will not pre-vail, because my understanding is that it narrows the scope of the bill, and to that extent limits its usefulness in the work of the commission. If I understand this bill, the object of it is to furnish the commission with information which the commission needs in order to enable it to fix rates. Well, the commission needs all elements of value to be considered the same as courts do, because if the commission can not consider every element of value that the courts will consider in determining whether the order is to be a valid one or not, it seems to me that would be narrowing the scope of the bill, and that the bill will not accomplish all the purposes that it can accomplish by leaving it unamended.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.
Mr. LENROOT. The bill does not limit the power of the commission in any way. The only purpose of the amendment is to leave the ultimate question of value to be determined by the commission later according to the facts, having all this information before the commission.

Mr. SIMS. As I understand it, there is to be an inventory investigation and valuation. The commission will set down the physical value and any other element of value which the commission ascertains in this investigation which it would regard as its duty in fixing a rate. I can not see that it would add to the expense of making the investigation or cause it to be delayed; and then the facts ascertained as to any other element of value will be no more binding on the commission or on a court passing on it than will the finding of the element of physical value. It is all only prima facie.

Mr. LENROOT. The commission will be bound thereafter by its own valuation unless it afterwards takes the procedure of revising and correcting the valuation. I would leave the commission free to make use of all the information provided in the bill, but come to its own conclusion in regard to the question of the rates.

Mr. SIMS. I understand the commission will not determine the rate by any one element of value, but upon the consideration of all the information that it acquires in this investigation or that it may have otherwise.

Mr. LENROOT. If the commission makes a finding of valuation and thereafter is to be permitted to go back and consider any different elements that have gone to make up the final determination—that is what I object to.

Mr. SIMS. If a question should arise sufficiently long after the valuation upon a charge that the valuation has changed, that the physical value is greater or less, or any other item of value is greater or less, the commission will investigate that statement on application made affecting a rate based on the former valuation. It would not be precluded from making any additional investigation that the new conditions may authorize.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true; but they might and very likely will be mistaken as to some of their calculations as to what elements should be considered in arriving at the value.

Mr. SABATH. Who shall pass upon it but the commission, and they are to have all the light and information that they

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

I will yield to the gentleman from Texas. Mr. SIMS.

Mr. HARDY. I want to suggest that this bill really only provides for a valuation of the physical property; that is the intention of it. I believe that it is possibly liable to considerable misinterpretation. Several gentlemen have spoken about the valuation of the franchise as part of the value, but this bill itself provides the standard by which they shall fix the value, as follows:

as follows:

Sec. 19a. That the commission shall investigate and ascertain the value of the property of every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act and used by it for the convenience of the public. For the purpose of such an investigation and ascertainment of value the commission is authorized to employ such engineers, experts, and other assistants as may be necessary, who shall have power to administer oaths, examine witnesses, and take testimony. The value shall be ascertained by means of an inventory which shall list the property of every common carrier subject to the provisions of this act in detail, and shall classify the physical elements of such property in conformity with the classification of expenditures for road and equipment, as prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Then it further prayides that in such investigation the com-

Then it further provides that in such investigation the commission shall have authority to ascertain and report in such detail as it may deem necessary as to each piece of property owned or used by said common carrier, the original cost for railway purposes, the cost and value to the present owner, and what increase in value is due to cost of improvements.

The bill really only provides for a physical valuation of items, a detailed list of the property of the company, and it was not intended, as I read the bill, to incorporate the value of the franchise in the report required of the commission. I believe that you will have clarified the situation by putting the word "physical," as suggested by the amendment of the gentleman from isconsin. That will make the meaning indisputable.
Mr. SIMS. It has been stated by a gentleman on the com-Wisconsin.

mittee, who undoubtedly states it authoritatively, that this bill was drawn by the Interstate Commerce Commission itself. As far as I am concerned, I would not know how to draw such a bill, and unless I was satisfied that this amendment would not restrict the object and purpose of the bill-that is, that it would not narrow rather than widen the scope of the bill-I would not want to accept this amendment under the circumstances. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, page 1, line 3, by striking out the words "section 19 of an" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "the."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out the words "section 19 of an" and insert in lieu thereof the word "the."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as the bill reads it provides that section 19 of the act to regulate commerce be amended by adding section 19a thereafter. Of course section 19 of the act is not amended at all. It is entirely a separate proposition from the one involved here. The amendment is in fact an amendment of the act to regulate commerce. As the bill reads now,

That section 19 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof be amended— And so forth.

There are no amendments to section 19 of the interstate-commerce act. Although many other sections have been amended, the original section 19 reads now as it was enacted in 1887. I would suggest that the language of the bill be changed so as to provide that the act to regulate commerce as amended be further amended by adding this new section.

Mr. SIMS. Has the gentleman his amendment in form, so that he can state it correctly? I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I offered just the first part of it, and then intended to move to strike out, in line 5, "and all acts amendatory thereof," and insert in lieu thereof the words "as amended."

Mr. SIMS. So that it would read?
Mr. MANN. And then insert after the word "be," in line 5, the word "further," so that it will read:

That the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, be further amended by adding thereto a new section, to be known as section 19a, and to read as follows.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the first amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, which the Clerk will The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, after the word "testimony," insert the following: "Upon three days' notice to the common carrier, which shall be permitted to attend by counsel or otherwise and examine or cross-examine the witnesses and to call and examine other witnesses."

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, just a word upon this amendment. This bill in its present form provides for the ascertainment and determination of the value of the physical property of common carriers by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is authorized to employ such engineers, experts, and other assistants as may be necessary, who shall have power to administer oaths, examine witnesses, and take testimony; that is, I take it, touching the valuation to be ascertained. We are given to understand that the valuation is for the purpose of assisting the commission in fixing the rates which may be charged by common carriers. It is to be one of the elements at least. which a common carrier may charge, the right to charge a rate, is its most important right. Without that right a rail-road would have very little physical or other valuation, and it seems to me that in a matter so important as that the common carrier itself ought to have some notice of the taking of testimony and the right to be present and examine and cross-examine witnesses

That is the sole purpose and object of my proposed amendment. If the physical valuation of railroads, which is to be determined by the commission in the matter pointed out by this bill, is to be used as the basis for the fixing of rates by the Interstate Commerce Commission, it is no more than fair and equitable, and in harmony with universally recognized principles of enlightened civilization, that the party to be affected shall have notice and an opportunity to be heard. It is true that the bill does provide that after the Interstate Commerce Commission, through its agents, experts, or other assistants shall have concluded the taking of testimony, and the commission, based upon such testimony, shall have adjudicated the matter and fixed the valuation, the carrier may have 30 days within which to file a protest, and that upon the filing of any protest by a common carrier-

The commission shall fix a time for hearing the same and shall proceed as promptly as may be to hear and consider any matter relative and material thereto which may be presented by such common carrier in support of its protest so filed.

The bill, however, makes no provision for the taking of testimony upon such a hearing. If witnesses were desired to be recalled for examination or cross-examination, the common carrier would have to hunt them up, and it would have no power to compel their attendance. The whole proceeding would be, in any event, anomalous and unreasonable. It would be like depriving a defendant of the right to participate in the taking of testimony on the trial of his case and then allowing him the mere right to file a protest after the court shall have entered judgment against him. There is no State in this Union under the laws of which $10 worth of property could be taken from any man in a proceeding in which he was not permitted to cross-examine the witnesses produced against him or to call witnesses in his own behalf; and surely that ordinary right and privilege ought not to be denied in a matter the determination of which may, and in many instances will, little, if anything, more than the value of the rails less the cost involve millions of dollars. This is, in any event, a remarkable provision in the bill, that—for the purpose of such an investigation and ascertainment of value, the commission in authorized to employ such engineers, experts, and other assistants as may be necessary, who shall have power to administer oaths, examine witnesses, and take testimony.

My amendment adds, after the word "testimony," these words:

Upon three days' notice to the common carrier which shall be permitted to attend by counsel or otherwise and examine or cross-examine witnesses and to call and examine other witnesses.

It seems to me that, upon the commonest principles of justice, the amendment ought to prevail.

Now, just a few words upon the bill itself. If it would accomplish what is hinted in the report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which has presented the bill to this House, and what has been intimated by some of its supporters who have spoken in its behalf, it would be a most monstrous proposition. In the report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce accompanying this bill I find this language:

The anomaly has grown up gradually and unconsciously, as it were-grown up in the courts themselves, as well as in the commission—that public carriers are to be allowed to charge an income on what they owe as well as upon what they own. No one else in the world with whom we are acquainted is allowed that privilege.

And then, again, the report complains that:

As a part of the fixed charges to the annual burden of doing business the interest on the bonds is considered and allowance made for them.

What "anomaly" is there in the proposition that a common carrier ought to be permitted to charge rates sufficient to enable it to pay the interest upon its bonds? Let us suppose the case of a railroad costing $2,000,000. The stockholders themselves put in one million and issue stock for that amount. They borrow another million on a first mortgage and issue bonds for that amount. Why should not the company be permitted to pay the interest upon its bonds? What is wrong about that? Putting aside for the moment all questions of right and wrong, of constitutionality or of unconstitutionality, is there any gentleman upon this floor who can not discern the condition into which not only our common carriers but our whole country would be thrown if common carriers were not permitted to earn and pay their interest, as well as a reasonable return to stockholders? The regulation of common carriers is right and proper, but it is time for the baiting of common carriers to cease. Without stopping to consider the effect upon existing concerns, what would be the effect upon future railroad building? It has been suggested that the day of railroad promotion is past; that the country is already well supplied. That is far from true. There are vast areas of country, particularly in the Southern States, not penetrated by railroads at all. Railroads are needed for their development; but what sane man would invest a dollar in their construction if the sentiments of some of those who have spoken upon this floor should be enacted into law?

Happily, this bill will not bring about any such state of affairs. It provides for the physical valuation of the property of common carriers, and undoubtedly the physical valuation thus ascertained will be considered by the Interstate Commerce Commission in the fixing of rates; but it does not by any means follow that the rates will be fixed so low that the common carriers can not earn the interest upon their indebtedness. Rather than that it would be better that the Interstate Commerce Commission itself should be abolished. It is manifest from what has already taken place that this bill is destined to pass. Personally I do not believe that it will prove of very much value. It will, in the first place, require for its execution the employment of a vast army of engineers, experts, and other assistants, including clerks, stenographers, bookkeepers, and the like; will involve the Government in the expense of taking testimony in practically every part of the United States; and, in addition to making a large hole in the Federal Treasury, will take up the time of officials and employees and prove annoying and expensive to common carriers as well as enormously expensive to the Government itself. When the physical valuations have been thus ascertained, I very much fear that they will not serve any useful purpose in a degree at all commensurate with the expense involved. I agree with Theodore Roosevelt that the physical valuation of railroads is of doubtful value in the determination of proper rates of transportation. It has been urged upon this floor to-day that rates ought to be based upon physical valuation alone; that the value of the franchise should not be taken into consideration at all, because the franchise is derived from the Government or from the State. Well, what would be the physical valuation of a railroad without the franchise to carry freight and passengers? Practically nothing; but of removing them. Some years ago a railroad through the State of Pennsylvania was contemplated and commenced in competition with the Pennsylvania Railroad. The route was surveyed and a large amount of work done, particularly in the digging of a great number of costly tunnels through the mountains. It is said that more than $3,000,000 were expended in these tunnels. The project was finally abandoned; no rails were laid. What is the physical valuation of those holes in the ground today? And what would be the physical valuation if rails were laid over that route, and the company owning it had no right to carry freight or passengers? What would be the value of that line if there were no freight and passengers to carry? I have already, during this discussion, called attention to the fact that one of the lines between Washington and Baltimore cost a great deal more than the other because the second line was compelled to enter the city by way of a series of lengthy and expensive tunnels.

Is its physical valuation greater because of its greater cost? Would you, because of that greater cost, permit that company to charge a higher rate for freight or passengers than you would permit the other company to charge? And if you did permit it, would not the old company, being restricted to the lower rate, secure all the traffic? Or would you, basing the rate upon the physical valuation alone, require the older company to charge a higher rate so as to enable the second company to compete for business? I know of a railroad something over 200 miles in length constructed at great cost through a mountainous country for the purpose of reaching an article of commerce which for some years afforded it a profitable traffic. That commodity along its line has now been practically exhausted, and the railroad hardly pays the cost of operation. Stockholders are receiving no dividends and the bondholders are not getting the interest upon their bonds. How would you determine the valuation of that road? It would cost several millions of dollars to duplicate it to-day, but there is insufficient traffic upon the line to make it pay. No valuation which could be placed upon the property will have any effect upon the value of the stock and bonds of that corporation. The physical value of that road has little, if any, relation to the question of reasonableness of rates charged upon that line. In my judgment the valuation of the physical property of a common carrier will prove a very poor and in many cases a very misleading factor. The value of a railroad depends almost entirely upon its traffic, the probable continuance thereof, and the rates which the owner is permitted to charge for the transportation of freight and passengers. The opening of coal mines along the line of a railroad would enhance the value of the railroad and of its capital stock. On the other hand, the closing down or the exhaustion of such a mine would depreciate the value. The building of new factories would increase the value of the railroad and its capital stock. The destruction or closing down of factories would reduce its value. An increase of population in the cities or towns along the line would increase its value, while a reduction in population would have the opposite effect. If the com-mon carrier has a reasonable amount of traffic and is permitted to charge, say, 10 cents per ton per mile and can secure that rate, it may do an exceedingly prosperous business and be a very valuable property.

If, then, the Interstate Commerce Commission should restrict its charge to 1 cent per ton per mile the value of that road and of its capital stock would be vastly decreased. The physical value of the property would not be a very important factor. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce in presenting this bill has rejected and excluded a proposition which, to my mind, would be of far more value and importance than a physical valuation of the property of common carriers. I refer to the proposition to regulate the issuance of stocks and bonds by railroad companies and other common carriers. It has been charged here upon this floor during this discussion over and over again that watered stocks and bonds are to a large degree responsible for high rates of transportation because companies strive or are permitted to pay interest and dividends upon them. If, then, we so legislate as to prevent the watering of stocks and require both stocks and bonds to be issued only for actual value we shall do much to eliminate that evil and to keep transportation rates within proper bounds. An effort will be made to insert such a provision, and it shall certainly have my support.

I regret to see that there is a disposition in some quarters to deal very unfairly with common carriers. There seems to be a disposition to make them not only common carriers, but practically free carriers, without authority to charge sufficient rates to enable them to pay interest upon the money they have to borrow to construct their lines and to keep them in operation. Reference has been made to the present existing and lamentable car shortage. The railroad companies can not buy cars without money, and they frequently—indeed almost invariably—have to make either temporary or permanent loans for that purpose. But who will lend them money if they are not permitted to pay interest upon their bonds? Another gentleman of exceeding ability argued that rates should be based exclusively upon physical valuation, and expressed doubt if in that valuation there should be included the extension of expensive terminals which within the past few years have been built in Chicago, in New York, and in this city of Washington for the convenience of the public, because, he said, they are not used in the transportation of freight, but only in the transportation or for the convenience of passengers. Another gentleman charged that the high cost of living in this country is due almost entirely to high rates of transportation. He ought either to travel abroad himself or else read the official reports of railroad operation in other countries. He would then learn that rates are very much lower here than elsewhere in the world; that the train service here is very much better; and that in the matter of speed, safety, and luxury of passenger travel, as well as in cheapness, the United States leads the world. [Applause] the United States leads the world. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I feel called upon to oppose the amendment. This is an ex parte examination by the commission, one that will take a great deal of time to properly conduct, and to require notice and to permit the carrier to introduce testimony would be virtually a litigation which would continue through an interminable time. I do not charge the carriers, of course, with any intention to delay, but necessarily, if they have to have cross-examinations and the attendance of witnesses that the railroads would furnish, there will certainly be a very great delay in this ex parte proceeding of the commission, which is not conclusive upon the carriers when it is completed

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I would remind the gentleman that the bill itself provides for a full hearing by the carrier after the preliminary valuation is made before it becomes final.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; and not while it is proceeding. I therefore hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

In line 19, page 2, after the word "owner," insert the words "the cost of reproduction."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this paragraph undertakes to specify the elements which shall be considered by the commission in arriving at the valuation, it seems very clear to me that the cost of reproduction is one of the indispensable elements, and it should also be specified. A number of the decisions hold that the cost of reproduction is one of the elements that must be considered in arriving at the value. As you all know, perhaps the last leading case is that of the Knoxville Water Co. against Knoxville (212 U. S., 1), in which this opinion is used:

The cost of reproduction is one way of ascertaining the value of a plant like a water company.

And, going back to the case of Smythe against Ames-

The value to be ascertained by considering original cost of construction, amount expended in permanent improvement, amount and market value of stocks and bonds, present as compared with original cost of construction.

Now, that is not provided in this bill, and it seems to me it ought to be there, so long as we are specifying the different elements that shall be considered.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chariman, if there are no further amendments I move that the committee rise and report the bill as amended.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk, merely to perfect the language on page 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 24 and 25, strike out the following, "They should also show as the commission may deem necessary," and insert in lieu thereof the following, "Such investigation and report shall further show whenever the commission may deem necessary."

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, the bill on page 2 in this connection is very awkward in its language. For example, it reads like this:

Such investigation and report shall also show separately that property actually used in transportation and held for other purposes, and shall contain a statement of the elements forming a basis of the estimate of value. They should also show, as the commission may

Now, there occurs the word "should." In all my reading of public statutes the word "should" has never appeared in a connection like this. The law reads that it "shall" do or "shall not" do: not that it "should not" do.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Oregon that I do not think his amendment in any way hurts the bill, but may help it, and I have no purpose of opposing it.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, was my amendment rejected?

The CHAIRMAN. It was. Mr. LAFFERTY. I ask for a division.

Mr. LAFFERTY. I ask for a division.
Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 2, line 23, after the word "statement," I desire to amend by inserting—
Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The gentleman will state it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, during the confusion I did not understand whether the amendment I offered was agreed to or not

The CHAIRMAN. It was not agreed to.
Mr. LAFFERTY. I demand a division. I understood the gentleman in charge of the bill stated he would agree to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated that it was not agreed to

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division. not understand the Chair, and if I am permitted I will state that the gentleman in charge of the bill accepted my amendment, and that is why I did not explain it further.

Mr. SIMS. I said I did not object.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from Tennessee did not object, but a majority of the Members did.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon demands a division on his amendment. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 41, noes 4.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, on page 2, line 23, after the word "statement," I desire to amend by adding the words "and value," so that it shall read:

Such investigation and report shall also show separately that property actually used in transportation and that held for other purposes, and shall contain a statement and value of the elements forming the basis of the estimate of value.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 23, after the word "statement," insert the words "and

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose which I have in offering this amendment is that the different elements which are taken into consideration in making up the value of the property may be estimated separately, so that the public may understand of just what the value is made. For instance, a property may consist of physical value, a franchise value, a growing value, and a good-will value. If these four elements are to be considered in making public the value of this property, then I think they ought to be stated separately, so that the public may understand just what values are taken into consideration by the commission in making up the total value. Should the estimate of the various elements entering into the value of railroad property be combined in one sum it might present a good showing for the roads and seem to justify a greater rate than would be just to the public. Franchise value, good-will value, and value occasioned by the growth of business and the increase of population are not elements, in my opinion, which should enter into the sum total upon which to fix rates. These elements of value are created by civilization and industry, and the public ought not to be taxed because of such increase of value. It is like paying interest upon interest and more. For this reason each of the elements of value ought to be estimated separately.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] to amend by adding the word

Mr. FOWLER. The words "and value," so that it will Shall contain a statement and value of the elements.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected. Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD the remarks which I made awhile ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RAINEY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 22593) entitled "A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof by providing for physical valuation of the property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks and bonds and boards of directors," and had directed him to report the bill to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendments? If not, the Chair will put them en grosse. [After a The Chair hears no objection. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read a third time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged motion, which send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers a privileged motion, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Mann moves to recommit the bill (II. R. 22593) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, by providing for physical valuation of property of carriers subject thereto, and securing information concerning their stocks and bonds and boards of directors, to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, with directions to that committee to forthwith report the said bill back to the House with the following amendment, to wit:

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against this

Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against this motion, that it is not germane to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SIMS. The motion is a long legislative proposition as to the issuance of stocks and bonds, while the bill is a bill to provide for the physical valuation of railroads; and while I might be very much in favor of the bill as a separate proposition, although, having heard it read in this way, it is impossible to understand it fully, yet it is not germane to the object and purpose of this bill in any respect.

This bill is to obtain information. Its whole object and purpose is to enable the commission to acquire information and to enable it to apply that information in determining a rate, a reasonable rate. This proposition is in reference to the merging of railroads and in reference to the issuance of stocks and bonds, and is not in any way germane to the object and purpose of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be heard?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the present bill is a bill to amend the act to regulate commerce, covering the particular section which it is proposed to insert in the law, and this bill proposes to insert a new section in the interstate-commerce law. new section affects the physical valuation of railroads, and also the issuance of stocks and bonds. It requires an investigation. The bill provides not only for the valuation of railroad property, but it also provides for an investigation and report of the amounts and dates of all bonds outstanding and the amounts paid for the bonds, and requires a report of the money raised by bonds and invested by the railway corporation. It deals with all phases of the property of a railroad, both as to the property itself and as to the bonds which may be issued by the railroad company. It is simply an insertion of these provisions in the act to regulate commerce. The act to regulate commerce covers the entire scope of control of the railroads.

The amendment which I have offered is in the identical language of provisions which passed this House as a part of the bill amending the interstate-commerce law two years ago. They were then germane to that bill, which was a bill amending the interstate-commerce law, and they are offered here as an amendment to a bill which proposes to amend the interstate-commerce law and which specifically provides in regard to the issuance of bonds and in regard to the value. This provision which I have offered follows up the provisions of this bill by providing that no bonds shall be issued except for money actually received and the money invested in the property of the railroad company.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.
Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not familiar with the provisions of the bill that has been offered by the gentleman from Illinois. I desire to get some information. Does the gentleman from Illinois contend that the motion to recommit with instructions that the bill shall be reported back on the motion to recommit is germane to the original bill that was proposed-by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], or does he contend that its germaneness lies in the fact that it is germane to the general interstate-commerce act?

Mr. MANN. I contend both. It is not only germane to the provisions of the bill, but it is in order, because the bill itself is an amendment of the interstate-commerce law, and hence a further amendment of that law is in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman does not contend that an amendment to a law makes a provision germane as to everything that happens to be in the law; that if a bill were in here providing for a duty on cereals—on wheat—that, because it did amend the general tariff act it would make it in order to offer an amendment to put sugar on the free list?

Mr. MANN. I would not make the last contention under the rules adopted by the Democratic majority of the House in this Congress, because you adopted a special rule to prevent that, knowing that if that special rule-which only relates to tariff legislation-had not been adopted, then when you offered a bill to amend the tariff on cereals, a proposition to amend the tariff on sugar would have been in order. To prevent that you put a special provision in your rules, thereby admitting that without that the general rule which I have named was good.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that, as I recall the decisions, many of them held that exactly what was in that special rule was the parliamentary law of this House; but as there was a conflict in the decisions, we cleared up the conflict by expressly putting it in the rule.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman is begging the question. Mr. UNDERWOOD. There was a line of decisions, and is

Mr. MANN. The line of decisions is very clear in favor of the proposition which I have suggested; and because of that fact the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood], or whoever prepared the rules for this House, put in a special rule removing tariff legislation from the principles of the general rule that I have stated.

But, outside of that question, I contend that the amendment which I have offered would have been in order if this had been an original bill. It relates to the entire subject of railroad property and the bonds issued for it. I propose a further amendment in reference to the issuance of these stocks and bonds. I think if these provisions were in order two years ago they are in order now, and they were in order at that time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman as to the purpose of his motion. Of course, the truth is that when anybody proposes to offer a complicated motion to recommit, he should furnish a copy of his motion to the Chair in advance. so as to give the Chair a chance to have a clear understanding of it.

Mr. MANN. I have not prevented the House from adjourning with the point of order pending before the Speaker. I have never considered that it was necessary to tell the other side of the House in advance what I proposed to do. I notice that they do not do that for me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, like everybody else, did not comprehend the full import of the motion from listening to the reading of it. The Chair wishes to ask the gentleman from Illinois. Does this motion to recommit go to the matter of investigating these subjects which are referred to in the bill of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] or not?

Mr. MANN. It goes to the matter of regulating the issuance of stocks and bonds.

The SPEAKER. What is the general subject of the bill of the gentleman from Tennessee? Is it simply investigation?

Mr. MANN. The general subject of the bill of the gentleman from Tennessee is a new proposition to be inserted in the interstate-commerce law.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] desire to be heard further?

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from New York has addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the question at issue has been definitely settled in the past. The rule is clear that to a bill purporting to amend a law in one particular an amendment proposing to amend it in some other respect is not germane.

Such a decision was quoted by Mr. Speaker Cannon on April , 1910. Members of the House will recall the situation. The legislative bill was returned from the Senate with an amend-ment amending the publicity feature of the corporation-tax law which was a part of the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. I submitted a motion to recommit, with instructions to report the bill with an amendment repealing the entire tariff law.

After very considerable debate Speaker Cannon held that that motion was not in order, and he quoted from Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, page 411, section 5806, as follows:

To a bill amendatory of an existing law as to one specific particular, an amendment relating to the terms of the law rather than to those of the bill was held not to be germane.

That decision arose on a bill to provide for the administration of civil affairs in Porto Rico pending the appointment and qualification of civil officers provided for in the act. An amendment was offered in relation to franchises, and a point of order was made that the bill and Senate amendments proposed to amend an existing statute in one particular and that the question of franchises was not germane to the provisions in the bill before the House; that while they might have been germane to the original law, as the bill purported to amend existing law in but one particular, any amendment submitted must be germane to the bill that was pending.

The bill pending before the House provides for a physical valuation of railroads and outlines a scheme to be followed by the Interstate Commerce Commission in carrying out that work. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois is not germane to the proposition pending before the House, but relates to an entirely different subject. If the original law were before the House the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois might be germane to some features of that law; the question of germaneness in this instance must be determined in relation to the bill that is now pending.

I understood from the argument of the gentleman from Illinois himself that he did not contend that his amendment was germane to the proposition pending before the House, but contends that it is germane because the proposition pending in the House amends a certain existing statute, and the amendment that he proposes amends or adds to that statute additional provisions to those proposed in the pending bill. The authority to which I have called attention is not the only one to the same effect cited in the precedents, but there are a number of other decisions along similar lines.

For instance, on April 23, 1902, as appears in paragraph 5808, volume 5, of Hinds' Precedents, there were Senate amendments to a bill relating to oleomargarine and other imitation dairy products under consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, when Mr. James R. Mann, of Illinois, offered a further amendment to a law of which a Senate amendment proposed to amend a certain portion. Mr. James A. Tawney, of Minnesota, having made a point of order, the Chairman, Mr. Olmsted, of Pennsylvania, ruled as follows:

Senate amendment No. 5 reads thus:
"Section 3 of said act is hereby amended by adding thereto the "Section 3 of said act is hereby amended by adding thereto the following:"

And then follows a certain proviso. The amendment offered by the gentieman from Illinois is to add at the end of that proviso these words: "And provided further, That the artificial coloration provided for in the preceding paragraph shall not include colored butter."

The "preceding paragraph shall not include colored butter."

The "preceding paragraph" referred to, as the Chair understands, is section 3 of a former act of Congress which is not now before the Committee of the Whole.

On page 323 of the Manual the Chair finds this language:

"To a bill amending a general law on a specific point an amendment relating to the terms of the law rather than to those of the bill was offered and ruled not to be germane."

That ruling was made by Speaker Reed. The Chair thinks that it covers this case. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, while it may be germane to the preceding paragraph of section 3 of the earlier act of Congress to which it refers, is not germane to the proviso which constitutes the Senate amendment, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

In this instance, the amendment proposed by the gentleman.

In this instance, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois might be germane to some provision of the law proposed to be amended by the pending bill, but it is not germane to any provision in or to the subject matter of the pending bill, and under the rulings that I have cited the amendment

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from New York that he thinks the gentleman from New York misapprehends the claim of the gentleman from Illinois. The understood the gentleman from Illinois, in reply to a question asked by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Underwood), on what ground he claimed that this was germane, to say that it was germane both to the law itself and to this bill. He claims that it is germane to both propositions.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Illinois asserts for the purpose of argument that his amendment is germane to the present bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I am not like the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. I do not assert anything unless I believe it. [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt that the gentleman from Illinois may even believe the amendment germane, but neither the assertion nor the belief of the gentleman from Illinois can control the House in its deliberations, because if so, this side of the House might as well abandon its attempt to control its deliberations. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] must point out the specific proposition in the bill under consideration to which his amendment is germane. While I have only the substance of the amendment in mind, I listened attentively to the argument of the gentleman from Illinois, but I could not determine any provision of the bill to which it is The substance of the pending bill is to create the machinery for the physical valuation of railroads. The gentleman from Illinois proposes to confer power upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to cancel certain outstanding obligations heretofore existing. That is not necessary nor essential nor does it relate in any way to the pending bill, and while it might relate to and be germane to some provision of existing statutes, under the decision of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted], which I know commends itself not only to the House, but in which he thoroughly believes, the amendment proposed can not be held to be in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the Chair intimated that he desired to have opportunity to read these bills. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if he has any objection to ordering the previous question pending this point of order, and allowing the House to adjourn, and the Speaker to take the point of order up when the bill is next up for consideration?

Mr. MANN. I would have no objection; but I do not know whether it would be possible to order the previous question pending the point of order. Why not have an agreement that this matter come up Thursday morning immediately after the reading of the Journal? It will take only a few minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the previous question be ordered that would be the case, unless the gentleman wants to have further discussion upon the merits.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to have an understanding that there will be no debate of the proposition.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that the previous question be ordered on the bill and amendments.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the previous question being ordered on the bill and amendments. The amendments have already been agreed to. I am not so sure that you can order the previous question on my motion with a point of order If that can be done I am perfectly willing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The only way it can be done is by unanimous consent.

Mr. SIMS. Then I will ask unanimous consent that that order, suggested by the gentleman from Alabama, be made.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. If the order be made, will it prevent further discussion of the point of order?

The SPEAKER. Not if the Chair desires further information on the subject. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent, because of the lateness of the hour and the length of the motion to recommit, that the whole matter go over until Thursday morning.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And that the previous question be ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The SPEAKER. And the previous question ordered on the bill and amendments.

Mr. MANN. On the motion to recommit. The amendments have been agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Very well, on the bill and motion to recommit. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MILITIA PAY BILL.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for one week, within which to submit the minority views on the bill, H. R. 8141, known as the militia pay bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks for one week within which to submit the minority views on the militia pay bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then on motion of Mr. Underwood (at 5 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 4, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

SUBMISSION OF MEASURES TO THE PEOPLE.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to introduce two joint resolutions. I send the first to the desk and ask that it be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 141) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for the submission by the President to the electors of measures recommended by him which Congress has failed to enact was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc.. That the following be proposed as an amendment to section 3, Article II of the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States.

If Congress fails to enact any measure which the President has recommended in proper form within six months from the date of such recommendation, the President, at the regular congressional election following the expiration of such period, may submit the measure to the electors at such election, and if a majority of the electors voting on such measure in a majority of the congressional districts and also in a majority of the States approve the measure, it shall become a law.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, this amendment makes provision for the President to submit to the country a measure which he has recommended to Congress, and which Congress has failed to enact. It enables him to appeal from a dilatory or adverse Congress to the people upon questions of vital public concern, and I believe it will be most beneficial.

Furthermore, a President could not, as an excuse for signing an undesirable measure, say that it was the best that he could get from an unfriendly Congress. The Constitution now authorizes the President to recommend to Congress measures, but there the matter ends if Congress does not act. If the proposed amendment is adopted, and Congress either fails to act or passes a bill in lieu of the measure submitted that does not meet the approval of the President then it becomes his duty to sign the bill passed by Congress or to submit the measure which he thinks should be enacted to the people for their approval or rejection.

One of the weaknesses of our form of government is that the Congress may be of one political party and the executive administration of another, and legislation is theh tied up for two years or longer, to the detriment of the country, and when this condition exists a system of political jockeying is inaugurated, usually by both sides, for partisan purposes. This amendment to the Constitution provides a means by which the people may, with reasonable promptness, decide such controversies, and it will not require the overturning of our entire civil administration to secure the enactment of a desirable law, which either the President has refused to accept or the Congress declined to enact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRISTOW. I introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for submitting to the people of the United States acts of Congress for their approval. I should like to have it read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 142) proposing an amendment to the Constitution providing for submitting to the people of the United States acts of Congress for their approval, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as

Resolved, etc., That the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, the same to be section 4 of Article III, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of

of the Constitution when ratined by the States:

If the Supreme Court shall decide that a law enacted by Congress is in violation of the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, the Congress, at a regular session held after such decision, may submit the act to the electors at a regular congressional election, and if a majority of the electors voting on such measure in a majority of the congressional districts and also in a majority of the States approve the measure, it shall become a law.

Decrops Wr. President, the Constitution is the survey of the measure.

preme law of the land. It was enacted by the people themselves. It is the business of the courts to interpret the will of the people as expressed in this instrument. When Congress, the representative of the people in legislative matters, passes a measure and the President, whose signature is necessary before it becomes a law, has approved it the Supreme Court of the United States may declare that, in its opinion, such a measure is not in harmony with certain provisions of the Constitution which the people have adopted. This proposed amendment gives to the people an opportunity to state whether or not they desire the law, as enacted by Congress and approved by the President, to stand as the last expression of their will and judgment.

The courts did not make the Constitution. They simply interpret what they think it means. It is the people's law, enacted by them, and if they do not desire the interpretation placed upon it by the courts to stand as their will, this provision gives them the opportunity to so declare. The will of the people is the supreme law of the land. This is the very basic principle upon which our form of government rests.

The chief objection that may be offered to this proposition is that it gives the people an easy facility for interpreting the Constitution, which province has been assigned to the courts, and that hasty or immature action might result. But a careful examination of the amendment will demonstrate that ample time has been given for full and free discussion and mature deliberation, so that action with undue haste is impossible.

First, Congress enacts the law after the full discussion that occurs in passing the measure through the two Houses. Then is has to be fought through the courts, which requires the most thorough consideration, before the final decision is ultimately rendered. After such decision, with the opinions of the court before it, the Congress must decide whether it considers the question involved of sufficient national importance to justify its submission to the electors for their final decision and judgment. This, of course, would only be done when questions of political magnitude were involved. Furthermore, Congress can not consider the submission of the proposition until the first regular session after the decision has been rendered, and then it can not be acted upon by the people until the regular congressional election following the session of Congress at which the matter was submitted, so that most ample time must intervene before final determination by the electors. The fullest discussion and most mature consideration possible is required, yet the amendment does provide a way by which a decision can be had with a reasonable degree of promptness upon a specific and definite question.

Seventeen years have elapsed since the Supreme Court declared the income-tax law unconstitutional, and we have not yet amended the Constitution so as to make an income tax possible, though few will claim that the people do not favor and desire such a law. This unnecessary and exasperating delay in vital matters makes an amendment of this kind to our Constitution desirable and, in my opinion, necessary to the country's welfare.

Mr. President, I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and I will add that I hope that committee will act favorably upon these joint resolutions with the same promptness with which it acted upon the joint resolution now pending, which takes from the people powers which they now have. These joint resolutions extend to them additional power and give them more direct authority over their government, while the amendment that has been reported takes from them powers which they already possess.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be referred, as requested, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

bill No. 19115, known as the omnibus claims bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 19115. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 19115) making appropriation for payment of certain claims in accordance with findings of the Court of Claims, reported under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker Acts, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

Mr. LODGE. Has the bill been read, Mr. President? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been read.

Mr. LODGE. Let it be read.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Just a word, please, before the Secretary begins the reading of the bill. There have been so many requests made for the report submitted by the Committee on Claims in connection with this bill that there are now only about 40 copies of the report left, not enough to furnish each Member of the Senate with a copy. I therefore ask for an order that 250 additional copies of the report be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks that the Senate order the printing of 250 additional copies of the report referred to by him. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the amendment regarding the claim of Shelton will not be agreed to. I ask to have read the following statement in regard to the claim.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read, as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

BRIEF IN THE CASE OF HENRY BENNETT.

The present claimant in that case is Samuel A. Shelton, administrator of the estate.

The grounds given for striking this case out of the omnibus claims bill are as follows:

"No. 226. Henry Bennett. Referred in 1888; loyalty found in 1902, 14 years later, during which period it slept in Court of Claims without motion; was not brought on for trial in Court of Claims until 1908, 20 years after reference; stores and supplies taken in 1861-1864; never presented to any department; slept 24 years before reference and 20 years in Court of Claims after reference; laches (H. 875, 60th Cong., 1st sess.)."

20 years in Court of Claims after reference; laches (H. 875, 60th Cong., 1st sess.)."

These statements of fact are not correct. The case did not sleep 24 years before reference, as stated, for the simple reason that the claimant made a proper presentation of his claim to the Quartermaster General under the act of July 4, 1864, and this claim remained unadjudicated in that office until 1881, where it was rejected by the Quartermaster General.

No further relief was open to the claimant at this time, but so many cases were rejected by the Quartermaster General in summary manner, without considering really competent evidence, that Congress passed the act of March 3, 1883, commonly known as the Bowman Act, authorizing the examination into the facts of these cases by a court. A bill for the relief of the claimant was introduced in the Fiftieth Congress, first session, and on May 1, 1888, the Committee on War Claims ordered the case referred to the Court of Claims for findings of fact under the Bowman Act.

PROCEEDINGS UNDER BOWMAN ACT.

The claimant is charged with having slept on his rights in the Court of Claims 14 years without motion. This statement is not correct, and it will appear from the transcript of the docket entries annexed hereto. There was a delay of 12 years in securing the claimant's testimony. Attention is asked to what is said in the inclosed printed brief relative to stores and supplies cases, about the delays of the Government in taking testimony, beginning with page 14.

In December, 1900, however, the claimant got the depositions of seven witnesses on the subject of loyalty. Claimant's brief was promptly filed on April 6, 1901, and then there was a wait until January 22, 1902, for the defendants' brief. December 20, 1904, the case was remanded to the general docket. On April 18, 1906, the defendants moved to dismiss the case for want of prosecution. The court, however, did not order the case dismissed, and the claimant's brief on merits was filed in 1907, and findings were made in the claimant's favor in the same year.

There were delays in this case, without question, but they were not all due to the claimant. The claimant was ready to go ahead and take his testimony, but found it impossible to make arrangements for having Government counsel present to conduct the cross-examination.

FINDINGS BY THE COURT.

The findings of the court are reported to Congress in House Document No. 875, Sixtleth Congress, first session. The findings by the court are as follows:

"This case being a claim for supplies or stores alleged to have been taken by or furnished to the military forces of the United States for their use during the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, the court on a preliminary inquiry finds that Henry Bennett, the person alleged to have furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom the same are alleged to have been taken, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war.

"During the war for the suppression of the rebellion there was taken from the claimant's decedent in Allen County, State of Kansas, by various soldiers under the command of Col. Jennison, of the Fifteenth Kansas Volunteers, property of the character and kind described in the petition, but the authority therefor is not shown. The reasonable value of the property so taken was at the time and place the sum of $845, no part of which appears to have been paid."

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Kansas that this case is very similar to several hundred others in this bill. The position of the Committee on Claims rests upon what appears on the face of the finding of the Court of Claims. We have never undertaken to go into files, records, and pleadings outside of what appears on the face of the report made to us, because to do so would be to open up questions lying beyond the report of the Court of Claims and involve the committee in inextricable confusion and difficulty.

What is set forth in the recitals does appear on the face of this claim in paragraph 226, page 62, of the report of the com-mittee. The court does not find that this property was taken by authority. It may have been taken by soldiers and carried off, but that would be an individual act of plunder or spoliation on the part of individual soldiers. The court did not find that the property was taken by authority of any military head, and it does appear that the claim remained in this situation of inactivity all these years.

Necessarily, having passed the other House as several hundred other claims very similar to it have done, it will have to be dealt with in conference. If we make an exception of this item, raise questions of a quorum, and have roll calls, we will have an endless number of such cases, so I think the Senator ought to allow the item to go with others similarly situated and have them treated together in conference.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I have no desire to interfere with the plan of the chairman of the committee. I had noticed in this report that undoubtedly the chairman, or whoever wrote the report or looked into the cases, had not thoroughly studied them, because there are misstatements of fact. There had been diligence by the claimant. However, if that matter is to be tried out in conference and this case is to be treated with other cases, I will not insist on a separate vote, but will let the matter go so that it may be settled in conference. However, I do want to say for a number of these Kansas cases that I have looked into the facts and find that the claimants were diligent, and that the delay was more on account of the nonaction of Congress than on the part of the claimants. In many cases the delay was caused by inaction on the part of the War Department, where claims were held some 10 or 15 years before any action was taken upon them by the Quartermaster General's Department.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Upon that I simply desire to say to the Senator that I decline to plead guilty of any failure in the exercise of diligence. I do not think that when a tribunal has been created under the law for the very purpose of having it thrash out all these questions, take testimony, and make reports as advisory to us it then becomes the duty of the committees of Congress to go away back behind the record sent to us by the court and ascertain whether or not the court was at fault in not having given us a fuller statement because there was evidence that justified some fuller statement by the Court of Claims than that court had made to us. In other words, I do not think we are required to go behind the report of the Court of Claims and retry or reexamine these cases. So we did not undertake to do so, and I do not think we are subject to the charge of lack of diligence because we did decline to do so. But, as I have said, the House passed these items which the Senate committee has suggested be stricken from the bill. That necessarily will bring the matter, if the action of the Senate committee is sustained, before the conferees, where advocates of both views may be heard and some conclusion reached. I think it better to do that than to open up these individual cases and involve us in endless examination of details here. It is very much like the action of a master with a long account. There are probably 3,000 different items involved in this bill, and if the Senate is to undertake to weigh testimony. in each one of them we are defeated in the attempt to consider this bill before we begin. On that account I suggest to the Senator that it would be better to let it go in that way.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, as I said in my opening statement, I have no desire to oppose the policy which the chairman of the committee desires to follow in regard to these different items. If he wants to settle the matter in conference with the object of going into these cases and examining the reports that are on file with the committee of the House, I will not ask for a separate vote. I have looked up these several cases from Kansas, however, and I am satisfied that the claimants did use due diligence. With that statement, I will simply ask to withdraw my request for a separate vote upon the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request for a vote is withdrawn, and, without objection, the committee amendment is agreed to. The Secretary will resume the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Claims was, under the head of "Kansas," on page 25, to strike out from line 18 to line 24, inclusive, as follows:

To Frank Crathorne, of Wilson County, $201.17.
To Jane H. Haynes, widow of Charles H. Haynes, deceased, of Bourbon County, $100.70.
To Alfred W. Kent, of Clay County, $664.

Mr. CURTIS. In this connection, without having it read, I will ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a statement relating to the claim of Alfred W. Kent, at the bottom of page 25.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, permission is granted.

The statement referred to is as follows:

BRIEF IN THE CASE OF ALFRED W. KENT.

Claimant is a resident of Broughton, Clay County, Kans. He is represented locally by Mr. F. L. Williams, of Clay Center.

The reasons given by the committee for the exclusion of this claim from the omnibus claims bill are as follows (see S. Rept. No. 770, p. 62):

"No. 229. Alfred W. Kent. Referred in 1900; loyalty found in 1905; stores and supplies taken in 1864; claim presented to no department; slept for 36 years before reference; laches. (S. 455, 50th Cong., 1st sess.)"

This last statement that the claim was never presented is not correct, for the claim could not have been considered by the court under the Bowman Act had it not first been presented in accordance with the law. On this point attention is asked to the printed brief relating to the stores and supplies cases, beginning page 22.

FIRST PRESENTATION OF CLAIM.

This claim was first presented to the Third Auditor of the Treasury in April, 1883. It was rejected August 9, 1889. (See claim No. 21099, office Third Auditor of the Treasury). The comptroller concurred in this disallowance August 15, 1889. The claimant filed additional evidence with the comptroller, who authorized a further examination into the claim. Under date of January 10, 1891, the claim was again disallowed by the accounting officers. The case was rejected on the ground that the records did not show that any voucher was given to the claimant, and his name was not found upon the report submitted to the Quartermaster General.

On February 2 the claimant petitioned Congress for relief. This petition was presented by Senator W. A. Harris, and on March 28, 1900, the bill for the claimant's relief (S. 3462) was referred by resolution of the Senate to the Court of Claims for findings of fact under the act of March 3, 1887, commonly known as the Tucker Act.

PROCEEDINGS UNDER THE TUCKER ACT.

PROCEEDINGS UNDER THE TUCKER ACT.

It is claimed that the claimant was guilty of laches, but the transcript of docket entries hereto annexed shows that this was not the case. The case was referred in 1900; the petition was filed in 1901; depositions were taken in 1902 and 1904; the claimant was found loyal in February, 1905; and the case brought to trial on the merits in 1906. The case was under prosecution in the court six years.

The findings of the court are set out in Senate Document No. 455, Fifty-nint Congress, first session. This document shows that—

"On a preliminary inquiry the court, on the 20th day of February, 1905, found that the person alleged to have furnished the supplies or stores, or from whom they were alleged to have been taken, was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout said war."

And also found that—

"During the war for the suppression of the Rebellion the military forces of the United States, by proper authority, for the use of the Army, took from claimant, in Johnson County, State of Kansas, horses, as above described. The reasonable value of said horses, together with the hire for 22 days of two teams, is the sum of $664.

"No payment appears to have been made therefor."

APPROPRIATIONS.

Provisions have been made on the following bills which have passed one or the other Houses of Congress, as indicated, for the payment of findings in these cases:

S. 7971, Sixty-first Congress, second session, as reported (S. Rept. No. 603) and passed by the Senate December 20, 1910.

H. R. 32767, Sixty-first Congress, second session, passed by the House of Representatives February 17, 1911, as a substitute for Senate bill 1971. On account of the shortness of remaining time this bill was not acted on in the Senate.

H. R. 19115, Sixty-second Congress, second session, passed by the House of Representatives February 19, 1912. Senate committee recommends striking out practically every southern war claim.

I dislike to interrupt the Mr. BACON. Mr. President, progress of the consideration of this bill, but it strikes me that the situation is not exactly fair to Senators. The bill was taken up this morning, and the question was distinctly presented whether the bill should be read through or whether it should be read for amendment; and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longe] insisted that the bill should be read through without being taken up for amendment. There is now, I understand, an agreement to the contrary on the part of some of the Senators, that the Senate shall proceed with the bill for the purpose of acting upon amendments.

This is a bill in which almost every Senator in this Chamber is interested, and interested particularly in these amendments, and Senators have evidently absented themselves, gone to luncheon, and to their committee rooms, and so forth, with the understanding that the bill was simply to be read and that no amendments were to be acted upon until after the bill had been read. I speak for myself when I say that there has been an amendment already acted upon, the adoption of which I certainly would have opposed if I had been present. I was absent, as most Senators are, during the lunch hour, and I think it is hardly fair to the great body of Senators to proceed in this way when we have a comparatively empty Chamber. I presume almost every Senator interested in this bill like myself has been absent during the luncheon hour upon the understanding that the bill would be proceeded with under the order already made.

I do not wish to interfere, but I want to suggest to the Senator in charge of the bill that Senators will feel that they have not been treated with perfect fairness in regard to the matter.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that when I called up the bill I requested that its formal reading be waived and that it be read for amendment. The Senator from Massachusetts asked for the first formal reading of the bill, and the clerk proceeded to comply with that request. himself afterwards moved that the formal reading be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will pardon me for a suggestion. Not only was it as stated by him, but, in addition thereto, after the Senator from Massachusetts had asked for the reading of consent that it be taken up and read for amendment, and the Senator from Massachusetts declined and desired that the bill be read in full, which emphasized the fact that the bill would be read in its entirety.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I simply want to say to the Senator that the fact that the bill is now being read for amendment is not due to any action on the part of the chairman of the committee in charge of the bill, but is due to the fact that the Senator who insisted on its formal reading himself moved that the formal reading be dispensed with and that the bill be read for amendment, which was agreed to by unanimous consent. So that it is hardly fair to put the chairman of the committee in the attitude of continuing in this way through some motion of his own, when it is the result of a motion made by the Senator who himself had asked for the formal reading of the bill.

Mr. BACON. If the Senate had been put upon notice of the change, of course there could be no possible criticism of what has been done; but having left the Chamber, and with Senators absent on the understanding referred to, and absent at a time when most of them are usually absent, it seems to me it is but fair that they should be put upon notice of the fact that a bill in which they are all interested had been given a different direction from that which they understood would be followed. I do not know of any remedy in the matter except to reserve every amendment that is acted upon now and have it acted upon again in the Senate. That will be the result, and the Senator will not gain any time by this procedure. That is undoubtedly what will result-that every amendment will be

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish again to disclaim being responsi-ble for that situation. There was a good number of Senators here, and the Senator from Massachusetts, who had asked for the formal reading, himself made the request here in the open Senate; all who were present were, of course, apprised of it, and there was no objection to it. It was acted upon.

I assure the Senator from Georgia that there are too many complications connected with and too large a number of items in this bill for me in the slightest degree to involve the Senate in any unnecessary repetition of its work, and I have no such purpose.

Mr. BACON. I am not reflecting upon the Senator in any way, but I thought it proper to call attention to the fact that a bill in which all Senators, with scarcely an exception, have a more or less direct interest is being proceeded with in this way when they are not informed of the fact.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I do not think the manner in which the Senator from South Dakota is proceeding is prejudicial at all to the interests of those who desire this bill passed. Reference to the history of the bill here will confirm what I say.

This bill was prepared for passage at the last session of Congress. In the draft presented to the Senate individual claims were largely omitted and the provisions of the bill confined to adjudicated claims in favor of churches and schools. There is such a great congestion of claims that if all were included in the bill at this time the consideration of the bill would be protracted beyond the time the Senate would be willing to devote to its attention. I think we make real progress when we separate the bill with reference to the class of claims to be included in it and to get out of the way of disputed claims those whose validity and propriety are admitted.

I do not believe that if every Senator interested in this bill was in his seat there would be serious objection to the manner in which the Senator from South Dakota is now proceeding. Whatever differences of opinion exist between the two Houses can and will be reconciled in conference, where the different views may be presented, and those claims as to which there is disagreement can be remitted for subsequent consideration.

I approve entirely of what the Senator from South Dakota is doing, because I believe it is in the interest of an expeditious disposition of a very large and pressing class of claims and one for which there is being made a more earnest and more repeated appeal from my section of the country than for any other items in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama in the chair). The reading of the bill will be proceeded with. The Secretary resumed and continued the reading of the bill to the end of line 18 on page 107.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I desire to ask the chairman of the committee—perhaps I ought to know without asking the question-whether these church claims are claims which grew out of the Civil War.

Mr. CRAWFORD. All of them, Mr. President, and all of the bill, the Senator from South Dakota asked if he would not | them which are reported favorably by the committee are for churches that were destroyed, and destroyed not as a military necessity, but destroyed while occupied as storehouses or hospitals or were destroyed for the purpose of using the material in the construction of bridges and things of that sort.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator a further question as to the approximate number of claims of a similar nature that have been filed, which are now before the committee and have not been acted upon and are not in this bill. Are these claims for the destruction of churches a half a century ago constantly coming in?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The items of that character which are in this bill are mostly claims that have been reported from the Court of Claims during the last 10 years, up to and including the year 1911. This bill, however, as reported by the committee contains a clause which, if it should go through and meet with the approval of the President of the United States, will stop the sending of any further claims of this character to the Court of Claims; and I think that is one of the best provisions in the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that be so, and if that could be settled now and forever, it would be a substantial reason in my mind why the bill should pass. But I will ask the Senator if a future Congress may not repeal that provision in the pending

Mr. CRAWFORD. Undoubtedly, Mr. President. Bars which have been erected repeatedly against these claims have been overridden by Congress, and I presume that could happen

Mr. GALLINGER. I am not going to make any factious opposition to this class of claims, but it has seemed to me extraordinary, absolutely incomprehensible, that we should have bills of this character, reimbursing for the destruction of churches in whole or in part, presented to Congress 50 years after the close of the war.

I recall the fact that two or three years ago a very distinguished Senator on the other side of the Chamber declared in debate—possibly he spoke a little hurriedly—that these cases were all fraudulent and that it was time we stopped paying any of them.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New Hampshire is mistaken about that. I think he refers to the cotton claims and claims for the destruction of property, but not to churches.

Mr. GALLINGER. Well, the Senator from New Hampshire is absolutely correct in what he has said, as he remembers it.

I said possibly the Senator spoke somewhat hurriedly.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. No, Mr. President, I did not speak hurriedly, but I did not speak about church claims. Their claims do not sound in positive right. They are somewhat of a military benevolence. Claims of this character came in for consideration at the instance of former Senator Hoar of Massachusetts. It was not intended that they should be scrutinized from a legal standpoint as are individual claims. I spoke of claims for the destruction and consumption of property by the Army. I have said repeatedly that at this late day and time it is utterly impossible to get at the right of one per cent of them, and they are worked up by claim agents and constructive claimants, persons who are constructively and remotely interested in them. I have no better opinion of them than I have of the French spoliation claims; and I do not hesitate to express myself. But these church claims are on an entirely different footing. It is a matter of the benevolent recognition of the ravages of war upon a subject against which war is not usually directed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator from New Hampshire will look through the bill as reported by the committee and the report made by the committee, I think he will find ample evidence of the desire on the part of the committee to rid this bill of the objectionable claims which he has in mind, because I think the report of the committee eliminates about four-fifths of the private claims. If this is sustained here, the conference committee will have to settle the question upon its merits as between the two Houses.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have been gratified, in looking at the bill, to observe that a very large proportion of that class of claims has been stricken from it.

I will not enter into a controversy with my good friend the Senator from Arkansas as to the exact language he used, but will content myself by suggesting to him that if he will go back to the Record he will find that I have stated the case substantially correct.

I simply rose for the purpose of expressing the hope that after the passage of this bill we would stop—

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I join with the Senator in that

Mr. GALLINGER. That we would pay these little claims, some of which are just, while probably a great many have been worked up by claim agents—

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I give notice?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I simply desire to keep this bill before the Senate during the morning hour until it is disposed of, to carry out my obligations to Senators whom I promised I would bring up the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have now said all I care to say, Mr.

President.

IMPEACHMENT OF ROBERT W. ARCHBALD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Bacon) having announced that the time had arrived for the consideration of the articles of impeachment against Robert W. Archbald, the respondent appeared with his counsel, Mr. Worthington, Mr. Simpson, and Mr. Robert W. Archbald, jr.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll of the Senate 65 Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, the managers desire to call the attention of the court to a verbal inaccuracy in the proceedings of yesterday. It, perhaps, is immaterial— Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to submit a matter for the consideration of the managers, and I presume it should be submitted through the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will send it to the desk.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. May I correct the printed record of yesterday before the managers are required to consider other matters?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The manager will proceed.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. As I was proceeding to say, Mr.

President, perhaps this slight verbal inaccuracy is immaterial to the statement as made on yesterday, but for the sake of better English I desire to have a correction made in the record.

At the bottom of page 110 of the proceedings No. 5 had on yesterday, and on page 27, toward the top, of the Congressional RECORD, I desire to make a correction in this sentence:

The conduct of this judge has been exceedingly reprehensible and in marked contrast with the high sense of judicial ethics and probity which generally characterize American judges.

There should be a period there, and I desire to have a period. Then in lieu of the dash and in lieu of the word "that" I desire a new sentence to begin with the word "Let," so that the paragraph will read:

The conduct of this judge has been exceedingly reprehensible and in marked contrast with the high sense of judicial ethics and probity which generally characterize American judges. Let unworthy judges be shorn of power so that an upright and independent judiciary may be maintained for the perpetuation of our government of laws.

Instead of "government of law."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The correction will be made as desired by the manager.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the manager is through with the correction, the Chair will submit the matter which has been presented by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah]. The Senator from Idaho propounds, in writing, the following inquiry for the consideration of the managers, and the Secretary will read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

Are the managers prepared at this time to present their brief as to our power to impeach for offenses or acts which were not committed or done during the term of the office which the party charged now holds?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, on behalf of the managers, in reply to the suggestion, I beg to say that that question has been thoroughly considered by the managers, and they have no doubt that this judge can be impeached for a misbehavior of a grave character that he may have committed while he held the office of district judge, his tenure of the one having dovetailed into the tenure of the present office.

We have gathered as best we could the authorities to sustain that position. We began with the celebrated case of Judge Barnard, which is familiar, I assume, to all the lawyers in this body, and we have collated the other authorities touching upon that subject that we could find. We have made a brief, and we are prepared to make the argument on that proposition.

But, Mr. President, the managers have not up to this time deemed it proper or, I might say, advisable to bring that question to the attention of the court for the reason that we are pursuing in this case the practice which was pursued in other cases, notably the practice in the Swayne case. After the statement of facts in that case, as the present occupant of the chair knows, immediately the managers began the introduction of their witnesses, and neither the law nor the facts bearing upon any phase of the different controversies involved in that case were argued until the respondent had also made his opening statement and introduced his witnesses; and after all the witnesses had been examined, then the case was opened for discussion both upon the law and the facts.

So, Mr. President, the managers have followed what they deemed the practice to be in like cases.

Then another reason, Mr. President, why the managers have not brought that argument or that question to the attention of the Senate is because the managers were under the impression that the question itself had not been raised by the respondent or his counsel, and the managers thought as lawyers conducting this case that it was quite sufficient for them to take care of every question, both of law and fact, when that question was Notwithstanding this view, the second reason that I have assigned, it was, however, the intention of the managers to invite the attention of the Senate to a consideration of that question in the orderly way in which the argument was conducted in the Swayne case and, I think, in other cases, because the managers realize that although the respondent or his counsel might not have raised that question they knew that the Senate would wish to be advised upon all the law of the subject, whether the respondent saw proper to raise any particular question or not.

I may say, therefore, Mr. President, while we are prepared to argue that proposition now, we do not think it advisable in view of what we have said, and in view of the further fact that we have a multitude of witnesses here now whom we expect to examine, and we had expected to proceed with the examination of the witnesses at this time, and in order that some of these witnesses who are away from their business might go home.

Therefore, Mr. President, unless the Senate shall indicate its desire that the managers do so it is not the purpose of the managers at this time to submit an argument on the question which has been suggested by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, the counsel for the respondent have considered very carefully the question of raising at the beginning of the proceedings the question as to the impeachability of any of the offenses set forth in any of these articles. The answer to each article begins with an averment that the article does not set forth an impeachable offense; that the facts stated, if true, do not make the respondent responsible under the Constitution to this tribunal. We concluded that these questions—and in that we agree with the managers might be left until the evidence is closed. That course was pursued in the Swayne case and in the other impeachment cases, except in the case of Secretary Belknap, which was the last case before the Swayne case. In the Belknap case his counsel filed an answer which raised the question whether, as he was no longer a civil officer of the Government, he could be impeached. After a very long and able discussion of that question, a majority of the Senate held that he could be impeached notwithstanding the fact that he was no longer in the service of the Government. But less than two-thirds so held. Accordingly Belknap's counsel refused to file any answer on the merits, because more than one-third of the Senate had voted that the Senate had no jurisdiction. The case went on to a final conclusion, and then all the Senators, with the exception of two, who had voted at the beginning that the court had no jurisdiction, voted not guilty on that ground.

I may add, Mr. President, that in what Mr. Manager Clayton has just said the managers are not to assume that we yield the point which has been suggested by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, in reply to the suggestion just interposed by the counsel for the respondent, the managers did credit to the honorable counsel to believe that he would raise that question before these proceedings were concluded. However, we believed and now believe that it would be proper for the Senate to know it, whether he raised it or not, and we prepared to give our view on that question and for that additional reason. We thought the counsel for the respondent was too good a lawyer not to avail himself of every possible defense that the respondent might be entitled to.

Mr. President, I therefore assume that the Senate does not at this time wish the managers to discuss the proposition which was suggested by the honorable Senator from Idaho.

Mr. President, we would like to have the witnesses called. Before having the witnesses called I desire to make a very brief statement, and that is that for the proper investigation of this case it has been necessary to bring here by subpœna a large number of witnesses. Many of these witnesses are men of affairs, of great affairs, in the business world, and the managers have undertaken to have enough witnesses before the Senate each day to occupy the entire time of the session daily. We have taken the liberty of telling some of the gentlemen who will be used as witnesses that we will call them hereafter by wire, and when they do come in response to such wire when we shall need them, we shall ask that they be then sworn and examined. We have therefore present to-day a part only of the witnesses on behalf of the House of Representatives.

We therefore ask at this time that the Secretary read the whole list of witnesses on behalf of the managers on the part of the House of Representatives, and then after that list is read I will do as the Chair may suggest, either have all the witnesses sworn en bloc or have each one sworn separately as we produce him to testify. If the Chair would prefer that each witness be sworn separately as he is produced, that course will be followed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The presumption is that the Senate will allow the managers to pursue their own course in

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I would therefore ask that the witnesses be called, and all of them required to enter the Chamber who are present to-day and that the oath be administered to them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the names of those who are here. Does the manager ask that the entire list of witnesses be now read?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Yes, sir.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is, witnesses for the managers.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Witnesses for the managers. Of course, I have no control and no disposition to control the matter of witnesses for the respondent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will now proceed to read the names of witnesses who are present in order that they may be swern.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I suppose, Mr. President, that it would be a difficult matter for the Secretary to call the names of witnesses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are the managers prepared to furnish the names of those whom they now wish to be sworn? If so, they will be called into the Chamber.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. We will proceed to swear each witness as we produce him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well, if that course is preferred.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. And, Mr. President, in the division of labor, we have decided that Mr. Manager Webb, of North Carolina, shall examine the first witness; and the first witness that we now ask to call is Mr. Edward J. Williams.

Mr. Edward J. Williams entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Please give your name and place of residence to the Secretary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Edward J. Williams, 626 South Blakely Street, Dunmore, Pa.

Edward J. Williams sworn and examined.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, is it desired that the witness shall sit or stand?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present position of the witness is probably the one from which he can be best heard by the Senate.

Mr. Manager WEBB (to the witness). What is your full name, Mr. Williams?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, may I ask a question? The practice differs. In some courts it is required that counsel examining a witness shall stand; but it is not customary where I have been; and I presume it is a matter about which the examining counsel or manager may use his judgment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Absolutely on both sides. The managers and counsel may assume such posture as they prefer.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, is it required that the witness should remain standing while he is giving his testimony?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair directed that he should, because he did not think that if the witness took his sent he could be heard on the other side of the Chamber.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I beg the Chair's pardon. I did not hear the order of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is for that purpose that it was directed that the witness should stand; otherwise, of course, he would be permitted to sit.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) State your full name, Mr. Williams.—A. Edward J. Williams.

Q. Where were you born?-A. Born in Wales.

Q. How old were you when you came to America?—A. I am 73 now, and I was born in 1840. I came here in 1866.

Q. You came here when 26 years old?—A. I came in 1866.

In 1866?-A. Yes.

Q. Where have you lived since that time?—A. I first lived in Schuylkill County.

Q. Where do you live now?-A. I live in Dunmore.

Q. How far is Olyphant from Scranton?-A. Six miles.

Q. Six miles from Scranton?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. How often have you visited Scranton during the last three or four years?—A. Mostly every day except Sunday.

Q. Did you have an agreement with Judge Archbald to purchase what is known as a culm dump from one Robertson and from the Erie Railroad Co.?-A. No, sir; I never had an agreement with him.

Q. State to the Senate what connection you and the judge had, if any, about the leasing of a culm dump from Robertson & Law and from the Hillside Coal & Iron Co .- A. It was not lease, sir.

Q. Call it an "option."-A. It was an option to buy from the Erie their part-there were two owners to it-for $4,500.

Q. That is from the Erie?-A. From the Erie-and $3,500 to Mr. Robertson for his part.

Making a total that you were to give them of $8,000?-Eight thousand dollars; yes, sir.

Q. Robertson & Law owned one part of it; is that right?-A. Robertson & Law.

Q. And the Erie Railroad Co., which owns the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., owned the other half?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did Judge Archbald have to do with it?-A. Why. the judge did not have anything to do any more than he gave me a letter to Capt. May; that is all he done.

Q. When was it that the judge gave you a letter to Capt.

May?—A. Well, I do not remember exactly the date of it. Q. What May is that—W. A. May?—A. W. A. May; yes, sir. Superintendent of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.?-A. Yes, Q. sir.

Q. Which is owned by the Erie Railroad Co.?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know when that letter was written by Judge Archbald to Mr. May ?-A. I can not remember-I do not remember the date.

Q. Let me ask you if this is the letter:

SCRANTON, PA., March 31, 1911.

W. A. Max, Esq., Superintendent Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

DEAR SIR: I write to inquire whether your company will dispose of your interest in the Katydid culm dump belonging to the old Robertson & Law operation, at Brownsville? And if so, will you kindly put a price upon it?
Yours, very truly,

R. W. ARCHBALD.

Is that the letter?

A. I do not think so. I think that he only recommended me to him.

Q. Only recommended you to Mr. May?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ever see this letter [exhibiting]?—A. I never saw it; I never opened the letter. I took the letter as it was

Q. In consequence of the letter that you did take you went to Mr. May?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did he tell you?-A. Mr. May was not very willing to give it at the time.

Q. Did he talk roughly to you?—A. No; he did not.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. One moment. I submit, Mr. President, we had as well try this case with some appearance of conformity to the rules of a court. That was a leading question, which ought never to have been asked and should not be allowed to be answered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Counsel, as far as possible, will avoid leading questions.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, later on, I think, it will be developed that it will be absolutely necessary to ask the Senate to cross-examine this witness. I shall conform as far as possible to the ordinary rules in an ordinary court, but, of course, we realize that this court has no limits as to its discretion as to what evidence shall be introduced.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I should not like, by sitting silent, for a moment to consent to that proposition. I understand the Senate of the United States has held in every impeachment trial that it is governed by the rules of evidence.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Did you say that he did not want to consider the proposition when you first went to him with the letter of recommendation?-A. No; he did not give

Q. What did you do then?-A. He did not say he would give it to me.

Q. Did he decline to give you the option?-A. Well, he did not give it to me.

Q. Did he decline to do it?—A. Well, I do not remember exactly what his words were—his answer to me.
Q. Do you not know what his words were?—A. I did not get it: that is all. Q. You want it to stand that way—that you did not get it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do then when you did not get it? Did you go to Judge Archbald and tell him about it?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I submit, sir, that we ought not to have this leading style of interrogatories until something has appeared to justify it. Before a committee of inquiry it seems to be the custom to lead the witness to say what he is expected to say; but I submit that in a tribunal which has the form and dignity of a court the witness should be allowed to testify and not counsel. Over and over again in impeachment proceedings the fact that a leading question was asked has been ruled to be improper, and over and over again the Presiding Officer has warned counsel not to ask leading questions. If it is necessary to inform the Senate about that, we can send for the history of these cases and read from the record. It ought not to be necessary; but certainly the managers know as well as we do that leading questions are prohibited here as well as in any court, unless there may be some exceptional case where the Senate may be satisfied that it is proper to do so because the witness is endeavoring to conceal the facts.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, this is not what could be construed as a leading question. I do not want the witness to tell me every little transaction he did outside of the main feature of this case. I simply asked him if he went to Judge Archbald. I do not want him to detail a great many other things. I want to bring him up for the sake of time.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Tell what you did with reference to Judge Archbald after you did not get the option from Capt. May .- A. I told the judge that I did not get it; that is all.

Q. How long after you saw May was it that you told the judge you did not get it?—A. Right away.

Q. What did the judge say?-A. Well, the judge said he would see about it.

Q. What else did the judge say?-A. That is all.

Q. I ask you if he said anything about going to New York and seeing Mr. Brownell, general counsel of the Erie Railroad Co.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to that as a leading question. As the court will see, in starting out, to have the manager do the testifying for a witness ought not to be allowed here in any case, and especially in such a case as this. The witness has not yet shown any indisposition to tell the truth. The managers are assuming that he is concealing facts, but nothing has appeared to justify that assumption. Why should not the manager write out what it is desired the witness shall say? Let me read from a case I have had occasion to cite on that subject in the Supreme Court of the United States. I think, perhaps, we may just as well spare the time now as on any other occasion, as this is the beginning of this trial. I read from an opinion delivered by the present Chief Justice of the Supreme Court in the case of Putnam against the United States in 162 United States Reports. In the conclusion of the opinion in that case, where this question was involved, the Chief Justice said:

case, where this question was involved, the Chief Justice said:

Brevity prevents a detailed review of the other cases on this subject previously mentioned in the margin hereof. Suffice it to say that an examination discloses that they all rest upon the mistaken idea which we have pointed out. Indeed, if the principles upon which these cases necessarily rest are pushed to their logical conclusion, they not only under the guise of an exception overthrow the general rule as to refreshing memory but also subvert the elementary principles of judicial evidence. The fact that these consequences are the legitimate and necessary outcome of the cases we have reviewed depends not on mere abstract reasoning but is demonstrated by the case of People v. Kelly (113 N. Y., 647, 651, 1889). In that case, upon the sole authority of Bullard v. Pearsall, it was held that where inconsistent or adverse statements had not been given by a witness for the State but, from mere forgetfulness or a wish to befriend the accused, the witness had omitted to testify to certain details, error had not been committed by the court in allowing the prosecuting attorney, for the purpose of refreshing the recollection of the witness, to inquire of him whether he had not testified to the omitted facts before the committing magistrate and grand jury, and, upon his admission that he had done so, to ask if the statements theretofore made were not true, and that the affirmative reply of the witness was competent evidence to submit to the jury. Not only the error but the grave consequences to result from such a doctrine were aptly pointed out by Chief Justice Shaw in Commonwealth v. Phelps (11 Gray, 73), where an attempt was made to refresh the memory of a witness by reference to testimony before a grand jury not contemporaneously given.

Mr. President, that was a case in which the attention of the witness was called to statements he had previously made for the purpose of refreshing his memory that he had testified otherwise. Now, the managers, instead of doing that, are undertaking to do what is much more objectionable-putting language into the mouth of the witness here without calling his attention to anything that he has said heretofore. Counsel have no right to cross-examine except upon the theory that somewhere the witness has said things as to which he is being examined. I submit, Mr. President, that we ought not to start out in this trial of the respondent, who sits here, and have it concluded by the testimony of witnesses as to a matter so important that it might be vital to him without letting the witness in the first place go on and tell his story and see what he says, and then, if it is sought to put words in his mouth, let the Senate, after hearing him through, determine whether or not it is a case in which that sort of procedure shall be allowed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does counsel object to the question propounded?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We object to the question propounded for the reasons I have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The manager will please state the question, so that it may be reduced to writing.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I asked the witness, when he returned from Mr. May, who had declined to allow him an option, what Judge Archbald said, and if he said anything about going to New York to see Mr. Brownell, who was the general counsel of the Erie Railway Co.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that, in the absence of any suggestion of counsel as to what was said, the question would be competent as to his having gone there and something having been said which may afterwards be disclosed.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. As the witness has already answered the question, for the present purposes it is futile to proceed. I think the witness should be cautioned, when objection is made, not to answer a question until the Presiding Officer or the Senate has ruled upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a very proper suggestion. The witness will be governed by that. Hereafter when there is an objection to testimony the witness will not reply until after the matter has been passed upon.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) You say he did tell you that he would go to New York and see Brownell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What else did he say about it?—A. That is all. He did not say more than that. He said he would see about it.

Q. Do you know whether or not at that time the Eric Railroad Co, was a defendant in a suit then pending in the United States Commerce Court?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I should like to cross-examine the witness before that question is put to him, to see what his source of knowledge is as to what was pending in the Commerce Court of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can be brought out afterwards by counsel.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Very well. Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Did you know that the Erie Railroad Co. was having a litigation before the Commerce I said that before in my testimony-that I Court?—A. Yes. seen it in the bill or what you call-

Q. The brief-the judge's docket?-A. Not in the brief-the bill of the next court that named all the trials-what do you call them-the trial list?

Q. Where did you see that?-A. On the table, sir; on the desk.

Q. On the desk? Whose desk?—A. Mr. Archbald's desk.

Q. The judge's desk?—A. On the judge's desk.
Q. Where was that? In what building in Scranton?—A. That was in the Federal Building, sir.

Q. What did you see on this table, and what did it tell you, if anything, about these suits?-A. This trial list was on there. I looked at it, and there were two cases there against the Erie; and I said, What does this case mean—this lighterage case? What does "lighterage" mean, I said to the judge.

Q. You said that to the judge?—A. Yes, sir; and he told me what lighterage meant; that it was these little boats that carry the cars across the river. That is all that was said about it.

Q. State whether or not he said anything about seeing Brownell and being able to do Mr. May an injury if he did not grant so small a request.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President-

The WITNESS. No; he never said that.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not see any use in objecting after the witness has answered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the objection?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I was about to object, Mr. President, but the witness has answered the question. I should like to see what the Reporter has got as his answer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will hereafter be careful when counsel objects to a question not to reply until the objection has been passed upon.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I asked that the answer of the witness to the last question be read. I did not catch it.

The Reporter read as follows:

Q. (By Mr. Manager Webb.) State whether or not he said anything about seeing Brownell and being able to do Mr. May an injury if he did not grant so small a request?—A. No; he never said that.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB). Did he say anything about May?—A. About May? I do not remember that he said anything—that he was going to see Brownell and Richardson—no; Brownell, he said, not Richardson. He did not say only one.

Q. Who is Brownell?-A. Brownell is one of the vice presidents of the Erie Co.

Q. He lives where?-A. He is counsel for them.

Q. And lives where?—A. He lives in New York, I suppose; I do not know.

Q. Why were you and the judge talking about the lighterage case?—A. This was in his office in the Federal building.

Q. But what did that have to do with the transaction? were you talking to him about the lighterage case?-A. I only took the thing up as I seen it on the table-on the desk.

Q. Did you know what a lighter was?-A. No, sir; didn't I tell you that I didn't know?

Q. And who did tell you what it was?-A. The judge told me what it was.

Q. What connection had the lighterage case with the Erie Railroad Co.?—A. Well, it was a lawsuit on that subject. I did not know what it was.

Q. State whether or not you knew that Mr. Brownell was marked as counsel for the Erie Railroad Co. in the lighterage case?—A. I told you that; yes, sir.

Q. That he was counsel. Well, did the judge go to New York to see Brownell?—A. He did.

Q. How do you know?-A. I only know by what was told to me.

Q. By whom?—A. I do not remember whether the judge told me or not. I could not swear that the judge told me that.

Q. Did you see the judge about it after he had gone to New York?—A. Yes, sir; I did. This is all he told me: "I seen Capt. May, and he says 'You go over and get that." He told me "you shall have it." No more than that, sir.

Q. State whether or not the judge told you he had seen Brownell.—A. Well, I do not remember whether he told me or not that he seen Brownell. When he came back he told me to go and get it, that he had met Capt. May.

Q. Who did—the judge?—A. The judge told me that; yes, sir.

Q. Well, what did you do when he told you to go and get that?-A. I went and got it.

Q. Got what?-A. Got the culm-got the contract.

Q. Got the option?—A. Yes, sir. Q. From whom?—A. From William A. May.

How long was it after you first saw May that you finally got the option?-A. I could not tell you; I could not say whether it was a week or whether it was two weeks; I do not remember.

Q. Let me ask you if this [reading to witness] is the

Office of the General Manager, Scranton, Pa., August 30, 1911.

Mr. E. J. WILLIAMS,
626 South Blakely Street, Dunmore, Pa.

DEAN SIR: As stated to you to-day verbally, I shall recommend the sale of whatever interest the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. has in what is known as the Katydid culm dump, made by Messrs. Robertson & Law in the operation of the Katydid breaker, for $4.500.

In order that it may not be lost sight of, I will mention that any coal above the size of pea coal will be subject to a royalty to the owners of Iot 46, upon the surface of which the bank is located.

It is also understood that the bank will not be conveyed to anyone else without the consent of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., and that if the offer its accepted articles of agreement will be drawn to cover the transactions action Yours, very truly,

W. A. MAY, General Manager.

Q. Is that his letter?—A. That is it.

Q. That is what you called an option?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Prior to that time had you obtained the option from Mr. Robertson ?-A. I did, sir; yes.

Q. Who drew that option?-A. Robertson himself.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, we offer this letter of August 30, 1911, from May to Williams, in evidence.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) You say Mr. Robertson drew the option?-A. Yes, sir; on his part.

Q. Do you know Judge Archbald's handwriting?—A. Yes, sir, Q. I ask if this [handing letter to witness] is his handwriting? Can you read it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is that?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not know whether the managers wish to save time in this way, but, as we have already stated, we admit that that paper is in Judge Archbald's handwriting.

The Witness. I got one from Robertson himself-The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will suspend.

The WITNESS. I got it a second time—
Mr. WORTHINGTON. So far as we are concerned, that paper may be read in evidence. We admit that it is in Judge Archbald's handwriting and is witnessed by himself.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I ask, Mr. President, that the Secretary read this agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the manager desire that it shall be read at this time?

Mr. Manager WEBB. Yes, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Our admission does not apply to what is below the agreement itself. There is an acknowledgment there as to which we should like to have the evidence at the proper time.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The paper was read, as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 2.]

This agreement made and concluded this 4th day of September, A. D. 1911, by and between John M. Robertson, of Moosic, Pa., of the one part, and Edward J. Williams, of Scranton, Pa., of the other part, witnesseth.

Whereas the said party of the first part is the owner of that certain culm dump in the vicinity of Moosic, made in the operation by the firm of Robertson & Law, of the so-called Katydid mine or colliery, and whereas the said party of the second part is desirous of purchasing the same.

and whereas the said party of the second part is desirous of purchasing the same.

Now, this agreement witnesseth, that for and in consideration of $1 to him in hand paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the said party of the first part hereby grants and conveys unto the said party of the second part, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, the right or option to purchase his interest in and to the said culm dump for the price or sum of $3,500, which said option is to be exercised within 60 days from this date, the terms to be cash within 5 days after the exercise of said option. It is understood that this option is intended to cover and include all the interest of the said party of the first part and of the said late firm of Robertson & Law.

In witness whereof the parties hereto have hereunto set their hands and seals the day and year aforesaid.

JNO. M. ROBERTSON. E. J. WILLIAMS.

Witness:

[SEAL.] GEO. W. BENEDICT, Jr., Notary Public.

(My commission expires March 10, 1913.)

Now. November 4, 1911, the terms of the within agreement are mutually extended for 30 days.

JNO. M. ROBERTSON. E. J. WILLIAMS. [SEAL.]

Recorded in the office for recording of deeds, etc., in and for Lackawanna County, Pa., in deed book 246, volume —, page 203, etc.
Witness my hand and seal of office this 13th day of September, A. D. 1911. [SEAL.] M. P. JUDGE, Recorder.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, let it be clearly understood by the Senate that the admission I just made does not apply to the acknowledgment just read. The admission is only as to Judge Archbald's signature. The managers will not claim that the acknowledgment is in the handwriting of Judge Archbald.

Mr. Manager WEBB. We understand that. Mr. WORTHINGTON. No doubt it will appear later on who did write it, and why.

Mr. Manager WEBB. We should like to mark the first letter Exhibit No. 1 and the second No. 2; and we presume the Secretary will take care of the exhibits.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Williams, you say Judge Archbald drew this option or contract?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he witnessed it?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I admit that that is his signature. Mr. Manager WEBB. All right.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) When did you get another option from Mr. Robertson?-A. What-another one?

Q. Yes. You say you got another one that the judge did not draw?-A. I do not remember exactly. I think I did; I am not sure; but here is a letter I got from him. I forget now whether I had another option; but he agreed to extend it, anyhow.

Q. I understand that.—A. Yes, sir.
Q. But was the original option from Mr. Robertson to you drawn by Judge Archbald and witnessed by him? I believe that is admitted in the pleadings.

Mr. SIMPSON. Yes; that is admitted. The WITNESS. That has been admitted.

- Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) How much coal or culm was in this bank?-A. I will read you a report of Mr. Robertson himself.
- Q. No; you need not read that. I ask you how much culm, in your judgment, was in this bank?-A. About 140,000 tons.
- Q. You had your option from Mr. Robertson, and you had your option from the Erie Railroad or the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. The entire option cost you $8,000. Is that right?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. After you got the option what did you do? What was the next step? In other words, did you undertake to sell it? That is what I want to get at .- A. Yes; I did.

Q. To whom did you try to sell it?—A. The first party I tried to sell it to was Mr. Conn, the manager of the Laurel

- Q. I ask you if you and the judge did or did not have an agreement that he was to have one-half of this culm-bank profit?-A. Yes, sir.
- Q. Who wrote a letter to Mr. Conn?-A. I wrote one letter to Mr. Conn.
 - Q. Did you pay any money for the option?-A. No, sir.
 - Q. Did the judge pay any?—A. No, sir; paid nothing. Q. What is the royally up there on this kind of coal?
- The WITNESS. What is the royalty for the coal that the Erie mined, you mean?

Q. Yes.—A. Twenty cents. Q. Twenty cents or 27½ cents?—A. Oh, no; 20 cents.

- Q. If there were 140,000 tons in the bank, worth 20 cents a ton, what would that make your profit?-A. You would not have that royalty for that. They do not pay any such royalty for the lower sizes.
- Q. Well, what was your proposition to Mr. Conn?—A. The proposition to Mr. Conn was to sell it for 27½ cents per ton, sir.
- Q. Exactly. What would that have made the profit—$30,000 less $8,000? Is that right? It is a matter of calculation. I thought I would hurry you along .- A. I suppose it might be about that.
- Q. Did you take the letter from Judge Archbald to Mr. Conn?-A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. State whether or not the judge told you he had written a letter to Conn.-A. I did not take a letter.

- Q. State whether or not the judge told you he had written a letter to Mr. Conn.-A. I do not remember whether the judge told me or not.
- Q. You do not?-A. No, sir; I do not. To tell you the honest truth, I do not know whether he told me that or not.
- Mr. Manager WEBB (addressing counsel for respondent). You admit this letter?

- Mr. WORTHINGTON. Certainly.
 Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, we would like to introduce Exhibit No. 3, which I should like to read to the Senate.
 Mr. WORTHINGTON. We admit that Judge Archbald sent
- that letter to Mr. Conn and that that is his signature.

- Mr. Manager WEBB. All right. Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB). In the first place, let me ask you who Mr. Conn is?-A. Mr. Conn is manager of the Laurel
- Q. The Laurel Line is an electric railroad in Pennsylvania?-Yes, sir.
- Q. Did Mr. Conn buy a great deal of coal to run his railroad?-A. He uses a hundred tons a day, sir.

Q. Do you know from whom he bought his coal?—A. He bought some from the Erie.
Q. That is, the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.?—A. Yes, sir; but the Erie did not want to supply him with coal.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, I should like to read this letter:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 3.]

(R. W. Archbald, Judge United States Commerce Court, Washington.) SCRANTON, PA., November 6, 1911.

C. F. Conn, Esq.

Dear Sir: On behalf of Mr. Edward J. Williams and myself I offer you the so-called Katydid culm dump, in the vicinity of Moosic, on a royalty basis at a flat rate of 30 cents a ton for all sizes, with the understanding that a minimum of 20,000 tons a year shall be taken or paid for, you to pay us $12,000 on account as advance royalties and to be entitled to take 40,000 tons without further payment therefor. In washing or screening the coal, if any of the prepared sizes are found there will be an additional charge of 5 cents a ton on such prepared sizes payable to the Hillside Coal & Fron Co. It will be satisfactory to us if you desire to remove the material from time to time in quantity without screening or washing it on the ground with the idea of screening or washing it on the ground with the idea of screening or washing it elsewhere, provided we can be sufficiently protected and informed with respect to the actual number of tons taken, for which you would be accountable. In the execution of a formal agreement there may be other minor details in order to make a complete working contract; but the above will give you the substance of what we are ready to do.

Trusting that you will find these terms acceptable, I remain, Yours, very truly,

R. W. Archbald.

R. W. ARCHBALD.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Did you ever see that letter?-A. I have seen it; yes, sir.

Q. You have seen it. Did the judge tell you that he had writen that letter? Did you know at that time that letter was written?—A. What is that?

Q. Did you know at the time the letter was written that it had been written?-A. I can not tell you. I do not remember now. It is quite a while ago. I do not really remember whether I-

Q. That letter was written November 6, 1911. Did you sell to Mr. Conn?-A. No, sir.

Q. What was the reason?-A. Well, they doubted the title, sir; but the title is just as good to-day as it ever was, because the Erie Co. received their royalty every month from that company the same as they did the first day. So that agreement is proven every time they take the royalty.

Q. What was the judge to do and what did he do to entitle him to one-half of the profits in this culm dump?—A. It was none of anybody's business, if I wished to give it to him.

- Q. Did you give it to him?-A. Well, I would have given it to him.

Q. What for?—A. Well, for what he did for me.
Q. What was that?—A. I told you a little while ago.
Q. Let us have it again. What did he do for you to make you give him half the profits in this culm bank?-A. It was partly through his influence I got it.

Q. Then you gave him one-half the profits for his influence; is that it?-A. But I had the other half before that; a long time before that.

Q. I understand that you and the judge claimed that you owned the entire interest in this culm dump; is that right?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You claimed there were 140,000 tons. Was there any negotiation with Mr. Conn by you for the judge or by the judge with Mr. Conn that you know of?—A. No; but there was with me myself after that.

Q. You were the judge's partner. What did you tell him—
Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I submit that that ought not to be said. I hope counsel will not undertake to proceed in that way in this tribunal. Counsel has no right to say that the witness was the judge's partner. The witness was giving testimony as to what he knows about it. That does not prove anything until the evidence is closed. Not that I care one way or the other whether he considers that the judge was his partner or not, but I object to that kind of procedure and examination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The manager on the part of the House will put his question in another form.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, I want to say that the only reason I put the question in that form is because in the letter the statement was made that they were partners.

Q. (By Manager WEBB.) Did you and the judge have any other negotiations with Mr. Conn with reference to the sale of this dump?—A. Not the judge. Q. Did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do?—A. I sent another letter explaining the title to him; that the title was all right; proving to him that the title was all right according to any law of the land. Q. I will ask you if this is the letter you wrote Mr. Conn:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 4.]

CHARLES F. CONN, Esq., Scranton, Pa. SCRANTON, PA., March 13, 1912.

Dear Sin. Research DEAR SIR: Regarding the culm bank located at Moosie, Pa., which you have been negotiating for, would say this matter has been hanging fire for some time, and the party who has been dealing with you is desirous of your having the bank. He believes that the title to this property is not a complicated one.

You, as a business man, understand the conditions under which the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. are operating under this lease. For any coal which they, their successors or assigns take from this bank larger than pea coal they are to pay to the Everhart heirs a royalty of 20 cents per ton. Now, I think you do not intend preparing any of the larger sizes of coal, and, if not, the Everhart heirs et al, would have no interest in the bank.

The Hillside Coal & Iron Co. and Mr. John M. Robertson, the only recognized owners of this bank, have agreed to sell me their interest, and I would be glad to have you let me know at your earliest convenience what you intend doing in the matter, as other parties are anxious to negotiate for it. I may say that should you have any doubts you could deposit one-half or two-thirds of the royalty in the bank or retain it for a reasonable time as a guaranty against any claims. I am making this at the suggestion of the party who has been dealing with you to assure you of our desire that you should sustain no loss.

Very truly, yours,

E. J. WILLIAMS.

Q. Did you sign that?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Did you consult with the judge before you wrote it?-A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Do you know whether that statement was agreeable to the judge or not?--A. I did not know; but I guessed it would be all right.

Q. You took that responsibility yourself?-A. I did, sir.

That is right.

Q. Then, what happened after you wrote that letter-between you and Mr. Conn?-A. Mr. Conn told me he could not do anything with the lawyer who was assigned to look after their titles; that he would not agree; that he would not recommend it to the company.

Q. All right. Now, after you failed to sell to Mr. Conn, who was the next person you negotiated with for the sale of it? A. Mr. Bradley. The deed was made out to Mr. Bradley.

Q. What is his full name?—A. Richard Bradley.

Q. Do you know what month it was in that you made these negotiations with Mr. Bradley?-A. No; I do not. About three or four months ago.

Q. May I refresh your memory? The letter you wrote to Mr. Coun is dated March 13, 1912. Was it after that letter?— A. Right away.

Q. Right away after that?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you and Mr. Bradley and the judge agree to trade or not?-A. I did not say anything to the judge. I sold it to Mr. Bradley.

Q. Without the judge knowing anything about it?-A. I did not say a word about it to the judge; no, sir.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York. Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I desire to submit a question to be addressed to the witness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks that the following question be propounded to the witness. The Secretary will read the question.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Who dictated the letter to Conn, which you signed?

A. Well, William P. Boland dictated part of it and so did

I dictate some part. He did not do it all himself.
Mr. LODGE. I did not hear the first part of the I did not hear the first part of the answer. I should like to have the answer repeated.

The Reporter read the question and answer.

The Witness. He was helping me to send a letter to himto Conn.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) After the letter had been written to Mr. Conn, dictated in part by Boland and in part by yourself, what transaction did you have with Richard Bradley with reference to the sale of this culm bank?

The Witness. What transaction? Mr. Manager WEBB. Yes. What

What did you do?

A. I sold it to him.

Q. For what price?—A. At $20,000.

Did he pay the money for it?-A. He offered the check to Mr. May, sir.

Q. He offered the $20,000 to whom?-A. To Mr. May-not the $20,000. The $20,000 was not coming to Capt. May. It was not due to him; only the $4,500.

Q. Did Mr. May agree that you should sell the option to Mr. Bradley?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To whom was the option to be made at that timeor to you and the judge, or to Bradley or to you and Bradley from May?—A. I would sell it to Bradley.

Q. I ask you if Mr. May did make a contract with you .-- A.

Q. And you were to assign the contract to Bradley?—A. Yes,

Mr. Manager WEBB. Now, Mr. President, we should like to introduce a copy of the contract, which I believe is admitted.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. What contract?
Mr. Manager WEBB. The contract from May to Williams, selling the Katydid culm dump.
Mr. WORTHINGTON. I have no objection to its introduction as a paper, but it is hardly right to call it a contract. It was never executed.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I understand that. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Suppose you subn

Suppose you submit it-

Mr. Manager WEBB. I want to submit a tentative contract drawn by Mr. May for this culm bank.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We agree that a tentative contract was drawn by May and submitted to Bradley, and as such it may be read, so far as we are concerned.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The paper was marked "Exhibit No. 5," and was read by the Secretary as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 5.]

Agreement made the — day of — — A. D. 1912, between Hillside Coal & Iron Co., a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania, party of the first part, and E. J. Williams, of the borough of Dunmore, Pa., party of the second part.

Whereas a certain tract of land situated partly in Lackawanna and partly in Luzerne County, known and designated as lot No. 46, of certified Pittston Township, patented to John Bennett March 25, 1849, is owned in the following proportions, to wit, the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., twelve twenty-fourths; E. & G. Brook Land Co., ix twenty-fourths; estate of James Everhart, five twenty-fourths; and heirs of John T. Everhart, one twenty-fourth; and Whereas since 1878 the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. have mined coal from said tract of land, partly because of their own partial ownership of the same and partly by reason of verbal permission granted by the other owners to do so; and

Whereas certain culm piles are situated upon the surface of said tract of land, one of which is known as the Katydid culm bank, which was made by the operations of the Katydid Colliery, heretofore operated by Robertson & Law, the said Robertson & Law having been in the nature of sublessees of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. for a time in the mining of certain coal from said tract of land; and

Whereas the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. claim to have an interest in the material constituting the said Katydid culm bank, and it is understood that the said Robertson & Law also make a like claim, and it may be that the other owners of said tract of land, at this time or at some subsequent time, may also claim to have an interest therein; and the said party of the second part proposes to purchase all the right, title, and interest of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. (subject to the payment of royalties as hereinafter set forth) in and to the material constituting the said Katydid culm bank; and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. is willing to grant, bargain, sell, and convey unto the party of the second part all its said right, title, and interest, su the party of the second part all its said right, title, and interest, subject as aforesaid, without in any way warranting or guaranteeing the title thereto or any part thereof as against any person or persons whomsoever:

Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises and of the sum of $1$ by each of the said parties unto the other in hand well and truly paid, at and before the ensealing and delivery of these presents, the receipt whereof is hereby agreed by and between the said parties and the successors and assigns of the party of the first part and the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the party of the second part as follows, to wit:

First. The Hilliside Coal & Iron Co. doth hereby grant, bargain, sell, and convey (subject to the payment of royally as hereinafter set forth) unto the said Edward J. Williams all its right, title, and interest in and to the said Katydid culm bank, with leave to the said Edward J. Williams, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, to enter thereon and take away the said material, wash out the various sizes of coal therefrom, and send the same to market over the Erie Railroad Co. for the only proper use, benefit, and behoof of the said Edward J. Williams, his heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns. If, however, any attempt is made to ship the said product or any part thereof over the line of any other railroad whatsoever without first obtaining the written consent of the Hilliside Coal & Iron Co, thereto, then this contract shall be utterly null and void and the party of the first part shall have the right, upon filing a bill in equity setting forth such voiation of the same, to have an injunction to prevent the mining, washing, or producing or removal of any further material whatsoever from said culm bank.

Second. Upon the execution and delivery of this indenture, the party of the second part shall pay unto the party of the first part he sum of $4,500 in cash.

Third. For all coal of the size of pea coal or larger sizes, being all sizes of coal tions now carried on by the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. upon sald tract, and it is distinctly understood that no warranty of the possession is hereby made as against the coowners of the party of the first part, for the reason that the party of the first part is only hereby contracting for its own interest in the premises and not for the interest of its co-for its own interest in the premises and not for the interest of its coowners.

Fifth. It is understood and agreed that all operations of the party of the second part upon said tract of land shall be concluded at the expiration of three years from the date hereof, at which time, if the party of the second part has faithfully complied with the terms of this agreement and paid the moneys herein required to be paid, he shall have the right to remove any machinery, fixtures, buildings, railroad tracks, or other things of value placed by him upon said tract of land.
All of which articles to be removed shall be removed within a period of three months after the expiration of said period of three years, and if not so removed, then they shall become the property of the party of the first part.

Sixth. The party of the first part shall have the right at any time to examine the sales book, shipping books or other books of account of the party of the second part wherein the accounts are kept showing the number of tons of coal and the sizes thereof shipped from said property, and shall also have the right to come upon the premises of the party of the second part at any and all reasonable times to ascertain how the operations authorized by this indenture are conducted and carried on.

Seventh. It is distinctly understood and agreed that by this indenture no warrant or guaranty of title, right, or interest is conveyed whatsoever unto the party of the second part and against any party or parties whomsoever who may claim to have rights or interests in the said culm bank, this indenture being merely for the purpose of conveying unto the party of the second part such right and interest as the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. hath therein.

Eighth. The party of the second part shall have the right to assign this agreement to any person or persons whomsoever, but with this distinct condition, understanding, and agreement that the person so taking an assignment hereof shall become obligated to do and perform all the covenants and

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Williams, did you receive a copy of that contract?—A. I did not. There is a letter here that was sent to me. He said he had sent it to Bradley.

Q. Did you ever receive a copy of that contract after Bradley received it?—A. I did not. Bradley gave it back the next day, and he had no right to give it back.

Q. Why was that contract made to E. J. Williams alone instead of to E. J. Williams and R. W. Archbald, if you can tell us?-A. Because the other contract was in my name.

Q. Is this the letter you received from Capt. May, dated April 11, 1912?

IU. S. S. Exhibit 6.]

APRIL 11, 1912.

Mr. RICHARD BRADLEY.

Peckville, Pa.

Dean Sig: Herewith please find proposed form of agreement conveying the interest of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. in the culm piles on the surface of lot 46, situate partly in Lackawanna and partly in Luzerne Counties, Pa.

Will you please confer with Mr. E. J. Williams, to whom I have sent a copy of this letter in regard to the form herewith, and advise whether or not same meets with your approval. If the agreement is satisfactory to you, it will be submitted to the executive officers of the H. C. & I. Co. for their consideration and approval.

Yours, very truly,

W. A. May,

Vice President and General Manager.

(Enclosure: Copy to Mr. E. J. Williams, 626 South Blakely Street, Dunmore, Pa.)

Did you receive that letter?—A. I gave it to the committee. Q. Why was that contract between Mr. May and yourself never executed?—A. That I do not know.

Q. Did you ever write a letter or sign an agreement assigning a part of this culm-bank dump in which referred to Judge Archbald as a silent party?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I object to the contents of the paper. Before that paper is to be read, we wish to have the opinion of the Senate on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the objection of counsel?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The paper about to be produced is one prepared in the office of William P. Boland signed by this witness. Our objection is that it ought not to be allowed to go in evidence or constitute a part of the record until it is shown by some competent evidence that Judge Archbald had something to do with it.

The Witness. I do not think he had anything to do with it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That paper is claimed to be a damning piece of evidence against Judge Archbald, but we assert that it was a paper that was prepared for the purpose of making a case against him, in his absence, of which he knew nothing and never heard until after this proceeding began. I submit it is against every principle of law and justice to have this paper go in at all until some evidence has been offered tending to show that Judge Archbald knew about it or was responsible

I submit that the paper was not prepared under such circumstances as that Judge Archbald could be held accountable, or that it could be admitted as evidence against him. This yery question was raised, as you will remember, Mr. President, in the Swayne case. An attempt was made to prove that Judge Swayne had made certain admissions when examined as a witness before the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, and the managers then proposed to state to the Senate what those admissions were. It was then ruled out and that ruling was affirmed by a second vote of the Senate. This ruling was under a statute of the United States, which provides that evidence given before a committee of Congress by any person shall not be used against that person in any criminal proceeding.

We do not care a great deal about this matter when the facts in regard to it will appear, and it might well be introduced when we come to present our evidence as showing a conspiracy against Judge Archbald. But until some evidence is produced tending to show that Judge Archbald had some responsibility for that paper, or knew that it was prepared or authorized it to be prepared, I submit the contents of it ought not to be put into this record at all.

I have no fear that the members of this tribunal will give any credence to it, but it will go to the country and so do Judge

Archbald great harm.

The position of the managers in regard Mr. Manager WEBB. to this matter is that Mr. Williams and Judge Archbald had a combination or understanding by which they were to secure certain concessions from the railroad; that his name was to be kept silent; and in pursuance of that arrangement this witness did give an assignment of a portion of his option to W. P. Boland and a "silent party," and this witness will testify that the silent party was Judge Archbald.

In pursuance of that agreement, which we say inhered in the very first thought of the effort to secure a sale from Robertson and the last contract made by May was made to Williams alone, though the judge had a half interest; that Judge Archbald's name does not appear anywhere in this tentative deed; and that it was the understanding and agreement between witness and the judge that this witness was Judge Archbald's agent and partner, and as such signed this "silent party" contract and referred to the judge as the "silent party." We care not under what circumstances the contract was drawn. The point we make is that this contract was signed by Mr. Williams and that Judge Archbald knew that his name was used in the contract or assignment as a "silent party."

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Whenever any evidence shall be introduced tending to show that Judge Archbald requested or authorized that his name should be kept out, this will become competent evidence. This witness has not been asked, and there has been no opportunity for anyone else to testify, whether Judge Archbald ever requested or suggested that his name should be kept out of papers relating to the purchase or sale of the Katydid dump.

I submit that it is against every principle of law of evidence and against common justice. This witness has not said and has been very far from saying that Judge Archbald ever said that his name should be kept out of it. It appears that when the respondent wrote to May he signed his own name and did not refer to Williams at all. It appears that when he wrote to Mr. Conn and proposed to sell this dump to him he stated that he was one of the parties in interest. It appears as to Robertson's contract, which has been read, that Judge Archbald wrote it with his own hand and signed his own name to it as a witness

There has not been a scintilla of evidence tending to show that Judge Archbald was trying to conceal anything or trying to keep his name out of it. Everything is to the contrary.

I may say that this is but the first step as we anticipate from what we know of prior proceedings in this case, and it will be undertaken to introduce a mass of evidence here as to transactions between other parties as to which no witness will testify that Judge Archbald knew of them or authorized them. Until there is some evidence that the respondent was cognizant of the reference to him as a "silent party," I submit this paper ought not to go into the record.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, just a word. We do not regard this entirely as a criminal action. It is a quasi civil action. There is no criminal penalty to be fixed by the Senate. Our contention is that this witness is an agent, a partner of the respondent, and that the respondent is bound by any act or word of this witness with reference to this particular transaction. That is why we propose to introduce this contract in which he is referred to as a "silent party," and to show that the judge knew he was referred to as such "silent party."

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, the question, I understand, is whether or not this letter shall be read to the court. It is in the nature of a contract, signed by this witness, in which he at that time was a partner of Judge Archbald. I think there will be no controversy about that. The letter has already been read here, written by Judge Archbald, in which he says he is interested with Mr. Williams in this coal dump.

The purpose of the contract which is offered in evidence now by Mr. Manager Webb and signed by Mr. Williams is simply a transfer of one-third interest in the coal dump to William P. Boland. I dare say that Williams, whether it had been expressed by Judge Archbald or not, had authority as partner of Judge Archbald to convey this interest in the coal dump to Mr. Boland.

In any event, I do not understand how the court can pass upon the admissibility of a contract until it has been read. We are entitled to have the court know what the evidence offered is, and I think if the court hears this contract they will be able to judge of its admissibility, and I think they will find that it is admissible.

The objection to the admission of this contract on the part of Mr. Worthington is that some party referred to in the contract is referred to as a silent party. There are Mr. Boland, Mr. Williams, and a silent party. It does not make any difference who that refers to, whether to Judge Archbald or whom it may refer to, in determining the admissibility of this evidence. It is a part of this transaction; it is a part of the res gestæ; it must go in this line of testimony to connect the transaction and show what relation Williams and Boland and Judge Archbald had to each other in the ownership of this coal dump.

So, I submit, in any event it must be read to the court before the court can pass upon its admissibility.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, there is only one thing that I should like to call the attention of yourself and Senators to in should like to call the attention of yourself and Senators to in answer to something that Mr. Manager Webb has said, because, after all, that which is a fundamental proposition will generally lead us to a correct conclusion if we can find what the fundamental proposition, in fact, is.

Mr. Webb's statement was that this is not a criminal proceeding. I want to take issue with him upon that point directly, and in the most forcible way that it can be taken, and I shail do so very briefly, for I recognize the fact that the time of the Senate is of exceeding importance.

I propose, sir, first to read a paragraph from an article on the subject of impeachment by Prof. Dwight. It is as follows:

When a criminal act has been committed, it may evidently be regarded in three aspects—

Mind you, a criminal act-

first, the injury to the individual or his family may be considered; second, the wrong to the executive officer charged with the administration of the laws may be looked at; and, third, the mind may dwell upon the general wrong done to the state, or "the people," as we say in modern times. This view was early taken in the common law; the injury to the individual was redressed by a proceeding called an appeal; the injury to the king by a process called an indictment; the wrong to the entire nation by a proceeding called an impeachment. In process of time the injury to the individual came to be regarded as a private and not as a public wrong, so that in the progress of the law there remained two great criminal proceedings—indictment and impeachment.

There can not be found, I submit, sir, in any well-considered article or case any variance whatever from that conclusion, and that it is not varied in this country is evident from the language of the Constitution itself, two or three of the clauses of which I desire now to read:

When the President of the United States is tried, the Chief Justice shall preside; and no person shall be convicted without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Members present.

What I want to know is whether the word "conviction" is in any way relevant to a civil or a quasi civil proceeding. Again:

The President shall * * * have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment.

I want to know whether there are offenses against the United States which are not in their nature criminal.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, may I interrupt the gentleman. There will be no controversy, I think, as to the proposition which the gentleman lays down.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. Manager Webb made the controversy.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I say broadly, as the gentleman seems to interpret it. But the proposition, it seems to me, is on the admissibility of this contract, and regardless of the question whether these proceedings be criminal or civil proceedings we insist that this is admissible in evidence. understand that there is any difference in the rule of admitting testimony of this kind whether it be in a criminal case or in a That is the point I am making.

Mr. SIMPSON. I submit there is or may be a difference. agree with the manager that there is no difference in the particular matter now before the Senate, and I should not have bothered the Senate about it had it not seemed to me, from Mr. Manager Webb's statement of it, that it was an entry of the wedge opening apart for the purpose of reaching to another conclusion, which will be reached very shortly. If, however, the managers agree with Mr. Manager Sterling, that there is no controversy over this branch of the matter, I, of course, have nothing further to say in regard to it.

There is, however, on the other branch of the case a very important proposition which I do not care at this time at any length to discuss before the Senate, because it can not very well be discussed unless the presiding officer or some one connected with the Senate shall in fact see the paper. I know of no other way in which that question can be raised, but you will see, if the paper is examined into, that it is not a statement of a current existing present thing to be acted upon, in so far as Judge Archbald is concerned, but it is a recital of a past occurrence; and the authorities are absolutely uniform that, whether it is by an agent, if Mr. Manager Webs chooses to call him so, or whether he be his partner, as the original arrangement between them and the first of these articles of impeachment seem to call it, or whether it be a coconspirator, it makes no difference, if the paper is a recital of a past occurrence or anything which has any relevancy to a past occurrence rather than to a present thing, no one of them, agent, copartner, or coconspirator, can by such a recital bind one not a party directly to the paper or declaration which is proposed to be offered in evidence.

So far as this present matter is concerned, there must necessarily be some ultimate purpose beyond that which is here expressed, because it has been conceded here, and it is now conceded upon the behalf of Judge Archbald that he did have an interest in this matter and would have obtained a portion of the profits had there been any profits to be obtained from it.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, may I be permitted to make a brief statement?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the manager will proceed.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, those of you who have had the opportunity to examine the article written by Prof. Dwight, and which the gentleman was proceeding to read to the Senate, know that almost all the views expressed by Prof. Dwight on the law of impeachment have not been upheld by other writers upon the same subject.

However, Mr. President, I may say here and now for the benefit of the court and for the satisfaction of the counsel for the respondent, that I do not think there will be much disagreement between the lawyers on the respective sides in regard to the fundamental law of impeachment, so far particularly as the first six articles here preferred are concerned. Of course, we have to-day been informed of a disagreement as to the last six articles. The first six relating to Judge Arch-bald's conduct as a judge of the Commerce Court, the next six relating to his conduct as district judge, and the thirteenth article relating to his general conduct in his judicial capacity and while he was filling the offices of district and circuit judges.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a thought that perhaps has not occurred to all the Members of the Senate. This, in all the history of our jurisprudence, stands unique as a tribunal. It is unique not because this is a constitutional court; we have another court created by the Constitution, the Supreme Court. It is not unique in the annals of jurisprudence as being the only Court of Impeachment that ever existed. It is unique in the history of our own jurisprudence in that this body is charged with the duty of determining the law and the facts in one and the same verdict. It is said by some of the writers that this court renders a mixed verdict; that is, in reaching a verdict and judgment the court pronounce both upon the law and the evidence in the case.

Mr. President, that at once lifts this tribunal above the atmosphere of a mere petty courthouse trial where a $5 pettifogging lawyer may undertake in the defense of a criminal to interpose all sorts of technical objections, and where the judge is to pass upon the law and the jury upon the facts. This is a different tribunal from that. It is higher than that. This tribunal wants to know all the facts.

Mr. President, I would not do myself the discredit nor would I reflect upon the intelligence nor the good intentions of this great body by suggesting that the public wish to know all the facts pertaining to the conduct of their high judicial officer.

This is more than a mere petty criminal case.

Mr. President, I have digressed somewhat from the question and I come back to it, and that is the admissibility of this testimony. I lay down the proposition-and I take it it will be assented to by every lawyer—that in determining the admissibility of evidence the same rule obtains whether the case be criminal in its nature strictly or whether it be civil or whether it be quasi criminal. The character of the case matters not; it is the character of the testimony that concerns its admissibility.

In this case why is this testimony admissible? Mr. President, the article charges that Judge Archbald has abused his office by seeking to trade and traffic in culm dumps, and this being one of the culm dumps, it is charged certainly in the statements of facts that Williams was his partner. It has been shown by the witness that Judge Archbald and Williams were shown by the witness that Judge Archbald and Williams were partners in this transaction. And in his answer Judge Archbald admits the partnership. This contract is a part of a transaction of the partnership. We connect it, we have all along connected it up to this time, and Judge Archbald can not object to what his partner does. If I select an agent, if I have a partner in a joint enterprise, can I be heard in any court anywhere the resultate the conduct and the action of my partner.

where to repudiate the conduct and the action of my partner, my agent, acting within the scope of the partnership or agency?

So here, Mr. President, it is necessary for the orderly statement and full presentation of this evidence, that this part of it, which follows right along with the other testimony in the case, be put in here to elucidate the whole conduct of Judge Archbald. As it will be shown, and has been shown, that Williams is his partner, this is a part not only of that, but it is a part of the res gestae; it is a continuation of the transaction that was entered into by Archbald and Williams, Judge Archbald's partner. If that be not true, it can be disputed, but we offer it for the purpose of establishing it and keeping up the chain of this whole transaction and connecting Judge Archbald with it, and there can not be any doubt but that we will connect Judge Archbald otherwise, as I think, with this transaction.

Then again, Mr. President, upon the theory that has been suggested, if this contract relates to a conspiracy to violate the law, it is admissible. If it can be shown that while a conspirator may be here in this Chamber, if pursuant to the agreement had with the coconspirator the coconspirator commits crime down on Pennsylvania Avenue, all law writers tell us that the man who was in this Chamber when the act was committed is just as guilty as if he had been present at the scene of the crime.

Mr. President, I do not think I violate propriety when I call attention to contemporaneous history that will illustrate this It was said in one of the noted cases in Alabama, contention. my own State, by one of her great chief justices, that courts will take judicial notice of contemporaneous history, and in that case the contemporaneous history was the action of a mob in Birmingham, Ala., in violating the law.

The court took judicial cognizance of that contemporaneous history. So, I am certain, the Senate, this court, is as broad in its power and rights to take judicial notice of contemporaneous history as is any court. I think I violate no propriety when I say that in the recent case in New York City, where a police lieutenant was charged with murder, it was not pretended that he was there at the time the murder was committed, or that he had anything directly to do with it, but he was convicted, and was sentenced upon the theory that he instigated it; that he entered into the conspiracy elsewhere sometime before the act, and that the conspirators did his bidding.

Upon these principles, Mr. President, both of law and of the rules of evidence obtaining in the courts and upon the desire that this tribunal wants to do full justice-wants all the factsand the honorable counsel for the respondent does himself justice when he credits the Senate with the ability and the fairness and the intention to pass upon these questions, I insist on the admissibility of this paper.

Mr. President, it seems to me that we might conduct this trial and save much time, and that justice can be had as well in the end, without interposing what I may think, I respectfully submit, sometimes to be captious objections to the testimony.

I participated, Mr. President, if you will pardon a personal allusion, in the Swayne case; and, as I remember it, the ordinary hidebound rules—if I may use a vulgarism—were not pursued. For instance, repeatedly during the trial of that case a witness was introduced; he was cross-examined; then he was put back and reexamined; and then he was put back and recross-examined. So that narrowness in proceedings have never been adhered to by the Senate.

Mr. President, in the economy of time, do you not think, and does not the Senate think, that it can take care of all these questions, so that justice may be fully done to the respondent?

I want to say, Mr. President, in behalf of the managers, that the managers do not desire and will not claim a verdict of conviction in this case unless, after they have adduced the testi-mony, they are of opinion that they have made a case that would warrant such a judgment at the bands of the Senate.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I dislike very much to further occupy the time of the Senate in the discussion of the admissibility of this particular piece of evidence, but it may not be amiss now, on this first day of our proceedings, to have the Senate informed as to what is contended here with respect to rules of evidence and their application. It may save repeating it in the subsequent course of the trial.

I must express my surprise to hear my friend Mr. Manager CLAYTON intimate that the rules of evidence do not guide us here. I do not suppose he meant by what he said to indicate that we are pettifogging. We have resolved that at the outset of this case

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, lest the gentleman shall permit that remark to stand, I wish to state that I did not say that the rules of evidence do not guide us, but I said the narrow, technical rules which characterize the proceedings in the ordinary courthouse have never characterized proceedings of this kind in the Senate.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I was about to say, Mr. President—and I think that what has taken place so far in the presence of the Senate will justify me in saying it—that we have re-solved that we would make no technical objection here; that whenever objection was made it should be to something that was very substantial.

My friend refers to what was done in the Swayne case. are here exactly in the position in which you were in the Swayne case, in which counsel offered to introduce evidence as to statements made by Judge Swayne before the Judiciary Committee under oath. The evidence was objected to by counsel who represented Judge Swayne here; and, after very full argument and after reargument, on motion of the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. Bailey], with closed doors, the evidence was ruled out. Now it is attempted here not to show what Judge Archbald said, but because he had entered into a simple venture with Mr. Williams, the witness in this case, to see if they could get a right to buy and sell the Katylid culm dump, to undertake to show that a paper which was executed by Mr. Williams, prepared in the office of Mr. Boland behind the back of Judge Archbald, and which was not anything in the execution of the business of the partnership—if you choose to call it a partnership—is to be evidence against Judge Archbald without showing that he had authorized or had anything to do with it.

Does the fact that I enter into a partnership with a man to purchase a piece of property authorize him, without anything more, to go and sell me out? He is authorized to do anything that may be necessary in the ordinary course of buying and selling that property; that is all I have agreed to; but when he goes into the office of another person, behind my back, and signs a paper of which I have no knowledge and years afterwards it is sought to introduce it in evidence against me in support of a criminal charge—a paper in which he undertakes to sell me out and to make statements as to what I have said or done at some prior time—I say that every principle of evidence and of justice requires its exclusion.

This witness has not been asked—the managers have not dared ask him—whether he was authorized by Judge Archbald to take Boland into partnership, for that is what it amounts to. Here is evidence that A and B entered into a partnership. Now, evidence is offered to show that one of them created another partnership made up of A, B, and C. That can not be done without the knowledge and consent of both of them. When it is undertaken to do that and to go further and to show not only that Judge Archbald was brought into a new partnership, but to put into that writing something purporting to recite past transactions, which may be used against him criminally in a subsequent proceeding, and the instrument is put away in somebody's drawer and kept from the light of day until a prosecution is sprung, it seems to me that the Senate should require some evidence to connect Judge Archbald with it before it is put in evidence. case of Judge Swayne the managers insisted that the Senate should hear what Judge Swayne had said before they ruled it out, but the Senate sustained the argument which was made on this side of the Chamber by counsel for the respondent—that it should not be heard and should not be put into the record until it was determined that it was competent. The Senate held that it was incompetent. After reargument it sustained that conclusion, and the evidence never did appear in the record, and nobody knows to this day what it is without going to a record in another place.

Mr. Manager WEBB, Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is necessary that argument shall conclude at some time, the Chair will say to the managers.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I just want to make the point, Mr. President, that the ruling in the Senate with reference to the Swayne case has no application to this evidence, because there it was a constitutional question as to whether or not a man under the Constitution of the United States could have his evidence used in two different places and be confronted with it in the Senate-entirely a different question. This is a question of trying the conduct of this judge. We say that he knew his conduct was bad, and that he knew that this contract was made with his name as a silent party in it. We say that the Senate ought to hear it; it is a part of the gist of this charge and ought to be made known as evidence in this case

Mr. WORTHINGTON. When counsel prove that Judge Archbald knew it, we shall withdraw our objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before taking action in regard to this question, the Chair desires to make a statement to the Senate. Anticipating that questions of the admissibility of evidence would arise, the present occupant of the chair has examined former impeachment cases in order to ascertain what was the practice of Presiding Officers themselves in regard to deciding questions of this character, or of submitting them to the Senate. Upon examination, it is found in former impeachment cases that very liberally, to say the least, the Presiding Officer had availed himself of the privilege of submitting the matter to the Senate. In the Andrew Johnson impeachment case in particular, which was presided over by the highest judicial officer in the land, Chief Justice Chase, almost invariably every question as to the admissibility of evidence was submitted by him to the Senate for its determination. While the present occupant of the chair is not averse to taking responsibility in a matter that is alleged by the counsel to be peculiarly vital to the case, he feels that the matter should be submitted to the Senate. He is more inclined to that course by the fact that if one single Senator differed from the conclusion of the Chair he would have the right to have the vote taken by the Senate. Therefore, in this case the present occupant of the chair will submit to the Senate the question as to the admissibility of the evidence.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, I ask that the paper be read, so that we may know what it is before we vote on its admissibility.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to state that, in the opinion of the present occupant, it is necessary that the Senate should be informed of the nature of the paper before Senators could determine whether or not it is admissible. Therefore, in the absence of any objection—and if objected to that question will be submitted to the Senate—the present occupant of the chair will direct that the paper be read to the Robertson and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. $3,500 and $4,500 respectively, to be divided equally between William P. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if it be within the rules of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment to receive this evidence and to reserve a decision as to its admissibility? That practice is common in the courts. If we undertake to vote upon each objection to the testimony, or at least each important objection to the testimony of wit-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has no right under the rule to discuss the question. The Senator has the right, if he so desires, to submit an order to the Senate, which would cover the point that he wishes to make.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, I ask leave to submit such an order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will please reduce it to writing.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. GALLINGER. Call the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington desires to have an order submitted to the Senate preliminary to the vote, as the Chair understands from the Senator's state-Of course, he has the right to submit it, if the Chair is correct in that statement.

Mr. LODGE. I did not so understand him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair may have misunderstood the Senator from Washington, but that was the Chair's understanding.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I present the following order.

President, I will say—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has not the right to discuss it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Have I no right to make an explanation?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; the Secretary will report to the Senate the order submitted by the Senator from Washington.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the evidence be received and the decision as to its admissibility be reserved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand that that is subject to a point of order on his part, and is obliged to submit it to the Senate as he would any other order which is asked for. Therefore—

Mr. LODGE. The roll call must first come on the order proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will give it that direction—that the question of admissibility will be first taken, and then the question as to what office it shall perform. The Chair will put the question upon the admissibility of the evidence unless the Senator from Washington desires this as an order preliminary to it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to have an opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the order to the Senate, and the Secretary will call the roll upon the order asked for by the Senator from Washington. Those who favor the adoption of the order will, as their names are called, vote "yea"; those who are opposed to the adoption of the order submitted by the Senator from Washington will, as their names are called, vote "nay."

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, are we required to take yea-and-nay vote on this preliminary order? I think not under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule is that every vote shall be taken by yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order is not adopted. The question recurs upon the question submitted by the present occupant of the chair, as to whether the paper read shall or shall not be admitted in evidence. As their names are called Senators who favor the admission of the paper in evidence will vote "yea"; those who oppose it will, as their names are called, vote "nay."

Mr. CLAPP. Could not the requirement for a yea-and-nay vote be waived if there was no objection made?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CLAPP. Why not test it in that way?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is unanimous, the Chair is of the opinion that a yea-and-nay vote is not required, because it is the same as if every Senator voted.

Mr. CLAPP. I suggest that the Chair first submit in a suggestive way whether it would be unanimous, and if so it would save calling the roll.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will adopt the suggestion of the Senator from Minnesota and ask if there is any objection to the admissibility of the paper in evidence?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Presiding Officer and of the Senate to Rule VII adopted by the Senate and governing the proceedings in impeachment cases. It provides:

That is, the Presiding Officer-

Or he may, at his option, in the first instance, submit any such question to a vote of the Members of the Senate. Upon all such questions the vote shall be without a division, unless the yeas and nays be demanded by one-fifth of the Members present, when the same shall be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is seemingly in conflict with Rule XXIII, and the Chair construes it to be governed by the first portion of Rule XXIII, which expressly provides that all orders and decisions of the Senate must be by yeas and nays. The only variation is when there is no division, which is the same as if the roll had been called and everybody had voted yea. Therefore the Chair repeats the question.

Mr. CULBERSON. I suggest to the Chair that Rule XXIII makes provision subject to Rule VII, which counsel has just

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is true, but then it does not have reference to that part of the rule. The Chair can not now discuss that question. The Chair will put the question again. Is there objection by any Senator to the admissibility of the paper in evidence?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There is,
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming objects. Therefore the roll will be called. As their names are called those in favor of the admissibility of the evidence will vote "yea"; those opposed will, as their names are called, vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate decides that the paper is admissible, and it is so ordered.

The Chair desires, in the interest of expedition and orderly procedure, to suggest to both the managers on the part of the House and counsel for the respondent that hereafter when incidental questions are to be discussed they be confined to an opening and a reply and a conclusion. The Chair will not rule that arbitrarily or positively, but trusts that counsel will act upon its suggestion.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I understand that the contract is now in evidence?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate has so ordered. :1 E

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Williams, who was the silent party referred to in this contract?-A. I do not know. I do not think I ever had anything to do with that.

Q. Is that your signature [exhibiting paper to witness]?—A. That is my signature, but this is not the original. Where is the one you took a picture of?

Q. Is that your signature?—A. Yes.

Q. You say this is your signature?—A. That is my signature;

Q. Is it a copy of the one you signed. [A pause.] Did you sign it in duplicate?—A. No; I did not. Here they are; here are two of them [indicating].

Q. I will ask you this question: Did you testify before the Judiciary Committee of the House?—A. Yes; I did.

Q. Did you swear there that this contract contained the names--A. (Interrupting.) I do not remember anything about such a paper.

Let me ask my question first. Did you swear before the Judiciary Committee of the House that the silent party referred to there was Judge Archbald, and that he knew that he was put in that contract as a silent party?-A. I did; yes.

Q. Sir?—A. That is what it meant; yes. Q. Is that so?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you say is so?—A. What is that?

Q. I want to know what you say is so; was he the silent party referred to in this contract? Did he know that you had put him in the contract as a silent party?—A. No; he did not know anything about it; the judge did not know anything about that.

Q. Who, then, was the party that you referred to in this contract as the silent party?—A. I do not remember that I ever did make that-

Q. I ask you again, did you swear before the Judiciary Committee of the House in this investigation?—A. I did acknowledge it at last.

Q. Did you acknowledge at last that you referred to him as the silent party?-A. Because my name was there; but how it got there I do not know.

Q. I ask you if you swore before the Judiciary Committee of the House that you put the judge's name to this contract as a silent party because you thought it would be unlawful to put his name in it?-A. That it would be unlawful?

Q. I ask you if you testified to that before the Judiciary Committee?—A. I do not remember.

Q. I ask you if you answered Judge Norris, on the committee, that the judge knew that he was a silent party.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Judge Archbald.
Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) That Judge Archbald knew that he was a silent party?-A. I do not know about that; I do not know whether I did or not; I do not remember.

Q. Did you insert his name in there as a silent party?—A. No; I did not put his name in there. I did not put that silent party in there. I did not make that paper at all.

Q. To whom did you refer as the silent party?-A. What is that?

Q. To whom did you refer as the silent party?—A. Boland drew up that paper. Here are two more here.

Q. To whom did you refer when you signed that? Whom did you refer to as a silent party? I will ask you if you swore before the Judiciary Committee that you put this in here, or that it was put in at your own suggestion—"silent party"?—A. I did not put it in.

Mr. NELSON. I submit we are entitled to an answer to the preceding question before the managers ask another.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I think the Senator is right.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I ask you again if you swore before the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, when this matter was under investigation before it, that the silent party referred to in this contract was Judge Archbald, and that you told the judge you had referred to him as a silent party?-A. I never told the judge.

Q. I ask you if you swore to that before the Judiciary Committee.—A. Well, it was a mistake, because I never told the judge about it.

Q. Then, I ask you if you put his name in this contract and referred to him as the silent party?-A. I told you it was not me that put that in there.

Q. It was you who signed it, was it not?-A. I may have signed it, but I never made that paper.

Q. I ask you whether you did not say when you signed it that the judge was a silent party?-A. Well, it meant the judge, of course.

Mr. Manager WEBB. You could have said that two or three duntes and a said that two or three minutes ago.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I object to the gentleman lecturing the witness.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) You say "silent party" meant the judge. Why did you not put the judge's name in there?-

A. I did not put his name in there.

Q. I ask if you did not swear before the Judiciary Committee that the reason you did not put his name in was because you thought it would not be lawful? [A pause.] Sir?—A. I do not remember saying that. I do not remember that.

Q. I ask you now, then, if that was not the reason?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to submit a question to be addressed to the witness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks that the following question be prepounded to the witness. Secretary will read the question.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Was the paper read to you or by you before you signed it?

A. I do not think it was.

Mr. Manager WEBB. On behalf of the managers, I ask permission of the Senate at this point to cross-examine this witness. My reason for asking it is that it is perfectly evident that he is a party in this transaction, that he is a friend to Judge Archbald, and an unwilling witness, and hostile to this case. As a preliminary to this request, however, I want to ask the witness this question.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I will ask you, Mr. Williams, if you did not say in the Scranton Times, on the 27th of April, a week before you came to Washington to testify before the Judiciary Committee, that you had papers in your possession which would clear the judge?—A. Well before—Q. Just answer that question.—A. Before the Attorney General, do you mean?

Q. No; before you came to Washington to testify before the Judiciary Committee. Was not this published in the Scranton Times on April 27:

I have the papers in my pocket which will show the price we paid, and when the case comes to that point my testimony will clear Judge Archbald.

Did you not admit before the Judiciary Committee that you put that in the Scranton Times; and did you not tell that to a correspondent of the Scranton Times, and was it not published in your city?-A. I do not remember anything about that-not a word.

Q. Who paid your expenses when you came to testify before the Judiciary Committee?-A. The judge paid them. He gave me the ticket to come down.

Q. You mean Judge Archbald?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a friend of the judge?-A. I was friendly with him; yes, sir.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, under these circumstances we feel that in order to get from this witness the facts that he has testified to here before, even, or to get a full statement from him, we are entitled to cross-examine him or lead

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that the manager proceed a little further without doing so.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Very well, sir. Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I will ask you if you did not swear before the Judiciary Committee that you did sign this? A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. You did?-A. I did sign that. That is my handwriting. Mr. Manager WEBB. That answers the question. That is your handwriting.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. May I interrupt my colleague to ask that he please identify the paper as to which the witness now answers?

Mr. Manager WEBB. This is the "silent-party" contract about which I am now talking.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) You admit you signed it?—
A. Yes; I signed it.

Q. You admit now that you signed it?—A. Yes, sir; I did. Mr. Manager CLAYTON. What is the number of the exhibit?

Mr. Manager WEBB. Exhibit No. 7.
Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) When you signed it, did you know the "silent party" was in it?—A. No; I did not know it; and I do not know now. I do not know when or how that was signed; I can not tell you.

will ask you again now, and please listen to this question—A. (Interrupting.) You know that in the Crawford will case there have been some signatures put on the papers—

Q. I understand .- A. And it was not written by Jim Craw-

Q. You do not deny that at one time-whether it was in this paper or not-you signed a paper in which you referred to Judge Archbald as a silent party?-A. No, sir. I would not swear I signed that.

Q. This paper?-A. Yes,

Q. Then we will discard this paper for the present. You did sign a paper?-A. I did.

Q. And did that "silent party" refer to Judge Archbald?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you tell Judge Archbald that you had done that?-A. To Bill Boland, you mean?

Q. No; did you tell Judge Archbald that you had referred to him as a silent party-A. No; I do not know.

Q. In any kind of a contract?-A. I do not know whether I did or not. Q. I will ask you if you made this response to Mr. Norris in the Judiciary Committee. Mr. WORTHINGTON. Give the page, please,

Mr. Manager WEBB. Page 516.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) This is a question Mr. Norris asked you:

Did the judge know that he was a silent partner? Mr. WILLIAMS. He knew that he was a silent partner all right.

Is that true?-A. Yes; he knew that he was a silent partner. Q. After the letter from Mr. May submitting a copy of the contract to you from him, did he rescind that contract a little later by another letter?-A. How is that?

Q. I mean did Mr. May annul or withdraw the contract for the Katydid culm dump which he was making to you so that he could make it to Mr. Bradley ?- A. No; Mr. Bradley took the deed back to him-that deed you read here to-day.

That is right. Mr. Bradley did hand it back to him?-

A. Yes.

Mr. Manager WEBB. There is no controversy about that? Mr. WORTHINGTON. No.

The Witness. Because this lawsuit was coming on.
Mr. Manager WEBB. I introduce Exhibit 8.
Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I wish you would listen to this and see if you received that letter.

The Secretary read the letter referred to, which was marked "Exhibit 8," as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 8.]

APRIL 13, 1912.

Mr. RICHARD BRADLEY, Peckville, Pa.

DEAR SIR: Further in the matter of the interest of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. in the Katydid dump, referred to in mine of the 11th instant

Because of the complications brought to your attention yesterday at the Laurel Line station our attorneys believe that it will be best for you not to do anything whatever in connection with the matter until you hear further from me.

Yours, very truly,

W. A. Max,

Vice President and General Manager.

(Copy to Mr. E. J. Williams, 626 South Blakely Street, Dunmore, Pa.) Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Did you receive a copy of that letter?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the contract returned to Mr. May—this contract of sale?—A. The deed was returned to him; yes, sir.

Q. Well, the deed. It was returned to Mr. May?—A. It was sent to Mr. Bradley to examine, to see if it was acceptable to him.

Q. And it was acceptable to him?-A. It was acceptable.

Q. This letter received two days later called it in, did it?-A. Yes, sir. Q. Since Mr. Bradley returned the contract, have you tried to sell the culm bank to anyone else?-A. No, sir.

Q. I ask you if you tried to sell it to Mr. Thomas Howell Jones ?- A. Oh, no. That was before that.

Q. Did you try to sell it to Mr. Thomas Howell Jones ?- A. No; that was before Bradley.

Q. Whenever it was, did you try to sell it to Thomas Howell Jones?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you carry Thomas Howell Jones to the judge's office?-What is that?

Q. Did you carry Thomas Howell Jones to the judge's office; did you go with him to the judge's office?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you in the presence of the judge give him a 10-day option, at $25,000, on this dump?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know when it was that you gave Thomas Howell Jones this 10-day option?-A. It was before Bradley; a few days before that.

Q. A few days before?—A. Yes; a few days before Bradley Q. Are you quite sure it was before, or was it since?-A. Oh, it was before. Q. Why should it be before the time when you negotiated with Bradley for it?-A. I did not negotiate with Bradley until after Tom Jones. Q. Then I will ask you if Mr. Thomas Howell Jones went down to examine the culm dump after he had his $25,000 option; did he examine it to see whether or not it was worth buying?-A. He was ready to buy it, but his parties did not come on.

Q. After he came back from examining the dump I will ask you if you and he did not go to the judge's office and if the judge did not tell Mr. Thomas Howell Jones that he (the judge) had no title to this dump, and that you got out of the office; and that a few days later you asked Jones where he was going and you told him not to go to the judge's office, that he had nothing to do with it?-A. No, sir; I did not. I did not say that.

Q. Did you have any discussion of that sort with Thomas Howell Jones?-A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. You gave him an option, did you not; a 10-day option?-Yes, sir.

Q. Who drew it?—A. It was only a verbal option; that was all; no paper.

Q. It was not written?-A. No, sir.

Q. Was it given in the presence of the judge?-A. Why, yes; it was given in the presence of the judge, but it was only a verbal option. I do not remember any written option to him.

Q. Now, returning to the other proposition, let me ask you this question, Mr. Williams: If this conversation between you and Judge Norris did not occur before the Judiciary Committee investigating this matter?

I read from page 513 of the volume already referred to:

I read from page 515 of the volume alrendy referred to:

Mr. Norris. Mr. Williams, why was it that you gave Judge Archbald a half interest in this contract?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why was it?

Mr. Norris. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did I not have a right to give it?

Mr. Norris. Yes; I am not questioning that, but I ask you why you did it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Because he was doing something for it—to help me to get it.

Mr. Norris. What was he doing beyond writing these letters?

Mr. Norris. Did you have any idea that on account of his position he might have some influence that might be important in negotiating the deals?

might have some influence that might be important in negotiating the deals?

Mr. Williams. Well, no; not exactly that, sir.

Mr. Norris. Teil the committee why it was in this assignment that you gave you referred to Judge Archbald as a silent party.

Mr. Williams. Tell them why?

Mr. Norris. Yes.

Mr. Williams. Only of the service he done to me in getting it.

Mr. Norris. Yes; but in this assignment you gave to Boland you referred to a silent party, which you say means Judge Archbald. Why was he not referred to by name? In other words, why was it kept a secret that Judge Archbald was the party? What purpose did you have in view in withholding his name?

Mr. Williams. I do not know. I thought maybe that it was not lawful.

Did you swear that before the Judiciary Committee?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it still so?—A. Yes.
Q. Did you say "yes" or "no"?—A. "Yes."
Q. Now, Mr. Williams, when you went back to the judge after the first time you applied to Mr. May for this option and he (May) refused or declined to let you have it did not the judge say "I will go to New York and see Brownell, and I may be able to do him some hurt for refusing such a small favor"? I will ask if you did not swear that before the Judiciary Committee?—A. I forget whether I did or not. I do not remember that I said that, but I said that he was going to New York; yes, sir.

Q. But did he not say that he had some cases, the lighterage cases, on his desk at that time?-A. No, sir. It was I who said that.

Q. Did you not swear that the judge pointed to some lighterage cases on his desk and you did not know what a lighterage case was?—A. Yes; I asked him what lighterage meant.

Q. Did you not swear before the committee that the judge said "I will go to New York and see Brownell, and I may be able to do him some hurt for refusing such a small favor"? Did you not swear that before the Judiciary Committee? No, sir; I do not remember saying that. I do not know whether I did or not say that.

Q. I will ask you if you did not swear it before the committee?-A. I do not remember.

Q. Is it not a fact that you did say that the judge said "I will go to New York and see Brownell and I may be able to do him some injury," and when you came to explain who "him" meant you said the judge did not mean Brownell, but meant May? Is that not what you swore before the committee?-A. I do not remember.

Q. I ask you now if you do not remember the judge did say that and you explained that he did not mean to hurt Brownell but to hurt May? Is not that true; did you not swear that before the committee?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think that the witness ought to understand whether he is being asked whether it is true or whether he swore to that before the committee. Both questions are being put to him.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I am asking, first, whether he swore to that before the committee. You understand that?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. You say I understand it?

Mr. Manager WEBB. I referred to Mr. Williams.

The WITNESS. I guess I did.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) If you swore to it, it is true, is it not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because that was nearer to the time of the transaction than the present day. I ask you if, when the judge came back from New York, he told you that he had seen Brownell, and for you to go to Mr. May and get that option; that Mr. May thought a great deal of you and liked you very much?-A. No; not in that way

Q. Tell how it occurred, then.—A. The judge did not tell me that. He said, "I met Capt. May, and he told me to tell you to come up and get it." That is what he told me.

Q. May told the judge to tell you to come up?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the judge did tell you?—A. Yes.
Q. And he told you that Mr. May liked you very much?—A. Yes; he did.

Q. And in response to the judge's suggestion to go and get it you did go to May and get it?—A. I got it; yes.
Q. That was after the judge had returned from New York and told you he had seen Brownell; that is correct, is it not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then Mr. May had changed his attitude about the proposition between the first time you saw him and the last time, because he finally did agree to give you the option. Is not that right?-A. He gave me the option.

Q. When you went to see him about it first, would he talk to you about the matter?-A. Oh, yes; he talked to me.

Q. Did he not decline to give you any satisfaction?-A. He declined to give it to me.

Q. He declined to give you any satisfaction and talked to you pretty gruff, did he not?-A. Yes, sir. I told him I had a lease for all the culm that was mined from Forest City to Moosic in one lease, and he remembered it all right.

Q. Do you know whether Mr. May went to New York sometime in August after you saw him?-A. No, sir; I do not know anything about Mr. May's movements. Q. Do you know Jim Dainty?

Mr. Manager WEBB. This is article 6 we are now entering upon, Mr. President.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) State whether you ever took Jim Dainty to the judge for the purpose of getting the judge to assist Dainty in the sale of the Everhardt interests in a tract of land owned by the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.; and if so, what part the judge played in that negotiation. Tell us so, what part the judge played in that negotiation. about that.—A. I do not know much about that. I heard him telephoning to the manager of the Lehigh Valley——

Q. Before we get to that, please—A. (Interrupting.) And that is all I heard.

Q. How did you come to take Jim Dainty to the judge? Did you take Dainty to the judge?—A. I do not know whether Jim asked me to introduce him to the judge.

Q. Well, anyway, did you go with Dainty to the judge?-A.

I did; yes.

Q. What was said between you and Dainty and the judge?—A. I introduced Dainty to the judge and he introduced the subject to him, and I went out.

Q. What was the subject?-A. The sale of one interest in The other interest had been sold to the Lehigh lease. Valley.

Q. I understand the Lehigh Valley owned about four-fifths of a tract of land. Is that right?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Everhart heirs owned the remaining one-fifth.

Is that right?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that the railroad company wanted to buy this remaining one-fifth, but did not want to pay the price that the Everhart heirs had asked. Is that right?-A. They had refused until then.

Q. What did Dainty ask the judge to do when he went in?-A. He asked him to communicate with the manager.

Q. Who was the manager?-A. Mr. Warriner, or some name like that.

Q. Did he communicate then and there with him on the phone?-A. Yes, sir; and that is the last I know. I walked out and went downstairs. I do not know anything more about that.

Q. But what did you hear the judge say to Warriner?—A. Oh, just called him, and I did not hear what he talked about. Q. Did you not swear before the committee that you heard him ask him if he would not pay this price?-A. I do not remember. Did I say that? I do not remember what I said about

Q. Why did you go out immediately that you took Dainty in to see the judge?—A. Because I had nothing to do with that.
Q. You introduced Dainty to the judge?—A. I introduced him; yes.

Q. What for? Why?—A. Jim told me what for.
Q. Why did you want Jim to know the judge in reference to the sale of this land to the railroad company?—A. Because the judge was acquainted with the Everharts, and he did that as a friendly act to-

Q. I will ask you again what the judge said to Mr. Warriner when he saw him?-A. I do not know what he said.

Q. Do you know when this was-what time last year or this year?-A. I do not remember what time.

Q. Was it a year ago? Was it in 1911?—A. Yes, sir; I think it was in 1911. I think it was before this year. I think it was over a year ago.

Q. Did Dainty tell the judge when you took him in that he had influence with the Everhart heirs, and if the judge would assist in selling this land to the railroad company he expected to get a lease of 324 acres of isolated coal land, in which he would give the judge an interest?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Is it competent to ask the witness what took place between Dainty and the judge?

Mr. Manager WEBB. I did ask him if this occurred in the presence of the judge [to the witness], and I ask you again.

A. I do not remember whether Jim said that or not.
Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Was anything like that said?—
A. Yes; there was something, but I do not remember how much land or how much coal was on the land. I do not think that Jim knew himself how much coal there was.

Q. Aside from the amount of coal and the number of acres, was that the conversation, that if the Everhart heirs sold to the railroad company the railroad company would lease to Dainty 324 or some number of acres of coal land isolated, and the judge would share in the profit of it?—A. I do not know. Q. Was there something like that conversation before the judge?-A. I can not tell you about that, because I told you I went out right away.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I understood you to say a moment ago that you introduced Dainty to the judge.—A. I did introduce him.

Q. And told him the business he had with him?-A. I told him he knew the Everhart heirs; that he was acquainted with the Everharts.

Q. Dainty did?—A. I told the judge. Q. That Dainty knew the Everharts?—A. That he was acquainted with the Everhart heirs; that he was friendly with

Q. Then did you hear Dainty ask the judge to help him sell the Everhart interest to the railroad company?-A. I just heard that and that is all. I went out.

Q. You heard that much?-A. Yes, sir.

You saw the judge immediately take up the telephone and call Warriner, did you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said a while ago you saw him take up the telephone and call Warriner, the general manager?—A. I did.

Q. How far does Warriner have his office from the judge?-A. At Wilkes-Barre.

Q. Eighty miles?—A. Twenty miles.

Q. Twenty miles away? You introduced Dainty in the judge's office, and this transaction took place there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you tell Dainty that you could tell him a man who would help him make that sale?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to that, Mr. President. Mr. Manager WEBB. If there is going to be an objection I will withdraw it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I certainly do object to trying to influence against Judge Archbald by producing what people outside of his presence may have said, which was not communicated to him.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Was there anything said in this conversation between Judge Archbald and Dainty and you about the Everhart heirs wanting $20,000 more for the land than the railroad company wanted to pay?—A. I do not remember about the amount. I do not remember.

Q. I will ask you if you did not say to Dainty, in the presence of the judge, that the judge was the only man you knew in Scranton who could effectuate or effect that sale?-A. I guess I did.

Q. I will ask you if you did swear that from the conversation you gathered in the presence of the judge the judge was to act as negotiator with the Everharts and the Lehigh Railroad Co. for the sale of this tract of land to them?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said that?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you if you know Thomas Darling?-A. I met him once; that is all.

Q. Is he an attorney for the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.?-A. He is.

Q. Have you ever seen him practice law before Judge Archbald's court ?-A. No; I never have.

Q. Mr. Williams, I ask you if you did not swear before the committee that you had seen him often in cases before the judge's court?—A. I never seen him only as I went to see him with that letter to his office in Wilkes-Barre.

Q. You know he is a lawyer representing the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.?-A. I know he is a lawyer. That is all I know about him.

Q. How do you know that he represents the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co.?-A. I did not know it. I did not think he was a lawyer of the Lehigh Valley.

Q. Did you ever have any dealing with him besides this letter which you carried from Judge Archbald?-A. No; I never had any dealing with him. I was a perfect stranger to Darling.

Q. Look at this letter [exhibiting], please, and see if that is the one that you carried to Mr. Darling.—A. I do not know, because I did not open the letter.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Under what article of impeachment is that offered in evidence, may I ask?

Mr. Manager WEBB. I think it is covered in article 13. Mr. WORTHINGTON. If it is offered only under the thir-

Mr. Worthingfox. If it is offered only under the thirteenth article, we object to it.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Do you know Judge Archbald's handwriting? I believe you said you did. Is that it [presenting letter]?—A. (Examining letter.) Yes, sir.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I should like the Secretary to read this letter, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is offered in evidence? Mr. Manager WEBB. It is offered in evidence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

(United States Commerce Court, Washington.) SCHANTON, August 3.

My Dear Darling: This will introduce Mr. Edward Williams, of this city, who wishes to talk with you about the purchase of a culm dump which you control. Mr. Williams is a coal man of experience and is in touch with parties who are able to handle the dump if you are inclined to dispose of it.

Yours, very truly,

R. W. Abchbald.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Let the Secretary read the heading.

The Secretary. I did read the heading. Mr. Manager WEBB. Read it again.

The Secretary read as follows:

United States Commerce Court, Washington. Scranton, August 3

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not care to insist on the objection until it is offered under the thirteenth article. What we have to say about that may be reserved.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I am not confined to any particular article in this particular evidence, of course. We think the letter is entirely competent. [To the witness:] Mr. Williams, the judge says here that "Mr. Williams is a coal man of experience and is in touch with parties who are able to handle the dump." Do you know whom you were in touch with then who was able to handle this dump if you could buy it? Did he refer to himself?—A. No.

Q. To whom did he refer, then?-A. I do not know. That was my business, sir.

Q. Exactly .- A. Exactly; yes, sir.

Q. He says you are in touch with coal men who would be able to handle the dump. To whom does he refer as the persons you were in touch with to handle the dump?—A. I do not know. I know all the coal men myself-all the coal operators. am well acquainted with them.

Q. Before you got this letter from the judge did you tell him that you were going to give him an interest in it?—A. No; I did not say anything to him about that. I never talked about that. Q. How is that?-A. No.

Q. How did you come to get this letter from Judge Archbald?—A. I went to see him about Darling. I did not know that Darling was a Lehigh Valley lawyer.

Q. We will leave that out. Why did you go to the judge to get this letter to Darling?—A. Well, because he was friendly; that is, I knew he was friendly with Darling.

Q. You knew he was friendly with him. Is that all you have to say?-A. Yes.

O. Did you tell him when he wrote the letter that you intended to give him half of it if you got the dump?-A. I do not remember telling him.

Q. I ask you if, on page 547 of the hearings before the Judiciary Committee, you did not swear this in response to Mr.

Nonnis's questions:

Mr. Norris. Did you intend to give him a half interest in it if you get it from Durling?

Mr. Williams, I intended to give him an interest; yes, sir.

Mr. Norris. You did?

Mr. Williams. Yes, sir.

Mr. Norris. Did you ever tell him that?

Mr. Williams. Yes, sir; I did.

Mr. Norris. When did you tell him that?

Mr. Williams. Before I went I told him that.

Mr. Norris. You told him before you got the letter, did you? Is that right? that right? Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Did you swear that before the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Webb, I think you are making a mistake there. That relates to the Katydid dump and not the Darling transaction.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I beg your pardon, Mr. Worthington; that is a difference in construction. The leading question was, Did you intend to give him a half interest in it if you got it from Darling? and the subsequent question-

The WITNESS. Never anything come out of that.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) I understand; but did you tell the judge that if you got the dump you would give him a half interest?—A. Yes, sir. Q. That is so?—A. Yes; I intended-

Q. You told him that you intended to do it?-A. Yes, sir. Mr. Manager WEBB. Under article 9, Mr. President, I wish to examine the witness now. [To the witness.] Mr. Williams, how long have you known Judge Archbald?

A. For over 30 years.

Q. Are you a man of any financial means?-A. I was some time ago; not now.

Q. Were you last year? Were you a year ago?-A. No; I was not a year ago.

Q. Were you four years ago?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you have four years ago in the way of property?—A. Four, five, or six thousand dollars.
Q. Six thousand dollars?—A. About $6,000.

Q. What has been your business since you came to this country ?-A. Coal.

Q. A miner and operator?-A. A miner. I know every part of mining, making leases.

Q. You have been all through it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Making leases and options?—A. I have made leases. have made leases for the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western.

I made leases for different people.

Q. Did you ever have a conversation with the judge in which you induced him to join you in a Venezuelan venture, to buy an option on a million acres of land in Venezuela, and in that conversation or transaction the judge gave you a $500 note, or gave a $500 note to John Henry Jones, indorsed by him and yourself?—A. He did not give it to me.

Q. Now state all about it.—A. We got papers from Venezuela. We had just got the option from there and we had been negotiating for quite awhile. I seen every letter that came from Deman Santo, the consul there from Spain. He told us to send a man down there, that there was some valuable property there, and we could get an option on it, iron ore, copper, and very valuable timberland. So I gave the first money to go down there and got the option on the million acres right on the Orinoco River-what is the line through the country going up to Brazil.

Q. Now come down to the transaction between you and the judge and John Henry Jones, please.—A. After we got the option I told the judge about it, and he said, "I would like to see those papers. Will you let me see them?" I said, "Yes." John brought them over the next day.

Q. John who?-A. John Henry Jones.

Q. All right. Proceed .- A. And he showed them to the judge, and the judge said they were first-class papers, all right.

Q. Well, proceed, please.—A. He would like to invest some money in them. He said he would give a note to John. This was to go to London to pay expenses to negotiate to sell the land.

Q. Did he agree to take an interest in the option?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What interest was he to have—one-third and you one-third? Did you say yes or no?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. What interest did Jones have?—A. The same.
Q. One-third?—A. For his services. He put nothing in it.

Q. What did the judge pay for his one-third interest; and did he give a note for it or not?-A. A note.

Q. Do you know whom the note was payable to?-A. John Henry Jones.

Q. How much was the note?-A. $500. The Providence Bank cashed it.

Q. Wait a minute. You are going too fast. Who indorsed that note?—A. The judge indorsed it. I indorsed it. Q. Did the judge indorse it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who drew it?—A. The judge, I think.
Q. That is, did he write it himself?—A. I think he did.

Q. Do you know when that was?-A. I could not say exactly the date.

Q. Was it four years ago?—A. About that. Q. At that time did you know that the Marian Coal Co. was party defendant in a suit before Judge Archbald, in which Peale was plaintiff?-A. I do not think they were fighting yet. I do not think they were.

Q. Do you not know?-A. I do not think there was a case on at all.

Q. Do you not know that Mr. Peale had sued the Marian Coal Co.?-A. I know all about Peale, but I do not think that that case had been started at that time.

Q. Leave that out. Do you know the Bolands own the principal stock of the Marian Coal Co., William P. Boland and Christopher G. Boland?—A. I do, very well. I have good reason to know it.

Q. When that note was drawn did you take it to C. G. Boland to have it discounted?-A. I did; yes ,sir.

Q. Did you tell the Judge that you were going to take it to Boland?—A. I think I did; but he said "Take it where you like; I do not care where you take it." He did not induce me to go there.

Q. I understand that. When the note was drawn the next question was to get it discounted, was it not?-A. Yes.

Q. And you told the judge that you were going to carry it to

C. G. Boland for discount, and he told you to take it where you pleased?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You took it to C. G. Boland and he declined to discount

-A. He kept it for two days, sir.

Q. And declined to discount it?-A. And he never said anything about litigation, because there was no litigation-

Q. I am not asking you about that, Mr. Williams. show that later. He did not discount it?-A. No, sir: he did

Q. And what did you do with the note?-A. I went to the Merchants & Mechanics' Bank with it.

Q. Did you get it discounted there?-A. I did not. it back to John Henry Jones, and he went up to the Providence

Bank and got Von Storch, the president of the bank, to cash it. Mr. Manager WEBB. I will state, Mr. President, that the note in question is a commercial paper, and we will be able to produce it a little later and introduce it in connection with this testimony. It is now in the bank.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Has that note ever been paid the note drawn then?-A. No; it is partly paid; I do not know how much of it is paid.

Q. What part of it has been paid?—A. It is partly paid. Q. How much-what part?-A. I do not know; it is none of my business to know.

Q. Do you know how much of that note has been paid during the last four years since it was made?-A. No, sir; I do not know. Only the first time I indersed it, and I do not know anything about it.

Q. You indersed it the first time. Have you not indersed it since?-A. No, sir.

Q. Has it been renewed every four months since originally made?-A. Yes, sir; and they paid so much; but whether it is paid in full or not I can not say.

Q. You do not mean to say you did not indorse it, Mr. Williams? Did you not indorse it every time?—A. No, sir; not after that.

Q. Did you not indorse it on the 6th of last May in the judge's office, with Jones present?-A. I indorsed it once, I think, and that is all. He never asked me to indorse it.

Q. He did not ask you to indorse it? Did you take it to any other private citizen except Boland ?-A. What?

Q. Did you take that note for discount to any other private party except Boland?-A. No, sir; not any person. I never asked anybody.

Q. After Boland had declined to discount it did you subsequently tell him that he had made a mistake in not discounting the judge's note?-A. No; I did not tell him that. He says that I said that; that he would save all expense; but I never said such a thing to him, sir, never.

Q. Did you ever sign a statement to that effect?—A. No, sir; I never signed a statement to that effect. I would be crazy-I am mad enough now-but would be crazier than a bug, sir, if I said such a thing as that, because this man never told me such a thing, and how could I say it?

Q. Let me refresh your memory. Do you not know that a man by the name of John W. Peale had sued the Marian Coal Co. in Judge Archbald's court; that he had secured an injunction and taken an account, and that that suit was pending in the judge's court when this note was made?-A. I do not know such a thing. I did not know that case was on.

Q. You were in the judge's office very frequently, were you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you not know something about the sults pending in the district court there?—A. I knew about it when it came on to trial; but I did not think it was on then.

Q. You do not think it was on then?—A. In 1909, was it not-

Q. Well, 1909?-A. This note was made, was it not, and in 1910 or 1911 that suit came on.

Q. The suit was determined then, but I am asking you if the suit was not pending?-A. No; it was determined in 1912.

Q. When were you subpænaed to come down to the hearing before the Judiciary Committee? Was it Sunday, May 4?-A. Yes; it was on Sunday.

Q. Where were you on Monday next following? Where did you go?-A. I do not know.

Q. I ask you if you did not go to the judge's office immediately after you were subpænaed to come here in the investigation before the Judiciary Committee of the House?-A. I do not remember.

Q. What, Mr. Williams?-A. I do not remember.

- Q. Perhaps I can refresh your memory. I ask if you did not go to the judge's office to tell him you wanted to get the money to come down here; that John Henry Jones was there; that you renewed this very $500 note we have been talking about; that Jones took it back and the bank renewed it; and that you told the judge you would meet him at the depot, and he did meet you there and bought your ticket?-A. Yes; I know that.
- Q. Did you go to the judge's office on Monday morning after you were subpænaed on Sunday?-A. I forget; I do not re-

Q. Speak a little louder, please, sir.—A. I do not remember whether I did or not; I do not remember about that.

- Q. I ask you, then, if you did not swear before the Judiciary Committee of the House that you did go to Judge Archbald on the Monday following your subpæna on Sunday, and ask him for the money to come to Washington, and he told you he would meet you at the depot and give you a ticket, and he did do it? A. Well, I do not remember that; but I did get the ticket anyhow.
- Q. Did you go to Judge Archbald's office on Monday morning after you were subpænaed on Sunday? You can answer that question .- A. Well, all I remember -- I remember that I got the I do not remember that I went there on Monday

Q. Do you remember seeing John Henry Jones in the judge's office?-A. No; I do not.

Q. Where did you get the ticket and from whom?-A. In the depot.

Q. From whom?—A. From the judge.

Q. How did you know that the judge was going to be at the depot?-A. I went there at the same time.

Q. How did you know that the judge was going to be at the depot if you had not seen him before that time?-A. I seen him going there.

Q. Had you not seen him in his office in the morning?—A. No; I did not go up with him from the office. I met him on the street.

Q. You met him on the street. What did you tell him?-A.

I told him that I had no money to go down.

Q. Did you tell him that you were subpænaed to come down here and testify against him?-A. To testify in this thing, anyhow.

Q. And at the depot he gave you the money, or rather the ticket, to come down here with?—A. He gave me the ticket; no money.

Q. You did not have money enough to come on ?-A. No, sir;

I did not.

- Q. Where were all these transactions between you and Dainty and you and the judge about the Katydid dump and the Darling transaction had-in the judge's office in Scranton?-A.
- Q. Where were the others had?-A. It was those three, any-

Q. Those three. Is the judge's office in the Federal building in Scranton?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How often have you been in the judge's office during the last two years do you suppose?-A. Oh, very often; about three or four times a week maybe.

Q. Did you come down to Washington in February and testify in this Katydid matter?—A. What?

Q. Did you come to Washington on or about February 21, 1912, and testify before another tribunal, other than the Judiclary Committee, about this matter?—A. Yes. Q. That was some time in February?—A. Yes.

Q. When you went back home did you tell the judge that you had testified down here?—A. What?

Q. When you went back to Scranton did you tell the judge that you had come down here and made this statement?-A. I did; yes. Q. You say you did?—A. Yes.

Q. How long was it after you returned to Scranton that you told him that you had been down here?-A. I do not remember how long it was-whether it was the next day or whether it was in a week; I could not say.

Q. At any rate, immediately after you testified before the Attorney General?—A. I do not know.

Q. You did go back to Scranton and tell the judge about it?—
A. I did tell him; yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, the Senate has now been in session since 12 o'clock. I doubt from the course of the examination whether this witness can conclude his testimony this evening; and, if it is entirely agreeable to the managers on the part of the House, I should like to make a motion that the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment do now adjourn.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I will say, Mr. President, that that is entirely agreeable to the managers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming moves that the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment adjourned.

The managers on the part of the House and the respondent and his counsel withdrew from the Chamber.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 5 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, December 5, 1912, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Wednesday, December 4, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the life and light of men, the inspiration of every great thought, noble deed, and honest endeavor in the fields of activity which lead on to the higher and better forms of life, inspire us, quicken our activities, that we may be worthy sons of the living God, and leave behind us a record worthy of emulation, and merit at last Thine approbation, for Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR HEYBURN.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and move its adoption.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 730.

Resolved, That the House of Representatives has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. Weldon Brinton Heyburn, late a Senator from the State of Idaho.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased

Senator.

The question was taken, and the resolution was unanimously agreed to.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday, and on the last Calendar Wednesday when the House adjourned the situation was this: What is known as the Crago pension bill for widows and children of Spanish veterans, H. R. 17470, had been reported favorably from the committee, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY] had made a motion to recommit it with instructions; and on the motion to recommit on a viva voce vote the motion to recommit was lost. Thereupon the gentleman from Georgia made the point of no quorum. There was a call of the House, and, no quorum appearing, the House adjourned and left it in that condition. The first thing is to take a vote on the motion to recommit de novo. The Clerk will read the motion to recommit with instructions.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Moved to recommit H. R. 17470, a bill to pension widow and minor children of any officer or enlisted man who served in the War with Spain or Philippine insurrection, to the Committee on Pensions, with instructions to said committee to report the same back with the following amendments:

Amend, on page 2, by adding in line 19 after the colon the following: "Provided further, That no widow or child as aforesaid shall be construed to have a pensionable status under this act unless it is affirmatively shown that the deceased husband or father—being an officer or enlisted man—was during the said War with Spain or the Philippine insurrection actually engaged in or present and exposed to danger in one or more battles or skirmishes."

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask if the motion to recommit was not lost and so declared by the Chair?

The SPEAKER. It was lost on the viva voce vote.

And that a roll call was demanded on the Mr. CULLOP. passage of the bill?

The SPEAKER. You can not recommit if anybody raises the point of no quorum present; that ends the whole business.

Mr. CULLOP. Had not that stage of the proceedings been passed and the point of no quorum made on the passage of the

The SPEAKER. Oh, no; the motion to recommit was made properly at the right time.

Mr. CULLOP. The inquiry I was making was if that had not been voted down and the Chair had so declared, and the point of no quorum was not made on that proposition?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is mistaken about the facts. The question is on the motion to recommit with instructions.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 3, noes 101.
Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 25, nays 252, answered "present" 3, not voting 110, as follows: YEAS-25.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. Crasco, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MEMBERS' ELEVATOR, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make to the House a statement in which all the Members are interested. been much complaint about persons who are not Members of Congress coming up in the elevator in the southeast corner. Members complain that they can not get over here from the House Office Building in time to vote, and it is a very serious discommoding and might interrupt the public business. summer the Chair ordered the elevator men not to allow anybody except Members to come up in that elevator. They did not pay much attention to it, so the Chair issued an order to them this morning not to let anybody travel up and down in that elevator except Members of the House and the newspaper men, because the newspaper men have to come up that way or else go clear around the Hall of the House to the southwest corner.

That order can only be enforced by the Members of the House assisting the Speaker in enforcing it. It will not be properly enforced if they undertake to bully the elevator men to let other people in with them, for of course the elevator men are afraid of being discharged on complaint. The only way to enforce that order for the benefit of Members is for the Members to help the Speaker enforce it. For himself the Speaker will say that he Speaker enforce it. For himself the Speaker will say that he will direct his family, when they come up, to come up in one of these other elevators [applause], and the Chair requests Members to do the same.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee. The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees.

ALLEGATION AND PROOF OF LOYALTY IN CERTAIN CASES.

Mr. WATKINS (when the Committee on the Revision of the Laws was reached). I am instructed, Mr. Speaker, by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws to ask consideration of the bill H. R. 16314, to amend section 162 of the act to codify and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 16314) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911.

1911.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, be amended and reenacted so as to read as follows:

"Sec. 162. The Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the claims of those whose property was taken subsequent to June 1, 1865, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863, entitled 'An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States,' and acts amendatory thereof where the property so taken was sold and the net proceeds thereof were placed in the Treasury of the United States; and the Secretary of the Uradgment of said court, and full jurisdiction is given to said court to adjudge said claims, any statutes of limitations to the courterry not-withstanding: Provided, That no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of such claims."

With a committee amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this bill should be on the Union Calendar instead of on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state why he thinks that.

Mr. MANN. The bill is an amendment to the judiciary title in reference to the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, and among other things it provides that "the Secretary of the Treasury shall return said net proceeds to the owners thereof on the judgment of said court," which is an indirect appropriation of money out of the Treasury. Under the rules of the House the bill must be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill to-day if it be considered in that way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the point of the gentleman is well taken, and the bill will be transferred to the Union Calendar.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. I would prefer to have the gentleman make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not have to make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. That is true.

The SPEAKER. The House will resolve itself automatically into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill, and Mr. Rucker of Colorado will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16314, with Mr. RUCKER of Colorado in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 16314. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WAT-KINS] is recognized.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the committee amendment and the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman from Louisiana is not in order, because general debate is allowable.

Mr. MANN. I understood the bill was read for amendment, and I supposed the gentleman from Louisiana would explain the purport of the bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, what the request was. I could not hear it stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The request was for the passage of the

Mr. SABATH. I would like to know something about the bill,

Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I did not anticipate that there would be any objection at all to the passage of the bill. It is simply an amendment to the revision code adopted on the 3d of March, 1911, and it was really an oversight in not having incorporated in section 162 the provision which is intended to be incorporated by the passage of this bill. It is simply intended to amend that section.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. What section is it?

Mr. WATKINS. I will read the section. It is in the same words as the bill, except that it does not dispense with the necessity of alleging and proving loyalty in those cases which arose after the cessation of hostilities, after the Civil War was

But, Mr. Chairman, if there is to be debate upon this, we ought to have some agreement as to the length of time which is to be consumed and who is to control the time. The ranking minority member of this committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moon], would naturally control the time on that side, and I had expected him to do so. I expect to control the time on this side. As he does not seem to be in the Hall at this moment, I suppose the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will control the time on that side.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman that he explain fully the purport of the bill. If I understand it, the effect of it will be to take out of the Treasury of the United States $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 without any further appropriation by Congress. It is important enough to be considered fully.

Mr. WATKINS. If the gentleman will pardon the inter-ruption, I simply want now to arrange as to the time to be consumed. I expect to explain the bill.

Mr. MANN. I think no more time will be occupied than is necessary for the consideration of the bill. I do not see how it is practicable to fix the time in advance.

Mr. WATKINS. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will proceed in the regular order. I should like to know, though, if anyone on that side is to control the time, so that I can know what disposition to make of the time on this side. Mr. SHERLEY. I suggest to the gentleman that the ordinary rules of the House, which give to any gentleman taking the floor one hour for the discussion of the bill, be observed until the matter develops sufficiently to show how much discussion the bill will naturally evoke.

Mr. WATKINS. If we can not agree on the time, then that course will be taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr.

WATKINS] is recognized.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, on March 3, 1911, the Committee on the Revision of the Laws secured the final passage of the bill for the codification of the laws relating to the judi-Section 162 of that codification, under the title of the judiciary, reads in this way:

Judiciary, reads in this way:

SEC. 162. The Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the claims of those whose property was taken subsequent to June 1, 1865, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863, entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States," and acts amendatory thereof where the property so taken was sold and the net proceeds thereof were placed in the Treasury of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall return said net proceeds to the owners thereof, on the judgment of said court, and full jurisdiction is given to said court to adjudge said claims, any statutes of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. Chairman, when this section was incorporated in this revision it was not anticipated that any objection, technical or otherwise, would be raised to the payment of the proceeds of the property arising out of the act of Congress of 1863. It was not anticipated that the question of loyalty would be raised. For that reason that proposition was not submitted in the amendment to the section offered at that time and which finally became section 162.

The situation was just this: There was an old statute providing that in all cases arising before the Court of Claims allegation and proof of loyalty was necessary; but in the case of the United States against Klein the Supreme Court of the United States decided that under this captured and abandoned property act, passed in 1863 and amended later, no allegation or proof of loyalty was necessary, because the Supreme Court, in inter-preting the act of 1863, has said that the fund so created is simply and purely a trust fund, that the property taken was taken for the benefit of those to whom it belonged, that it is not contraband of war, that it was taken solely for the purpose of converting the property and placing the proceeds in the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of the owner, and that being a trust fund it did not come under the requirements of the allegation and proof of loyalty as in the cases where the property taken was contraband of war. This property was not confiscated.

You will notice from the reading of the last section of this act that the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] is untenable, because it requires that all the proceeds of that property shall be paid over to the owners of the property or their heirs, administrators, executors, or assigns. Therefore the property is to be paid over to the owners of it. But if there is not enough money to pay all, it is to be paid out ratably, or pro rata, to the different claimants.

The gentleman from Illinois has stated that some $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 of this fund will be paid. I have here a complete list of all these funds in the Treasury. The total amount was originally more than $26,000,000. There were paid out of it $16,000,000. The amount was further cut down by charges against the fund and under amendments to the original act until the fund now amounts to somewhere in the neighborhood of or a little less than $5,000,000 arising from the sale of the property after June 1, 1865. This $5,000,000 will never pay the claims already presented to the Treasury Department, and it is for the purpose of getting an equitable rate of distribution that we ask for this amendment. If the amendment is not incorporated in the code, the adventurers, camp followers, and speculators who came from various sections of the country after the Civil War into the South and bought up and took possession, either legally or without law, of this property will be the only ones who will benefit by the revision which was intended to benefit the heirs of the owners, the widows, and the orphans.

Mr. Chairman, the object of the House of Representatives in passing this act was to do simple justice to these parties who had taken from them property by the great Government of the United States; taken as a trust and put in charge of the agents of the Government as a trust fund, and the proceeds placed in the Treasury for the benefit of these persons. The proceeds of that property have never been allowed to be touched by any officer for any purpose. I do not think any appropria-tion is necessary for the purpose of carrying the law into execution. If it had been necessary, this amendment will not make it so. We do not here ask for any appropriation; we simply ask that the trust fund that is there now, and has been for 47 years, be paid out equitably and not turned over entirely to the horde of speculators and those who defrauded the people of their rights after the war; we ask that it be distributed to the rightful claimants and their heirs and representatives.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I had not thought that it would be necessary at all to discuss this question from a legal standpoint, but I have authorities here ready to make a legal argument if it becomes necessary. The reason I did not anticipate that there would be any controversy or objection to it was

Mr. TOWNSEND. Before the gentleman enters upon his legal argument I would like to ask for information. What is the total sum of this trust fund that he speaks of?

Mr. WATKINS. Approximately $5,000,000 in the Treasury which under the law would have to be paid out, and it is only a question of who it would have to be paid to.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Can the gentleman state the number of claimants?

Mr. WATKINS. I have the whole volume of them here; there are several thousand of them. I have not added them up. There are a great many from all over the country. There is hardly a section of the country but has a representative in these claims.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WATKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. How much was the fund originally?

Mr. WATKINS. About $26,000,000.
Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman be kind enough to tell us under what circumstances it arose?

Mr. WATKINS. In 1863 the Congress of the United States passed a law providing that all abandoned property in the insurrectory States-the States in the South in which the war was being waged-which had been captured should be taken in charge by the Federal authorities; that is, property not contraband of war, not subject to confiscation. It provided that the property which could not be confiscated as contraband of war should be taken in charge by the United States and put in a trust fund. People were moving from the South all over the southern section of the country and getting out of the way, leaving and abandoning property, particularly cotton. That act was intended to authorize the Federal authorities to take charge of it in a fiduciary capacity, selling the cotton or property and charging the cost of sale and transportation to the fund, and then to deposit the balance of the fund in the United States Treasury to remain there until it was claimed.

The original act limited the right to claim in two years, but that was afterwards extended, and now the expiration of that time has elapsed. There were a great number of people in that section of the country, particularly minors, who knew nothing of the passage of the law and did not avail themselves of an opportunity to take advantage of it. All of this fund has been distributed, except this remnant of about $5,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. The act of 1863 was one of the confiscation

Mr. WATKINS. It was not a confiscation act; it was a provision for the Government to take charge of the property, and in the case of the United States against Kline the court says that it was not a confiscation, but simply property taken in charge by the United States Government for the benefit of the owners of the property.

Mr. BUTLER. The fund that now remains in the Treasury arose from the sale of property that was seized after hostilities

Mr. WATKINS. Entirely after the war was over. Mr. BUTLER. And none of it is from the sale of property that was seized before hostilities ceased?

Mr. WATKINS. Not at all; and the very section, section 162, of the revision of the laws explains it definitely and explicitly. There can not be any doubt about it at all. It fixes the date absolutely, as the 1st of June, 1865—after the war was over.

Mr. Chairman, the reason that I made the statement that I could not anticipate any objection was because not only on account of the justice of this claim—

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, of course this property was seized in the South?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. And the object of the gentleman's bill, as I understand it, is to remove the burden of proving loyalty?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. This property was seized after the war was over?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes. That is the whole thing in a nutshell. That is the reason, when this amendment came before the Committee on Revision of the Laws, that there was not a scintilla of objection to it. The ranking minority member on that committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moon], when the question was presented to him as to whether he would vote in favor of reporting the bill, said it would be not only bad faith but it would be wrong from every standpoint for any Member to vote against the amendment. When the Democratic Members had gone before the conference committee, when this revision was in conference, they agreed with the conferees that if they would allow this measure to remain in the codification, they, the Democratic Members, would not object to other features about which they had contended in the passage of the

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman please tell us as a bit of history why this property was seized after hostilities had ceased?

Mr. WATKINS. Because the law provided for it.

Mr. BUTLER. Hostilities were done?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not see the reason for it.

Mr. WATKINS. The law did not make any limit upon the time within which it should operate. The law went into effect as all other laws do and was general in its terms. No one knew when the law of 1863 was passed that the war would end in the spring of 1865. It made no limitation, except as to the time in which the owners should assert their claims. It simply ordered the Federal authorities to take possession of and to convert into money property that was abandoned by people in that section of the country, not placing any limit or stating any time. That continued. The gentleman will bear in mind that the people during the war for a number of years had been leaving that section of the country, and leaving behind them property, mainly cotton, though a great deal of land was left as well as other property.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Louisiana yield for a moment?

Mr. WATKINS. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] that he will recall that from 1865 to 1866 the Southern States had located in them the forces of the United States Army. At that time we of the South were not under our own Government, but under the Government of the United States, either military or provisional. It was before we had obtained the status of civil government, and the United States Army officers, in pursuance of the act of 1863, deemed it to be their duty to seize all the cotton.

Mr. BUTLER. I have not been able to understand why it was seized. I do not see the justice of it.

Ar. BARTLETT. There was no justice in seizing it, and because there was no justice in seizing it this House, Republicans and Democrats alike, under an amendment that I myself offered to the revision-of-the-laws bill, voted to remove the statute of limitations from the abandoned and captured property act, to permit these people whose property had been unjustly seized and sold to have opportunity to recover their money which had been unjustly taken from them.

Mr. BUTLER. Congress has already determined that the question of loyalty shall not be considered in the distribution of this money, has it not; in 1911?

Mr. BARTLETT. There was nothing said about loyalty.
Mr. LANGLEY. Not as to this fund.
Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Louisiana yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Certainly. Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, it has been my understanding-and I will ask the gentleman from Louisiana if it is not correct-that in many instances the cotton which was seized had become the property of the Confederate Government?

Mr. WATKINS. That is not involved in this question. Mr. GARRETT. I know that it is not involved in this question, but it has something to do with the proposition as an explanation of why much privately owned cotton was seized. I say that for the information of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler]. Much cotton, a great deal of cotton, had been acquired by the Confederate Government itself and in seizing the cotton that belonged to the Confederate Government very frequently they took cotton that belonged to private individuals as well. Of course the question as to whether it belonged to the Confederate Government or not does not belong to this amendment at all, but it is a matter of historical information.

Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman from Georgia made an explanation, but I can not see why the Government should seize cotton or any other commodity in the South after the war was over.

Mr. BARTLETT. There was no reason. It was an absolute injustice to those people which the Republican Congress undertook to correct after so many years.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I have in this desultory way, interrupted by these questions, undertaken to explain the purpose of the bill, and I have about covered the main features of the case. As I desire to reserve the balance of my time, if there should be any objection to the bill, which I really can not conceive, I will now give the floor to any gentleman who desires to discuss the question, reserving the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIS. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this bill ought not to be agreed to by the committee or by the House without the most careful consideration. If I understand this bill correctly as I have read it and as I have listened to the explanation by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS], it provides in substance, first, that the absolutely unbroken policy of the Government since the time of the Civil War should be abandoned. Second, that the decisions of the Supreme Court that have been made in every case of this kind shall practically be reversed by legislation. Third, that approximately $5,000,000 in the Treasury of the United States shall be paid out to some one. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, we ought not to embark upon legislation of that kind without a most careful investigation and a most complete understanding of the facts. Now, as I understand the facts, substantially every dollar of this $5,000,000, which it is alleged is a trust fund, represents the proceeds of the sale of cotton that was captured—not taken from individuals, but captured—from the Confederate Government.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman there? Mr. WILLIS. Certainly; I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARTLETT. I do not know where the gentleman gets his information or understanding, but it is very wide of the mark, because the evidence is, and I know it to be a fact, not only not captured but taken from the farms and warehouses where it was stored, and the records of the Treasury Department will show not only it was so taken but the names and marks of the owners from whom taken.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I am quite familiar with the record to which the gentleman refers, and I want to say if he desires to have the authority for the statement I have just made it is a circular, No. 4, issued by the Treasury Department January 9, 1900, that gives a very complete analysis of this whole transaction and all of these claims, and the conclusions arrived at by the Secretary of the Treasury are stated in these words, which I shall read from the circular:

It follows, therefore, that the balance of the fund in the Treasury received from the sale of cotton represents the proceeds received from the sale of cotton that belonged to the Confederacy.

At all events the gentleman from Georgia happens to find himself in conflict with the authorities of the Treasury De-partment. That is the deliberate opinion of the men who have investigated the records and gone over these cases, that these $5,000,000 are not a trust fund at all, but they simply represent the proceeds from the sale of cotton that belonged to the Confederacy. Now, where these individuals come in is in another proposition. There is a series of bills here that seem to be all working together. Attention was first called to this in the eloquent remarks of the gentleman from the Tombigbee. He has a proposition which in substance undertakes to provide that when cotton was sold to the Confederacy in good faith, paid for absolutely, but left in the hands of the original vendor, that such transaction is not a sale, that the cotton is not the property of the Confederacy, but, because the property has not been delivered, the property rights reside in the original vendor, and consequently these parties are coming in and claiming individual ownership, notwithstanding the fact that they voluntarily sold the cotton to the Confederacy at the market price and received their pay for it.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman from Ohio states accurately the proposition which I submitted to the House in a speech heretofore made.

The proposition involved there is this: That where the property was contracted for but never paid for at all, and left in the hands of the original vendor, that by reason of the fact it never had been paid for, he had the right when the vendee became insolvent to repossess that property and apply it to the payment of his debt, which is the old doctrine which has been well established and recognized not only by the English but American authorities, as to stoppage in transit. It never had been paid for, and, therefore, the original vendor had the right to take it and subject it to the payment of his debt.

Mr. WILLIS. I am glad to know I did not misunderstand my friend. I correctly understood him and am familiar with the contention in his bill, which I did not mean to discuss at this time. I referred to it only incidentally. However, when we come to that I wish to say that I shall disagree entirely with his proposition. The purchase by the Government of the Confederacy in the open market and the payment for that stock of cotton either in notes of the Confederate Government or in bonds of the Confederate Government, I contend, is a sale, and that is the law of this land now as set forth in Whitfield v. United States (92 U. S., 165), and it is the proposition of the gentleman to change the law. That is where I shall take issue with him when the time comes.

But reverting to this question as raised, as to whether this is a trust fund, Mr. Chairman, I deny entirely the proposition that these $5,000,000 constitute a trust fund. It is not a trust fund under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United That brings me around to what I said in the first place, that it is the purpose of this bill, which appears to be so innocent on its surface, to reverse a well-established policy of the Government of the United States and practically by legislation to undertake to reverse at least two or three well-considered opinions of the Supreme Court. It seems to me that such procedure ought not to be had except upon the most careful investigation.

Now, let us go into this trust fund proposition a little bit. The gentleman says that this is a trust fund that really belongs to these individuals. I have already shown you that, based upon the most careful examination, the Treasury Department holds in this circular which I have read, that these $5,000,000 represent the proceeds of the sale of cotton that belonged to the Confederacy, and that, therefore, individuals have no right, claim, or title to it, and that there is no trust fund at all. But suppose that the cotton did not belong to the Confederate Government. Let us see what the court says about this trust fund. Reference is made here by the gentleman from Louisiana to the Klein case. Let us see what the court says in a later case about these matters. I am quoting here from the Haycraft case, 22 Wallace, page 92. The court said:

The claim is that the trust in favor of the owner having then been created, the remedy for its enforcement in the Court of Claims as a contract was restored to the disloyal owner by the operation of the President's proclamation of December 25, 186S, granting unconditional pardon to all who participated in the rebellion.

According to the doctrine of Klein's case, as I understood my friend from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS], it was upon that case that he based his argument. But here is what the court said about the Klein case in a later decision:

According to the doctrine of Klein's case, if a suit was commenced within two years a pardoned enemy could recover as well as a loyal friend. But the commencement of the suit within the prescribed time was a condition precedent to the ultimate relief. The right of recovery was made to depend upon the employment of the remedy provided by

Then the court summed it up in this striking sentence: Pardon and amnesty have no effect except to such as sue in time.

These parties have not sued in time. They have been guilty of laches. They have sinned away their day of grace. They had the opportunity under the act which allowed them to sue within two years of the time the war closed. They had their remedy under the act of 1872. Now it is proposed not only to change the doctrine that has been absolutely the unbroken policy, but, mark you, sir, it is proposed to amend the law so as to take away from the Government of the United States the defense as to requiring proof of loyalty by claimants which its own attorneys are making now in the cases pending in court

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.
Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman speaks of changing the policy of the Government. Does the gentleman mean for us to infer from that he insists it was necessary heretofore to prove loyalty in these claims?

Mr. WILLIS. Not under the act of 1872.

Mr. GARRETT. Nor the first act, which was the act of 1865, was it not?

Mr. WILLIS. That has just been covered. Evidently the gentleman was not listening to what I read. It was not necessary, as the court said, as to those who sued in time, but as to those who did not sue in time it was necessary to prove loyalty.

Mr. GARRETT. They had no case if they did not sue in time.

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course, even if they had proven loyalty they could not have recovered if they did not sue in time.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that perfectly. The act of 1872 gave the parties their remedy. They did not need to prove loyalty under the act of 1872.

Mr. GARRETT. If they sued in time.

Mr. WILLIS. But under the new act, under section 162 of the judicial code, the officers of the Government contend that proof of loyalty is necessary. That is one of their defenses in cases actually pending, and if we enact this bill into law we are proposing to take away from the Government the defense that it now has.

Mr. GARRETT. I understand that, but I take issue with the gentleman on the proposition that this involves a change in the unbroken policy of the Government. All that this bill proposes to do is to suspend the action of a statute of limitations. It does not change any fundamental policy of the Government or differ in any respect from the decisions that have been had heretofore.

Mr. WILLIS. Not if that is all that is proposed.

Mr. GARRETT. It does that.

Mr. WILLIS. Then there would be no objection to striking out the proviso in lines 12, 13, and 14. This proviso reads as Provided, That no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of such claims.

But would that action meet the approval of the friends of the bill? If that is all that is in this bill, if it is simply to remove the bar of the statute of limitations, the friends of the bill ought to agree to the amendment to strike out what follows the colon in

Provided, That no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of such claims,

The point is right there. That is the crux of the bill-the removal of the charge of disloyalty; the defense that the Government is now making in the Court of Claims to protect this $5,000,000, which is not a trust fund, which is not the property of any individual, but which belongs to the United States.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman's position is that this cotton, as I understand, had been assigned by the original owners to the Confederacy

Mr. WILLIS. Had been sold and paid for.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And paid for either in the form of cash, notes, or bonds; that the title had passed and that was an executed contract?

Mr. WILLIS. Absolutely. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Assuming that that is true, this bill, as I understand it, only gives the court jurisdiction to reimburse the owners of the property. Now, let us assume that the gentleman's contention is true. The owner of the property is the Confederacy.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman will allow me just there, I think I can obviate any further difficulty. To fully understand this measure you must understand also two or three other measures that are pending here. This bill is to be followed by other measures which propose to provide that that was not a bona fide sale to the Confederacy and that the cotton belonged to the original vendors.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Of course that is not obvious on the face of this measure. It would require an enabling act after the passage of this measure, would it not?

Mr. WILLIS. Surely it would.
Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield further?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. Let me ask the gentleman, as a matter of merit, his opinion on this proposition: This bill provides for the taking care of that property which was taken after June 1, 1865. At that time the War of Secession was ended, was it not?

Mr. WILLIS. Practically, but not legally. Mr. MANN. It was not legally ended then.

Mr. GARRETT. I mean practically, not legally. Now, let me ask the gentleman from Ohio this question: Does he think that it was right for the Federal Government to take the property of private individuals after the war was ended, after there was peace, and not pay for it?

Mr. SIMS. Or require loyalty to be proven?

Mr. WILLIS. I would have one very definite idea if that property were the property of individuals, and an entirely different idea if it were, as I contend it actually was, and as the authorities of the Treasury Department hold that it was, the property of the Confederate Government. If this property was the property of the Confederate Government the mere fact that it remained in the possession of the original vendor as a bailee did not give him any title to the cotton whatsoever.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course I am familiar with the conten-tion of the gentleman in that respect, and I do not care to go into that class of cases. I do not think it is true that all of this cotton belonged to the Confederate Government. I will say to the gentleman, however, that I have no personal interest in the matter. None of these transactions occurred in my State, or very few of them.

But the gentleman has insisted here, on this question of loyalty, that it is taking away a defense that the Government now has; and I simply wanted to get at the opinion of the gentleman whether the defense of loyalty ought not to be taken away where the property was not taken until after the war was ended and in a time of peace. Why should loyalty have to be proven then? I understand the general rule among nations is that the property of an enemy is the legitimate prey of an army, but after June 1, 1865, there was no enemy.

Mr. WILLIS. Of course the gentleman understands that legally the war did not close until August, 1866.

Mr. GARRETT. I am talking about the practical fact of it. There is considerable dispute as to when the war really did end legally.

Mr. WILLIS. That has been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States, that it ended on August 20, 1866.

Mr. GARRETT. I should like the opinion of the gentleman on that question: If the property was not taken until after June 1, 1865, after there was a practical state of peace, does the gentleman think it is right to require proof of loyalty?

Mr. WILLIS. I have no hesitancy in answering that question. If the Government took property which during the war would have been regarded as the property of an enemy or as contraband of war-and cotton was so regarded-if that property was taken from an individual after the war was practically ended, then I should say there was just ground for recompense; but my contention is that that is not the case that we have before us, and that is the contention of the officers of the Treasury Department.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Would it not, then, be a matter of proof for the claimant to prove in the Court of Claims whether he did have title to the property at the time it was taken from him? Is not that a proper matter of proof in the court?

Mr. WILLIS. Undoubtedly so.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Then, if the gentleman has no objection, why not report this bill favorably?

Mr. WILLIS. In reply to that let me read a letter which I have. And before I forget it, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record certain correspondence that I have had with the Department of Justice and the Treasury Department relative to these several bills-my letters to the departments and their replies.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BUTLER. Has the gentleman the opinion of the department?

Mr. WILLIS. I have it, and I will put it in the RECORD in full

Mr. BUTLER. Let the gentleman give it.
Mr. WILLIS. I am going to, if the gentleman will give me time. Here is what the Attorney General says:

In some of these cases under section 162 the Government has raised questions of law which have not as yet been determined by the courts. Among these is the contention—

Note that this is the contention of the Government in these cases involving this $5,000,000-

Among these is the contention that the loyalty required under the abandoned and captured property act is still in force and will affect all suits under said section 162, and that allegations of loyalty are necessary in the petition, which must be sustained by satisfactory proof.

Now, what I am saying is that when we have these cases actually pending in court, cases involving vast sums of money, approximately $5,000,000, it is unwise and undesirable, especially in view of other legislation that is contemplated here, let somebody get into the Treasury and to take away from the Government a perfectly valid defense that it now has.

In further response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler], I desire to present here certain correspondence had with the Department of Justice:

WASHINGTON, July 1, 1912.

Washington, July 1, 1912.

Hon. George Wickersham.

Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: I desire to secure any information that may be in the possession of your department relative to the subject matter of House bill 23465, introduced by Mr. Candler, of Mississippi, now pending in the Judiciary Committee of the House, and House bill 16314, introduced by Mr. Watkins, of Louisiana, and recently reported to the House from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. These bills deal with the alleged liability of the Government of the United States to the original vendors of certain cotton, which cotton during the period of the Civil War was sold to the Government of the Confederate States and was permitted to remain in the care of the original vendors as ballees. Subsequently, under authority of United States statutes, the United States took possession of this cotton, holding that it was the property of the Government of the Confederate States. I is now proposed under these bills to make the Government of the United States liable for this cotton to the original vendors and their heirs. House bill 23465 proposes so to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the law relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, that, first, "that all judgments and payments under the act shall be free from claims of assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency of the original owner of said claims; second, that no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of such claims; and, third, that judgment thereunder shall not be denied by reason of any bill of sale or other conveyance of such property to the Confederate Government in consideration of securities of said government unless accompanied or followed by actual delivery of such property.

I wish to know what the policy of the Government has been heretofore in dealing with cases of this kind and what the legal effect of the proposed legislation will be. Any information concerning the subject matter of either of these bills that may be in the possession of your department that can properly be furnished me will be appreciated.

Very respectfully,

FRANK B. WILLIS

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, July 8, 1912.

Hon. Frank B. Willis,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Willis: I am in receipt of your favor of the 1st instant, wherein you desire information relative to so-called "cotton claims."

It is my understanding that the Treasury Department has forwarded to you certain facts and data which to a great degree make reply to the communication received by me.

The act of March 12, 1863, provided for the collection of abandoned property, etc., in insurrectionary districts within the United States and authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint agents to receive and collect all abandoned or captured property in any State or Territory in insurrection, with certain exceptions. Said act contains the following provision:

"And any person claiming to have been the owner of any such abandoned or captured property may, at any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion, prefer his claim to the proceeds thereof in the Court of Claims; and on proof to the satisfaction of said court of his ownership of said property, of his right to the proceeds thereof, and that he has never given any aid or comfort to the present rebellion, to receive the residue of such proceeds after the deduction of any purchase money which may have been paid, together with the expense of transportation and sale of said property, and any other lawful expenses attending the disposition thereof."

Under this act numerous suits were filed in the Court of Claims for property, including the disposition thereof."

Under this act numerous suits were filed in the Court of Claims for property, including the disposition thereof."

Under this act numerous suits were filed in the Court, in the case of the act, soled both before and after June 30, 1866, Anderson 9 Wall, 56, held that the Supreme Court, in the case of the act with the case of the claimants failed to establish loyality in compliance in the proclamation of the President of August 29 disposition thereof."

The United States (13 Wall, 128), and other cases that cour by the act. * * * *

"Pardon and amnesty have no effect, except to such as sue in time."
The same principle was affirmed in the case of James A. Briggs (25 C. Cls., 126; 143 U. S., 351).
In that case a special act of Congress (act of June 4, 1888, ch. 348, Stat. L., 1075) was under consideration.
In the last few years quite a large number of abandoned and captured cases have been referred to the Court of Claims for findings of fact under the act of March 3, 1887, known as the Tucker Act. In the case of Brandon, administrator of Colboun (46 C. Cls., 559), the Court of Claims decided that it had no jurisdiction of such cases under Tucker Act references.

case of Brandon, administration of Claims decided that it had no jurisdiction of such cases under Tucker Act references.

Section 162 of the revised Judiciary Code (act of Mar. 3, 1911) revived the abandoned and captured property act as to all cases where the property was taken subsequent to June 1, 1865. A large number of suits have been filed under this act, but none of them have been brought to trial.

In some of these cases under section 162, the Government has raised questions of law, which have not as yet been determined by the court. Among these is the contention that the loyalty requirement of the abandoned and captured property act is still in force and will affect all suits under said section 162, and that allegations of loyalty are necessary in the petitions which must be sustained by satisfactory proof.

Sections 159, 160, and 161 of the new judicial code require allegation and proof of loyalty in all cases, and we shall ask the court to construe these sections in connection with said section 162.

I herewith attach to this communication a circular dated January 9, 1900, issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, and known as Department Circular No. 4. It appears from this document that the cotton, the proceeds of which amounted to nearly $5,000,000, was seized after June 30, 1865.

By section 5 of the act of May 18, 1872 (17 Stats., 134), it was recorded.

by section 5 of the act of May 18, 1872 (17 Stats., 134), it was provided:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the lawful owners, or their legal representatives, of all cotton selzed after the 30th day of June, 1865, by the agents of the Government unlawfully and in violation of their instructions, the net proceeds, without interest, of the sales of said cotten actually paid into the Treasury of the United States," etc.

It will be observed that this act did not require proof of loyalty. One thousand three hundred and thirty-six claims were filed under the last-named act for 136,000 bales, estimated at the value of $13,000,600 (Ex. Doc. H. R., 45th Cong., 2d sess., p. 36), and there was allowed by the Secretary of the Treasury $195,896.21 on account of these claims. Most of the claims were rejected on the ground that the cotton had been sold to the Confederate Government by the original owners, as shown by bills of sale. In the case of Whitfield v. The United States (92 U. S., 165), the Supreme Court held that such bills of sale passed title and no recovery could be had by the original owners for cotton so disposed of.

The object and legal effect of the bills referred to by you are to amend

The object and legal effect of the bills referred to by you are to amend section 162 so as to dispense with proof of loyalty, to nullify the bills of sale to the Confederate Government, and to make judgments in this class of cases free from the claims of assignees in bankruptcy or of sale to the Confederate Government, and to make judgments in this class of cases free from the claims of assignees in bankruptcy or insolvency.

The policy of enacting such legislation is a matter entirely for the consideration of Congress.

The reports from the Treasury Department in the cases that have been filed since the 1st of January under said section 162 of the new judicial code mostly show that the cotton had been sold to the Confederate Government and bills of sale given by the original owners. The reports in another class of cases show that cotton had been bought by the Confederate Government and resold or contracted for to individuals who now make claims to the proceeds thereof.

In view of the fact that section 162 of the new judicial code did not go into effect until the 1st of last January, and, furthermore, that the various questions which the Government have raised under this act have not been passed upon by the court, and, in addition to this, the fact that in no instance have the claimants' attorneys who are now seeking to recover under this section presented a case in which they are ready for trial, it would seem that before further legislation time should be given for adjudication of some cases under the recent law.

Respectfully, for the Attorney General,

JOHN Q. THOMPSON, Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes. Mr. SIMS. Suppose the Government had taken property from an individual in July, 1866, cotton that was planted and raised after the war. Does the gentleman think that the question of loyalty as a matter of substance should affect the ownership of that cotton, although it may have been raised by an ex-Confederate soldier after he was paroled and had gone home?

Mr. WILLIS. The fact that he was a Confederate soldier would not make any difference.

Mr. SIMS. He was just as disloyal as a man could be during the war. Now, this act confines it to June 1, 1865, a time when in fact there was no war. After that time why should there be any difference between June, 1865, and June, 1866, because the war ended legally on August 20, 1866?

Mr. WILLIS. Can the gentleman tell me any good reason why, when there have been given three several opportunities whereby relief could be had in just such cases, there should be another? First, application to the Secretary of the Treasury; second, under the proclamation the law allowed two years after the legal close of the war—that is, up to August 20, 1868—and third, there was the law of 1872. Here were three separate remedies given to the parties, and now why should we, 50 years after that, break down the statute of limitations, break down the rules that heretofore have obtained in these

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman's inquiry relates wholly to the removal of the statute of limitations, but my question was as to loyalty.

Mr. WILLIS. But the gentleman from South Carolina raised the question as to the statute of limitations.

Mr. SIMS. I can not see why there should be any question of loyalty raised after 1866, unless the owner was a belligerent and still fighting and refusing to accept the issues of war.

Mr. WILLIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to see—

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I would like to answer the question that the gentleman from Ohio has just asked.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina will do that in his own time, as I would like to close. I do not desire to seem discourteous, but I want to proceed. I want to go on with this first proposition, that this is not a trust fund. Supreme Court has clearly and distinctly so stated in what I have quoted and in what I shall insert in the RECORD.

Now let me read from another case the decision of the Court of Claims in the Brandon case, decided in 1897. The court is quoting from Ford's case (19 C. Cls., 519-525):

But as was said by the court in Ford's case respecting the right even of a loyal man in insurrectionary territory "he had no shadow of lawful claim against the Government before the act of March 12, 1803, was passed; nor had he after that, except as that act gave it to him." So that in any event, whatever right such claimant had to the proceeds arising from the sale of his cotton was given to him by the abandoned and captured property act, the determination of which was contingent upon his pursuing the remedy and establishing his loyalty and ownership within the time and as in the act provided. This was the extent of the trust. (Young v. U. S., 97 U. S., 39, 61.)

Then it goes on to say-

As to all persons within the privileges of the act-

Not as to all persons, but as to those who sued in time.

As to all persons within the privileges of the act the proceeds were held in trust, but in all others the title of the United States as captor was absolute. Whoever could bring himself within the terms of the trust might sue the United States and recover, but no one else.

In other words, the Supreme Court has said, as clearly as the English language will permit it to state, that this fund under discussion to-day is not a trust fund at all; that the title of the Government of the United States to this fund is absolute. What I am giving to you here is not any conclusion of my own, but the conclusion of the court itself.

The same doctrine is borne out in the Sprott case, which I will not take the time to read, but simply refer you to it. It is in Twentieth Wallace, pages 460 to 462; and, Mr. Chairman, I ask permission to insert that in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the request will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. The decision referred to is, in part, as follows:

The act known as the captured and abandoned property act, passed March 12, 1863 (12 Stat. L., 820), providing for "the collection of abandoned property, etc., in the insurrectionary districts within the United States," enacts that any person claiming to have been the owner of any such abandoned or captured property may, within a time specified in the act, prefer his claim to the proceeds thereof in the Court of Claims, and, on proof to the satisfaction of the court (1) of his ownership, (2) of his right to the proceeds thereof, and (3) that he has never given any aid or comfort to the rebellion, receive the residue of such proceeds, after deducting any purchase money which may have been paid, etc.

It is a fact so well known as to need no finding of the court to establish it, a fact which, like many other historical events, all courts take notice of, that cotton was the principal support of the rebellion, so far as pecuniary aid was necessary to its support. The Confederate Government early adopted the policy of collecting large quantities of cotton under its control, either by exchanging its bonds for the cotton, or, when that failed, by forced contributions. So long as the imperfect blockade of the southern ports and the unguarded condition of the Mexican frontier enabled them to export this cotton, they were well supplied in return with arms, ammunition, medicine, and the necessaries of life not grown within their lines, as well as with that other great sinew of war, gold. If the rebel government could freely have exchanged the cotton of which it was enabled to possess itself for the munitions of war or for gold, it seems very doubtful if it could have been suppressed. So when the rigor of the blockade prevented successful export of this cotton, their next resource was to sell it among their own people or to such persons claiming outwardly to be loyal to the United States as would buy of them for the money necessary to support the tottering fabric of rebellion which they called a government.

The cotton which is the subject of this controversy was of this class. It had been in the possession and under the control of the Confederate Government, with claim of title. It was captured during the last days of the existence of that government by our forces and sold by the officers appointed for that purpose, and the money deposited in the Treasury.

The claimant now asserts a right to this money on the ground that officers appointed for that purpose, and the money on the ground that Treasury.

The claimant now asserts a right to this money on the ground that he was the owner of the cotton when it was so captured. This claim of right or ownership he must prove in the Court of Claims. He attempts to do so by showing that he purchased it of the Confederate Government and paid them for it in money. In doing this he gave aid and assistance to the rebellion in the most efficient manner he possibly could. He could not have aided that cause more acceptably if he had entered its service and become a blockade runner or, under the guise of a privateer, had preyed upon the unoffending commerce of his country.

The substance of the decision is that in the first part it gives a statement of the facts as to how this thing came about, that the Confederate Government was the purchaser of cotton. understand it purchased the cotton; it did not confiscate it. It did not go to the planter and say, "You have got to turn this over," not go to the planter and say, "You have got to turn this over," but it went out in the open market and bought the cotton as any other buyer might, and it paid for it. It was the practice to leave the cotton in the hands of the vendor; that was not peculiar as to the Confederate Government. It was the custom of the country, as the court says in one of the decisions. That is the way it was generally done. The sale was complete, but the cotton was left in the hands of the vendor as a bailee, but the title passed entirely and completely to the Confederate Government.

The court goes on to say in substance, in the latter part of the decision, that if it shall be permitted to be held that this cotton that was actually sold in good faith, paid for in Confederate currency, notes, or bonds, which was the only money in circulation in that portion of the country at that time—if, after the Confederacy had fallen, the people who happened to have that cotton in possession should be allowed to say that the cotton was theirs, the court says that would be giving the individual an unfair advantage and allowing him a chance to profit on a contract which by all the decisions of the court was held illegal and unwarranted. That is the substance of the decision in Twentieth Wallace, at the pages to which I have referred.

There has been a good deal written about this matter. have seen some newspaper and magazine articles, and have heard some discussion relative to the amount of this fund. I expected to hear it stated that it was much larger than it is. I am glad to know that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Wat-KINS] has stated it with substantfal accuracy. I have read at various times that this fund which was awaiting distribution—this so-called trust fund that was held in the interest of the common people of our great Southern States—amounted to twenty-five or twenty-six millions of dollars. I shall insert in the RECORD some brief tables from this Treasury circular that are highly interesting and important in this discussion, which show the sources of this fund and how the fund has gradually been paid up until now, as has been stated by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Watkins], the sum total remaining for distribution is $4,992,349.92. The tables referred to are as

The Secretary of the Treasury, after giving the argument that I have given, substantially, goes on to say:

It follows, therefore, that the balance of the fund in the Treasury received from the sale of cotton represents the proceeds of the sale of cotton that belonged to the Confederacy.

A little further along he says:

It will be seen from the foregoing that ample provision was made a law for all persons who claimed that their property was unlaw-

It will be seen from the foregoing that ample provision was made by law for all persons who claimed that their property was unlawfully taken.

1. Until the fund was covered into the Treasury in 1868, the Secretary of the Treasury could return the property or the proceeds in all cases where a claim was substantiated by proper evidence.

2. The Court of Claims had jurisdiction for all claims filed before August 20, 1868.

3. The act of 1872 provided that claims for cotton could be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury until November, 1872.

I commend that circular to the study of Members, if they have not already seen it. It is Treasury Circular No. 4, issued in the year 1900.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes. Mr. BUTLER. That I may understand better, I desire to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman is anticipating that there may be a measure pressed here authorizing individuals to collect money from the Treasury of the United States for cotton which was sold to the Confederate Government. I will agree with the gentleman that such a sale, except as to creditors, there being no delivery made, is good; but will not the gentleman concede that it is only right to pay an individual for property that was seized from him and sold after the hostilities between the North and the South had ceased?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I am not anticipating a bill that will be urged. I am anticipating a bill that is now on the calendar and that has been urged, and which, in my judgment, is to be passed as a companion piece to this bill, if this bill passes. But I am not talking about that. We are talking about this bill, and the contention I seek to make is that, as a matter of fact, after years of the most careful investigation of records that are extremely voluminous-and if gentlemen have not examined these records they ought to do so and must do so before they can come to a proper conclusion—the Treasury Department officials, after most laborious research in a carload of musty documents, came to the conclusion that the funds they now have are the proceeds of the sale of cotton that belonged to the Confederacy. In other words, shorn of its verbiage, my contention is that this fund does not belong to any individuals at all.

Mr. BUTLER. Then this bill would not enable the owners of the cotton to make any claim if it belongs to the Confederacy.

There is no such thing as the Confederacy at the present time, and no claim can be set up by it. Is not that the result?

Mr. WILLIS. Precisely the result, as I have stated.

Mr. WILLIS. Precisely the result, as I have stated.
Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.
Mr. GARRETT. The question propounded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] was really the question that I was about to propound. As a matter of fact, under the terms of this bill there can not be any payment if it belonged to the Confederate Government. The gentleman is not insisting upon that, is he?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly not. I have been unfortunate in the use of terms if I have not made it clear that I am trying to discuss this general cotton proposition as evidenced by this bill and other related measures.

Mr. GARRETT. But I feared that some gentleman who might be friendly to this bill might get an erroneous impression from the fact that the gentleman is arguing another bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I am talking about this bill and about another bill of a good deal of importance that is pending here. As a matter of fact, if the statement which I believe the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett] made about the bill awhile ago be true, that it simply removes the bar of the statute of limitations, then we can strike out this provision as to the requirement of proof of loyalty. We can strike out lines 12, 13, and 14. and then there will be no objection to it. I do not think any-body would object to the bill then, but the gentleman from Tennessee will not be able to get the friends of this bill to agree to that. It is not the limitation proposition, but it is the loyalty proposition that is of importance.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that I would not be willing myself to agree to that, because I do not believe where the property was taken after the war was ended that there ought to be any proof of loyalty.

Mr. BUTLER. How could there be any disloyalty after the war was over?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the other gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar].

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the gentleman, he concedes that there is about $4,000,000 left, arising from the sale of this cotton. Is that correct?

Mr. WILLIS. About $4,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then this bill simply provides the individuals who owned the cotton subsequent to June 1, 1865, shall have the right to come forward to the Court of Claims and put forth their claim to it?

Mr. WILLIS. Without proof of loyalty.

Mr. McKELLAR. Without proof of loyalty. The war was then over, and if these men had the ownership and can prove the ownership to the property and the proceeds of that property are still in the Treasury, as the gentleman admits, why should the United States Government not permit the real owners of the property to come forward and make proof to their ownership and right?

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman asks me for my humble

Mr. McKELLAR. I do.

Mr. WILLIS. My contention is that the real owner of that cotton is no longer in existence. That is, I mean to say, the vendee of the cotton-the Confederate Government-was the owner of the cotton, and, of course, with the close of the war, the Confederacy passed out of existence. Therefore the Supreme Court said (Young v. United States, 97 U. S., 39, 61) in the case which I read in the gentleman's presence, the title is absolutely in the United States. That is my contention, if the gentleman is interested in my very humble view of the matter.

Mr. SIMS. If the gentleman will permit, this bill does not provide for paying the Confederate Government anything or any assignee of the Confederate Government.

Mr. WILLIS. If I see a snake is crawling along through a rail fence, I will whack at it then whether it be passing at this, that, or the other corner. I do not mean, of course, any offense by the illustration.

Mr. SIMS. Some people imagine they see snakes. [Laughter.]

I accept the pleasantry of the gentleman; "Out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh," and I have no doubt the gentleman, from his wide experience, refers to the matter in that way. What I am getting at is this: I am referring to this general proposition. I think this is only one of a series of bills which it is proposed to pass in order somehow to enable somebody to get $5,000,000 out of the Treasury that belongs properly to the United States. But let me proceed a little further with this specific bill. I have tried to state the facts involved in this case and in similar cases. the second place, what is the law and what has been the history of the law? We first had the act of March 12, 1863, to which reference has been made, the captured and abandoned property act. Then that was followed up by the act of May 1872, under which proof of loyalty was not required. As I said a little bit ago, out of order in my argument, there have three separate and distinct remedies that have been afforded to these people. If there are any individuals who actually own this cotton, the law has already provided three separate and distinct periods and three separate means whereby they could get relief. Mr. Secretary Sherman, Secretary of the Treasury, in his annual message of 1877-78, in discussing these very cases spoke of the operation of the act of 1872, under which $194,000 was paid. Under the operation of that act 1,189 claims were rejected and 49 claims were allowed. Then he goes on to say here, in substance:

That it is desirable there should be somewhere, some time, somehow an end to this period of litigation. We have already had three separate and distinct remedies and three distinct periods in which these aggreeved persons could have been relieved.

And yet gentlemen come in here more than a generation after and say we must open this thing all up again and take away the defense by the Government which has been heretofore allowed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask the gentleman this question: The gentleman speaks of this cotton being actually the property of the Confederacy. Under this bill does not the gentleman concede that the claimant has to make proof of ownership to the satisfaction of the Court of Claims before he can sustain his claim against the Federal Government?

Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Then why should not he have that right? Mr. WILLIS. I have tried to make it clear. This bill may not amount to so much, but I conceive the whole proposition here is involved in the various measures that are reported out in order to allow certain persons to get hold of this $5,000,000 that does not belong to anybody except the United States, and they will not be allowed to get it if I can help it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for just one question?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I would like more definitely to see the issue joined here. What are these bills? Will the gentleman name one of them or give some indication by which the Members can ascertain what bill is proposed to be tacked onto this legislation in the event of this enactment?

Mr. WILLIS. I think it would be hardly profitable to go into that discussion.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. It is a contingency which may arise.

Mr. WILLIS. I can give the gentleman the number of some of the bills that I can commend to him for his careful con-There is the present bill, H. R. 16314, and H. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. House bill 16820 was evidently introduced subsequent to this bill?

I am not alleging any conspiracy or any-WILLIS. thing of that kind. I am not going into that.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Has the bill H. R. 16820 been reported to the House?

Mr. WILLIS. I am not clear about that. My recollection is that it has been reported, however.

Mr. MANN. It is on the calendar. Mr. WILLIS. I think it is on the calendar.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That confirms the gentleman's

If the House passes this bill that bill will Mr. WILLIS. be called up. It is apparently a perfect system. To one is assigned the cry of "Onset" and another the "Charge." The object is to get away with the $5,000,000. That is what we are opposing.

Now, in this Brandon case, to which I have referred, and which I commend to the gentlemen for careful consideration, the court gives this splendid summary on page 8:

Of the proceeds remaining in the Treasury amounting to $4.886,671 from cotton seized after June 30, 1865, the Secretary of the Treasury allowed, under the act of May 18, 1872, section 5 (17 Stat. L., 122, 134), $195,896.21, leaving $4.690.774.79, which the Secretary refused to return because the owners, he held, had sold the cotton to the Confederate Government, and the same was not, therefore, individual cotton when seized after June 30, 1865, but was the property of the Confederate Government.

Now, this whole proposition has been gone into by preceding Congresses. Reference is made here by the court to Senate Document No. 23, Forty-third Congress, second session, and to House executive document, Forty-fifth Congress. They quote that as authority. Let me read that again. It is as follows:

And the same was not therefore individual cotton when seized after June 30, 1865, but was the property of the Confederate Government.

You have not only the opinion of the Executive Department, that of the Secretary of the Treasury, the present Secretary of the Treasury, as well as past Secretaries of the Treasury. have here the report of Mr. Secretary Sherman in 1877 and 1878. The Executive Department has decided time and again against the proposition involved in this bill. The legislative department has gone on record in the same way, and I have already quoted to you at great length the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, which it is proposed shall be overturned by this apparently harmless little bill. I do not believe the committee or the House or the country want to enter upon a scheme of legislation the ultimate result of which will be the payment of $5,000,000, which is the property of the United States, to somebody, the good Lord only knows who it will be.

Now, there are two or three other cases. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire how much time I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. There are two or three other cases I shall refer to only in passing. I have already referred to the Haycraft case and read a portion of it. Another is the Sprott case, which I referred to very briefly. The only difference between that case and the other case is that in this case the Confederate Government had sold the cotton to an individual. The Supreme Court held in a later case that it made no difference as to the nature of the transaction whether the Confederate Government bought the cotton of an individual or sold it to an individual, and that the nature of the transaction, so far as its legality was concerned, was exactly the same.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that the House under the guise of passing a seemingly innocent sort of a bill to carry into effect what is alleged to be the existing intention of the law, desires to enter upon a policy which in reality, as I have said before, proposes, first, to fly in the face of the facts; second, to reverse the legislative department of the Government that has already made careful investigation of this subject and has expressed its opinion in positive law no later than the time of the passage of the judicial code.

I have read to you a portion of the letter from the Attorney General, all of which letter I shall insert in the RECORD by permission of the committee. In that letter it is said that the Department of Justice insists as one of the defenses in the case now pending in court that loyalty must be proved. That is one of the defenses. In the face, then, not only of legislative decisions, but also in the face of the contention of the appropriate executive department that under the law, as the Congress passed it only just recently, it still is the rule of law that loyalty must be proved; in view of the fact that the Attorney General's Department, whenever it has gone into this matter, has taken a position exactly opposed to this proposed legislation; in view of the fact that every time the matter has been before the Supreme Court of the United States that tribunal has taken the contrary view to that proposed by this legislation; in view of the fact that in the passage of this apparently innocent and harmless measure it is proposed to change the policy of the Government and actually to interfere with the trial of cases now pending in the Court of Claims; in view of the fact that this legislation proposes to lead into one of two ways-either that it proposes to lead nobody knows whither or else to the Treasury of the United States, and proposes to give away to somebody $5,000,000, which, according to the decision of the Supreme Court in the Young case, absolutely belongs to the Federal Government-I say, in view of the magnitude of the sum and the importance of the principle involved, this bill ought not to pass. [Applause.]
I desire to add here a communication recently received from the Secretary of the Treasury in response to an inquiry addressed to him by me relative to H. R. 16314 and H. R. 23465:

> TREASURY DEPARTMENT. OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Washington, July 9, 1912.

Hon. Frank B. Willis,

House of Representatives.

Sir: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 1st instant, requesting such information as may be in the possession of this department relative to the subject matter of H. R. 23465 and H. R. 16314, pending in the present Congress.

The bills have a direct bearing upon the so-called cotton claims, which, by section 162 of the judicial code, approved March 3. 1911 (36 Stat., 1139), were referred to the Court of Claims for adjudication, jurisdiction being conferred to hear and determine the claims of persons from whom property was taken subsequent to June 1, 1865, under the previsions of the captured and abandoned property act of March 12, 1863 (12 Stat., 820), and acts amendatory thereof.

In reply I have to advise you that the enactment of the proposed legislation would effect the following changes in respect to the hearing and determination of the claims:

I. Requiring the filing of all such claims prior to January 1, 1915, no limit of time being prescribed by existing law.

2. Eliminating proof of loyalty as a jurisdictional fact in the adjudication of such claims.

3. Declaring that judgment shall not be denied a claimant because of any bill of sale or other conveyance of such property to the Confederate States Government, unless accompanied or followed by actual delivery of such property.

4. Restricting payments under judgments in such cases to the personal representatives of the original claimants.

It is proposed to limit the time for filing such claims to January 1, 1915, thus giving claimants three years' time in which to file their claims, the period running from January 1, 1912, when the judicial code became effective.

This period is one year longer than was allowed for filing claims under the captured and abandoned property act of March 12, 1863, and while the matter is entirely in the discretion of the Congress it is suggested that delay in the adjudication of the cases may be caused if the court shall find that moneys derived from sales of intermingled cotton coming from a particular locality can not be traced to individual lots, and if it can not be shown that all claimants upon the fund are before the court, judgments may be suspended to await the expiration of the time for filing claims in order that all persons whose cot before the court, judgments may be suspended to await the expiration of the time for filing claims in order that all persons whose cotton contributed to the fund may receive their pro rata share of the proceeds thereof.

In the matter of the bills of sale for cotton sold to the Confederate States it is disclosed by the Confederate Government purchased in competition with private parties, paying approximately the same price per pound for the cotton and making payment in the same kind of money or securities.

The seller of cotton to the Confederate States received as consideration for his property identically the same consideration as though he had sold to a private buyer, and the records show instances wherein the same person at or about the same time sold some of his cotton to the Confederate States and the remainder to private purchasers.

The sales to the Confederate Government were made by two classes of persons, namely, producers selling direct to the Confederate States and merchants or factors selling to the Confederate States cotton which had been purchased at private sale.

The bills of sale given by the seller for either a sale to a private dealer or to the Confederate States were substantially in the same terms and similarly conditioned. In either case the cotton was to remain in store on the plantation of the seller until called for. Actual possession of the cotton was not necessary. It was the custom of the country in making sales of cotton to transfer the planter's certificate as if negotiable, and this was the usual and generally the only mode of delivery required.

Many of the agents of the Confederate States making purchases of cotton agent, was of this number, and subsequently, through the firm of Baskerville & Whitfield, of which he was a member, sold upward of 2,000 bales of cotton to the Confederate States, which he purchased at private sale from Mississippi planters. Baskerville, a Confederate cotton agent, was of this number, and subsequently sold by Baskerville & Whitfield to the Confedera States Treasury agents as property of the Confederate States surrendered to the United States.

The legal representative of the surviving partner of Baskerville & Whitfield has filed chaims for this cotton in the Court of Claims, under section 162 of the judicial code, and similar claims for the same cotton have been filed by the legal representatives of the planters from whom Baskerville & Whitfield purchased it at private sale.

Many dealers other than Baskerville & Whitfield purchased from the planters at private sale and subsequently sold the same cotton to the Confederate States, and their claims have been filed with the court, the same cotton being also claimed in court by the legal representatives of the planters who produced it.

Of the 30,000 bales of cotton collected in the four Mississippi counties of Lowndes, Monroe, Noxubee, and Oktibbeha, approximately one-fifth was sold to the Confederate States by cotton merchants or other persons who purchased it from the planters at private sale.

Under the terms of the proposed amendment of section 162 of the Judicial Code (H. R. 23465), nullifying hills of sale of cotton sold to the Confederate States, it would appear that judgment would be given to the legal representative of the surviving partner of Baskerville and Whitfield and not to the legal representatives of the planters who retained possession of the cotton, though the bills of sale from the planters to Baskerville and Whitfield rest upon the same consideration as the bills of sale from Baskerville and Whitfield to the Confederate States.

The Confederate records further show that the cotton so purchased

States. The Confederate records further show that the cotton so purchased was regularly inspected by Confederate States cotton agents and its condition reported upon, of which record was made from time to time. Such records show sales of cotton to procure funds for supplies for the Confederate army as well as the removal of cotton to prevent its capture by the Federal military forces.

In some instances the Union and Confederate military commanders of a district authorized sales of Confederate States cotton to persons holding purchasing permits issued under section 8 of the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat., 377), but the cotton was not removed from the plantations until after the surrender of the Confederate military forces.

Claims arising under such purchasing permits were paid from the Treasury out of the proceeds of the cotton taken and sold. Claimants for this cotton are also before the Court of Claims under section 162 of the Judicial Code, and if the bills of sale to the Confederate States are nullified by the enactment into law of H. R. 23465, a question may arise whether the judgment to be given shall be for the whole sum which reached the Treasury or only for the balance remaining.

The changes in section 162 of the Judicial Code proposed by H. R. 16314 and H. R. 23465 are apparently matters of public policy to be determined by Congress in the exercise of its discretion. In this connection attention is called to H. R. 16820, "A bill to revive the right of action under the captured and abandoned property acts, and for other purposes," favorably reported from the Committee on War Claims.

and for other purposes, Tavorably reported from the Committee on War Claims.

This bill contemplates the filing in the Court of Claims of all claims not previously filed and the reinstatement on the docket of the court of all cases dismissed for the causes stated in the bill.

Under the original jurisdiction conferred upon the Court of Claims by the captured and abandoned property acts 1,578 claims cases were filed in that court, the aggregate amount claimed being $77,785,962.10, as stated in Court of Claims Report, volume 18, page 703.

There is inclosed for your information a copy of Treasury Department Circular No. 4 of January 9, 1900, containing a statement of transactions under the captured and abandoned property acts, showing the gross receipts, sources from which derived, payments therefrom, and the balance remaining in the Treasury of approximately $5,000,000.

Should H. R. 23465 become a law it is probable that the whole of that sum would be required to be paid in carrying out its provisions. It is understood that the Attorney General has lately communicated with you in reply to a similar inquiry upon this subject.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to answer all of the speech of the gentleman [Mr. Willis] who has just taken his seat, because a great deals that he has said is not applicable to this bill at all. A great deal of misconception could be obtained, however, from listening to that speech, because one would imagine from hearing it that all the money in the Treasury is involved in this bill. That is not the case at all. My recollection is that this bill will carry, if passed, not over from $900,000 to $1,000,000.

Now, the entire amount of cotton, the net proceeds of the sale of which were paid into the Treasury, aggregated, according to my recollection, something like $10,000,000. A great deal of this cotton, under the acts referred to by the gentleman as having been enacted in past years, was recovered by citizens of the South who could prove loyalty to the Federal Government. My recollection is that something like $5,000,000 was paid out on that account between the close of the Civil War and the present time as the result of suits filed by people who were able to prove loyalty to the Federal Government. All of the proceeds of this other cotton, except that which is specifically covered by this bill, can not possibly be reached under this legislation.

I think it necessary that the Members of the House should thoroughly understand the situation. I am sure that there is not a Member of this House on either side who does not desire the Federal Government to be just and fair to its citizens. I agree with the position taken by any Member of this House who is unwilling that the cotton that has been properly taken from the Confederate Government should be paid for, because that cotton became absolutely the property of the Federal Government. That question is not involved in this bill, nor is the question of the payment of $3,000,000, as I recollect, of the proceeds of that cotton which belonged properly to the Confederate Government. This bill will carry only, as I recollect, something like a million dellars.

Now, if you will go down to the Treasury Department you will find that the names of the parties to whom this cotton belonged are on the books of the Treasury Department, and if those people who could prove loyalty got their money because they could prove loyalty their claims are identical with the claims of those people who have the money in the Treasury but who are unable to prove loyalty. When the Committee on the Revision of the Laws proceeded to act upon the report of the commission codifying the law in the last Congress it took under consideration this section 162. That committee was presided over by the distinguished attorney from Philadelphia, Mr. Moon, who was also on the joint com-mission from the House and the Senate to revise the statute laws of the United States, as were also the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Sherley] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Houston]. If you will turn to section 159 of the code, you will find that the right of recovery is there given, and from that section was removed the statute of limitations which ran against these claims for cotton the proceeds of which were actually turned into the Treasury, that cotton having been taken from a private citizen who had never parted with his title to it to the Confederate Government. In addition to removing the statute of limitations there was a clause in that section in reference to loyalty. Section 159 gives the citizen the right of recovery. But there was another section which the committee entirely overlooked. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Hous-TON] will bear testimony to this fact. The other members of the committee and the members of the Senate committee who were interested in it thought that they had removed not only the statute of limitations as to these claims, but they thought that they had removed the requirement of loyalty as to these specific claims for cotton; but when the clerks made up the code, or, rather, assembled the sections, it was discovered that in section 161, which has solely to do with procedure and with the right of a man to go into court, it was provided that the claimant must in his petition to the Court of Claims allege his loyalty in order to get into court to assert the right which is given him in section 159. If this fact had been discovered while the bill was under consideration, it would have been remedied.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. As I understand the gentleman's contention, it is that there is at the utmost $1,000,000 involved in this legislation.

Mr. SISSON. I am stating that as my recollection from a report which I saw which included the names of the parties who could recover if this law should be enacted.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That conclusion is predicated upon some action either of the court or of the Treasury officials.

Mr. SISSON. Well-

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Did that action turn upon the proof of loyalty alone?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Then there is an official record showing that there is $1,000,000 which would be paid to these claimants if it were not for the fact that they were compelled, as the gentleman says unnecessarily and unjustly, to prove their lovalty.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And that is the purpose sought to be accomplished by this bill.

Mr. SISSON. That is the sole purpose of this bill.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Is the gentleman familiar with the so-called Byrnes bill (H. R. 16820), subsequently reported from the Committee on War Claims?

Mr. SISSON. I am not familiar with that, nor do I know how much money will be covered by that bill. If I recollect it aright, I think that covers a period broader than the one covered in this bill.

Mr. SIMS. Yes; it does; to that extent. Mr. SISSON. It does to that extent.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That to my mind is a very important question to be decided by the gentlemen who are advocating the passage of this bill, and I would like to vote in the light of the fact that the statement is made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Willis] that this bill in itself may be innocent enough, but coupled with subsequent legislation reported from the Committee on War Claims it would be a vicious enactment.

Mr. SISSON. Well—

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Is it the intention to follow this bill with the bill subsequently reported from the Committee on War Claims, and, if so, in what way does that bill (H. R. 16820) enlarge upon the provisions of the bill now under discussion?

Mr. SISSON. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I am not in any sense of the word sponsor for the Byrnes bill, nor am I the sponsor for any other bill in reference to these matters, because I take this position, that where cotton was sold by a citizen-as it was sold by members of my own family—and Confederate money was paid for it, or receipts which were made money by the Confederate Government were issued for that cotton, if after the Civil War was over they turned over to the Federal Government the cotton which they had produced during the Civil War, for which they had taken either Confederate money or receipts of the kind which I have described, I do not believe they have a right now to come and ask the Federal Government to repay them for property which went into the Confederate treasury for the purpose of enabling them to win the cause for which they were fighting. I take that broad ground.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Is there any litigation in any court which would in itself be evidence of the fact that this title is really in dispute as to the $1,000,000 spoken of?

Mr. SISSON. I do not believe there could be a question about that. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not live in a cotton country. Cotton is put up in what they call A bale of cotton has its gin number, and each bale of cotton has the initials of the party upon the cotton. before a man could recover he would be compelled under this bill to prove his specific ownership to that specific bale of cotton, the proceeds of which went into the Treasury. will be compelled to prove that before he would have any status in the Court of Claims.

It might be contended that a man might go into the court and swear falsely that he did not sell the cotton to the Federal Government, and the records of the Treasury Department might show that the proceeds of that particular cotton were taken, and the records would show that he sold it to the Gov-

My judgment is that in that sort of a case the ernment. record in the Treasury Department would be conclusive against him, for I do not believe he would be permitted to deny what the record showed as to that cotton.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Has that question as to the title been adjudicated; that is, whether it belongs to the individual or the Confederacy? The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] claims that it belongs to the Confederacy.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think the gentleman from Ohio contended that any cotton under this bill, the title of which was in the Confederate Government, could be obtained.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Then I misunderstood him. I agree with the gentleman from Mississippi in his contention from a legal standpoint and take issue with the gentleman from Ohio if that is the fact. What I want to ask the gentleman is whether or not this title to a million dollars' worth of cotton has been adjudicated by anybody.

Mr. SISSON. It has not. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I mean as to whether it belongs to the Confederate Government or to the individual.

Mr. SISSON. It has not by any court that I know of.
Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The assumption or statement of the gentleman is that the only question at issue is the question of the party's loyalty.

Mr. SISSON. That is all.

Mr. BURKE of Penusylvania. But there must be another question, and that is the question of title.

Mr. SISSON. And his right to go into court is barred by the question of loyalty. Now, the gentleman from Ohio argued a moment ago that these parties having these claims had been given three separate opportunities to assert their claims. This is hardly fair, because these claims intended to be covered by this bill have never been given a chance. The thing that has kept all who were loyal to the Confederate Government, even though a widow who had no relative in the Army, from recovering is the test of loyalty, and if she was even in sympathy with the Confederate Government this test would compel her to commit perjury or she had no standing in court, and never has had under any of the acts referred to by the gentleman from Ohio. Now, to answer the question of the gentleman from Pennsylvania as to the proof as to who was entitled to this cotton in controversy in this bill it would only be necessary to go down to the Treasury Department and find, for example, that certain cotton was taken from T. U. Sisson, of such number and weight, and the net proceeds turned into the Treasury. If the cotton was turned into the Treasury by the officer who took it as cotton, which did not show on it marks that it had been sold to the Confederate Government and had no receipt of any kind attached to it, I could go into the Court of Claims if I had been living at that time and recover, if this bill passes

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The manner of confiscation is a matter of record.

Mr. SISSON. Absolutely.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Has that record been officially interpreted by any Treasury authority?

Mr. SISSON. I will say frankly that it never has as far as Γ know, because we have never been able to get up to the point on account of the bar of loyalty which has kept us away from the courts that could adjudicate the question.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.
Mr. WILLIS. I am interested in the gentleman's generous and fair statement that if he was a citizen of Mississippi and had sold his cotton to the Confederate Government, and it had gone into the general property of the Confederate Government, and had been used in the war, that he would not contend that he as a citizen would have any claim against the Federal Government.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think I would.

Mr. WILLIS. I think that statement is fair. But what I want to ask of the gentleman, who is an exceptionally good lawyer, is, Would it, in his judgment, have made any difference if the Confederate Government had bought that cotton absolutely, a bill of sale had been made out, and the price had been paid to him by the Confederate Government in the currency that was the only kind in circulation in that portion of the country at that time, the cotton having been left in the gentleman's possession as bailee, would he then say that he had any claim against the Federal Government?

Mr. SISSON. I do not think I would have.

Mr. WILLIS. Then the gentleman disagrees with his col-

Mr. SISSON. I understand that, and I dislike very much to do so, but I am not governed by any desire of mine as to what I would like to have the law to be if I should happen to have a claim in court, in stating my opinion of what the law is. I think that prior to the time the cotton got out of his reach, prior to the time the cotton got away from him, he then could have gone into court and subjected the cotton to his claim, if he had never received anything of value for it; but since he failed to do that I do not believe that under the law of the case, so far as my little learning of the law goes, he would have any legal status in any court in England or in America.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

Mr. SIMS. The burden of proof would be wholly upon the person asserting the claim to show his title to it.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. And if the Confederate Government took it in any way, or had purchased it, or the claimant had parted with his title, how could he have any standing under this bill?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I take it that these gentlemen here are lawyers, and I shall not be like Judge Becket when once before the Supreme Court of the State of Mississippi. On one occasion he argued at considerable length some perfectly elementary principles of law. Among them was one which he stated in about this way: "The court will understand that the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff; that that is the general burden of proof is upon the plaintiff; that that is the general rule in law." He continued to thus discuss elementary principles of law in that way. Finally the chief justice, Judge Woods, became impatient and said: "Judge Becket, why do you not get down to the facts and the law in your case and cease discussing elementary principles of law? Why not presume that the court knows a little law?" Judge Becket then, with a little laugh, said: "Ah, your honor, I did that in the lower court and lost my case." [Laughter.] I shall presume, I will say to my distinguished friend from Tennessee, that the Members of the House understand that elementary principle of law.

Mr. SIMS. From the conclusions they draw from this bill. I

Mr. SIMS. From the conclusions they draw from this bill, I did not know.

Mr. SISSON. As I understand the argument of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Willis], it is not so much to this bill that he directs it as to the legislation that he fears might follow in the wake of it. This matter was thrashed out very thoroughly by the subcommittee, of which Judge Moon was the chairman, and then was reported back to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. These statutes, as Judge Moon stated, were scattered through about 17 large volumes, and to get them together and place them side by side, making it a harmonious whole, was a herculean task, and no men but patient lawyers like Judge Moon and Judge Houston and Judge Sherley and all of the other judges who were on that committee would have gone through with the task as well as they did.

It was the love of the law that impelled them to hunt it up. In this particular instance they failed to amend this section, which goes entirely to the proceeding, to the affidavit which is required to be made. That learned committee gave to the claimant the right, by removing the statute of limitations and by removing the clause in reference to loyalty, section 159, to recover. Prior to that time, even after he got into court, he would have to establish his loyalty, but there was another section that had to do wholly with the question of procedure. The affidavit-the proof of loyalty of the claimant was a jurisdictional question-had to affirmatively show upon its face before he could get into court that he was loyal, and the court then could require him to establish to its satisfaction, in addition to this, his loyalty.

I presume that there is not a man from any section of the country who does not want the United States Government to pay all just, legitimate, and fair demands of the citizens against Government. I believe I have made some little record here in Congress, if for nothing else, upon the question of conserving as far as I can the Treasury of the United States. I have not voted for bills which I thought were extravagant. times I have been rather held up and forced to do it, but there never has been and never will be a case where the Federal Government owes a citizen an honest debt, an honest obligation, that I would not be willing to pay the last dollar in the Treasury to settle it. In addition to that, before I would have the Government's paper dishonored I would mortgage posterity. I would take care of the honor, the honesty, and integrity of the Federal Government at all hazards, so that when the citizen has the obligation of his Government in the form of a Treasury note, a gold certificate, or any other piece of paper he may rest assured that the paper is good. In this particular case it is contended that the citizens of the South were disloyal to the Federal Government in the assertion of what they believed to be their rights, but the time has now come in the history of this great Republic when this next year in the great State of Pennsylvania we are to have a reunion of these two sections, and damned be he who would say one word that would cause the Union not to be complete, not to be perfect. [Applause.]

In this particular class of cases the citizen had been permitted to lay down his arms and go back home, and much of this cotton was absolutely gathered during the fail of 1865 and some of this cotton was absolutely produced in 1866; and even then, when the officer of the Federal Government went there for the purpose of collecting the property of the Federal Government, they would frequently get the property of a citizen who would make an affidavit before the proper officer of the Army, who stated to him "If you can prove that this cotton is yours and does not belong to the Confederate Government, you will get your money; and rather than resist an Army officer when he had no right to go into court and in the prostrate condition they were in then they permitted their cotton to be taken, and a great deal of this cotton never found its way into the Treasury; but there were many honest Army officers there who would take the affidavit and the proof of the citizen, and when the proceeds of the cotton was received after it was sold in New Orleans, or Yazoo City, or some other cotton market, after taking the expenses of handling, hauling, and selling it, these honest Army officers would turn into the Treasury this money as the property of the citizen; and no proof to the contrary has even been shown; but when they came to court for the purpose of establishing these claims they were met at the door of the temple of justice with this clause in each of these bills saying to the citizen, "You have no standing in court because you have been disloyal." The only thing I ask this House to do is to remove that one clause in reference to these claims where the cotton honestly belonged to the citizen who produced it and never parted with his title to the Confederate Government. It is his of right.

Why, the English people in the Boer War never required that sort of affidavit of the citizen with a claim against the English Government. Our own Government did not require it of the Mexican in the Mexican War. No civilized government demands that when its citizen's property has been taken. When the private property of the citizen has been taken all civilized governments of the world have paid the citizen for his property. I am not asking you to pay one penny to the South for Confederate cotton; I am not asking one penny for the cotton that was sold to the Confederate Government; I am not asking that this Government should respond to these sort of claims, but I am asking in common justice that those people who produced and gathered this cotton and who can establish to the satisfaction of the court that this cotton was never sold, directly or indirectly, to the Confederate Government, even at this late date be permitted to make their claim. It is never too late for either a man or for a nation to do justice to a people, and I love a government as well as a man who at a late date will pay his honest obligations although he might have the right to plead the statute of limitation.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. SISSON. Yes.
Mr. BUTLER. There is a provision in this bill to which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] referred, the object of which is to avoid the question of loyalty to the United States Government.

Mr. SISSON. That is the only thing that is amended, too.
Mr. BUTLER. Now, the question of whether or not the claimant was loyal from June 1, 1865, is not, of course, involved in this measure. Was he loyal after June, 1865, up to the time the war was declared to be ended in August, 1866?

Mr. SISSON. Now, let me say to the gentleman, he raises a question about which the courts are very much at a difference. There are several decisions of the courts, and I have had opportunity to investigate these matters; but as a matter of fact Mr. Lincoln in the proposition which was made to the Southern States gave to the world the condition that when the Confederate States abolished slavery by law and assumed their former relations with the Union, that then the war would be over. That happened in June, 1865, after Mr. Lincoln had been assassinated.

Now, so far as certain acts on the part of the Federal Government are concerned in reference to the disbanding of its Army, in reference to getting all of these people back into peaceful pursuits, there were many questions which arose which made it necessary for the Federal Government and made it necessary for the Congress to say that these armies were still organized and that the military government was still in existence. As a fact, to convince any man that both Houses of Congress felt that the war was indeed over in 1865, in December, 1864, Mr. Lincoln proposed in a message to the Congress that in order that the southern people might understand the terms upon which this bloody war should cease it would be necessary for them to abolish slavery by law and to make his emancipation proclamation the law of the land and resume their peaceful relations to the Union.

What happened? The thirteenth amendment, which abolishes slavery, passed the House of Representatives in February, 1865, and the following December of that year every State in the Union had ratified that amendment, and the Congress which met put it in the Constitution of the United States, and every Southern State ratified it as well, and both Houses received that ratification which they had submitted to the Southern States. So I presume that that unquestionably, so far as this body is concerned, settled that controversy as to when the war absolutely ended.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a question in the minds of perhaps some of us as to whether or not there was an act of hostility on the part of any of these claimants toward the Government after June, 1865-whether there could have been on the part of any claimants toward the Government subsequent to June, 1865.

Mr. SISSON. One man could not be disloyal. Mr. BUTLER. Yes, he could. He might raise a good deal of trouble, although he might not bear arms.

Mr. SISSON. You know that there has been one thing the world has been proud of, and the people of the South have been proud of, and the people of America can be proud of, and it is the example set to all the world, that where a great people differed on a great question and they appealed to the supreme court of all courts, that great court of nations, the court of might and war, when one side had lost in that great contest the miracle before the world was that the Confederate soldier went back in his tattered gray jacket to his destroyed country, beat his sword into a plowshare and went to rebuilding his peaceable, good, quiet, loyal citizen. None of them were disloyal who were good Confederate soldiers. Those who were disloyal were not good Confederate soldiers.

Mr. BUTLER. Gen. Grant gave him back his horses so that he might go to work-

Mr. SISSON. I know that the gentleman, from my past knowledge of him, has that good honest heart in him that permits him to say those good things.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not think the cotton of a citizen who was loyal to the Government ought to have been confiscated

after 1860

Mr. SISSON. As a matter of fact, a great many of the people who were loyal to the Government had lost their cotton in identically the same way and have since recovered it. This act leaves the law just exactly as it is here, except we add this one proviso. You removed in your last Congress, when Judge Moon was presiding over the bill, the statute of limitation to permit him to come in to prove his case. You removed the question of loyalty from a section of the old act, and it is now in this act, section 159, I think.

Mr. BUTLER. I think I made the motion to remove it.

Mr. SISSON. Perhaps the gentleman did. I do not know. Mr. MANN. No; the gentleman did not. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] made it.

Mr. SISSON. Now, the only thing that this does is to make section 161 correspond with section 159.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman states that this question of loyalty is still a mooted question as to the period subsequent to June 1, 1865.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think so, as far as any matter of this kind is concerned. It was not, so far as every Confederate soldier was concerned in reference to voting on those constitutional amendments and sending members of the legislature in reference to the adoption of the thirteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution. But the gentleman must be aware, when a great struggle like that has ended, there are a great many things that have to be done through the military arm of the Government before the civil arm can take complete control. Now, to that extent the military law prevailed in certain portions of the South, but just as soon as they could remove that they did so. But, so far as the legal status of the citizen was concerned, it ended June 1, 1865.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Eighteen hundred and sixty-five, as to his loyalty or disloyalty?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Then, the gentleman's contention is that subsequent to June 1, 1865, a citizen was loyal to the Government?

Mr. SISSON. To the Government. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If that is true, what is to prevent his making the allegation and proof essential to the establishment of his claim?

Mr. SIMS. That is where the trouble comes in. They require him to prove his loyalty during the war.

Mr. BUTLER. We can amend it so as to eliminate that.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That feature can be remedied, Mr. SISSON. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Burke] if he has ever seen an affidavit in one of these cases?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. SISSON. Is the gentleman a member of the Masonic fraternity? It is almost as searching as the oath they exact of a Mason.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The affidavit in this case would be in strict accordance with the act, necessarily, and that affidavit would go no further than the declaration of loyalty during this period.

Mr. SISSON. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that so far as I am concerned, I believe that the purpose and intention of this act would enable the citizen to go into court now and make the proof. He ought to be permitted to go into court and make the proof. There has been no decision yet, so far as the Court of Claims is concerned, as to whether or not it is necessary even now under these acts to prove loyalty, but this removes all doubt about it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But, that being the case, there being no decision of the Court of Claims or any other authoritative body on the subject, what is the necessity of this legislation?

Mr. SISSON. If you do not enact it, we do not get into

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But there is nothing of record in the way of opinion or decision that does declare that.

Mr. SISSON. Oh, that is the trouble. You would have to prove that you had been loyal to the Federal Government at all times during the entire struggle.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I will be guided entirely by the argument in this case. I know that the gentleman from Mississippi is making a very able argument, and that he can enlighten me and other members of the committee on the subject. There has been no adjudication of the question of the citizen's loyalty subsequent to June 1, 1865?

Mr. SISSON. Oh, yes; there have been a number of them. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. By the Court of Claims?

Mr. SISSON. Yes; by the Court of Claims. But let us get down now to the facts of this case. There has been no adjudication since the amendment of section 159 of the present civil code.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman says that under section 159 of the present civil code there has been no decision and there has been no determination of the necessity of new legislation?

Mr. SISSON. No. I will read a part of section 184. I will not read all the section, but I will read as to the question of lovalty:

In any case of a claim for supplies or stores taken by or furnished to any part of the military or naval forces of the United States for their use during the late Civil War the petition shall aver that the person who furnished such supplies or stores, or from whom such supplies or stores were taken, did not give any aid or comfort to said rebellion, but was throughout that war loyal to the Government of the United States, and the fact of such loyalty shall be a jurisdictional fact.

Now, that is what I have been endeavoring to state throughout this whole argument—that, so far as the petition was con-cerned, it was necessary that the petition alleged loyalty before the court should get jurisdiction to try the petitioner's right to the property.

Mr. SIMS. Throughout the Civil War?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Would not this be entirely inadequate, then, if that is the provision-this applying only to the period subsequent to June 1, 1865?

Mr. SISSON. If it is presumed that the war did not end, and if the court should hold as a finality that it did not end until June, 1866. Then this cotton could not be recovered for at all unless it was taken after June, 1866. But with the amendment proposed in this bill the question of loyalty would not bar the citizen from recovering his property. The date at which the war, according to all the acts of Congress, ended, however, is June. 1865.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Would this meet the gentle-man's approval: "Provided, That no allegation or proof of loyalty subsequent to June 1, 1865, shall be necessary"? Would that suit the gentleman?

Mr. SISSON. I am not the proponent of the bill.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But the gentleman is one of the ablest advocates of the bill.

Mr. SISSON. I am an advocate of the bill, but, so far as I am individually concerned, I can see no serious objection to that.

Now, there is this point in the case, however, which might do some parties an injustice: We will presume that in the spring of 1865 some of the cotton was taken from a citizen who had not sold it to the Government, and the proceeds were actually turned into the Treasury. The gentleman would not contend that that citizen would not have the right to recover his own property. He ought to have the right to take that which was his own. All the civilized governments take that view in reference to the ownership of private property. Now, as I recollect, the captured and abandoned property act was passed in 1863.

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Therefore it could not be until along in 1864, wherever the Federal Army was in possession of the means of transportation, that this cotton could be taken. I think, as a matter of fact, practically all of this cotton was taken after January 1, 1865, and by far the greater part of it was taken after June, 1865. I am not absolutely sure, however, but that it might do injustice to a few individuals not to permit them to recover prior to June, 1865.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will admit that in determining this proposition the question of loyalty ought to be divided into two periods, namely, the period prior to June 1, 1865, and the period subsequent to that. That would be a fair assumption, would it not? When you come to open the doors of the Treasury to a citizen whose claim is based upon his loyalty to that Government, it is fair to assume that he ought to have been loyal at the time the confiscation took place. Is not that true?

Mr. SIMS. Then it ought to apply to all claims.
Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I am catechizing the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson], who is eminently able to take care of himself.

Mr. SISSON. So far as my own individual opinion of private property is concerned, I do not believe that one government in making war upon another government would have the right, solely because the citizens of one country feel kindly and feel loyal toward the government of that country, to take their private property. At the time the committee reported the legislation which they hoped would reach this case their idea was that they would begin with June, 1865.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Would the gentleman assert that it would be reasonable to take money from the Treasury of the United States to pay for the destruction of property prior to June 1, 1865?

Mr. SISSON. No, sir. I do not believe that a government ought ever or can ever be called upon to pay for the destruction of property, which destruction is an incident to war. In other words, if it becomes necessary for the Government to destroy a house, or to destroy corn or meat or supplies, or property of any kind, although the supplies may belong to a private citizen, I do not believe any government would pay for those supplies whose destruction was necessary, unless at the time of their destruction the officer in charge agreed with the owner, "We will pay you for the property." In some instances that was done in the Southern States.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes; because of the presumed disloyalty of the individual-

Mr. SISSON. I do not think that ought to cut any figure

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That is what I want to get at. Does the loyalty or disloyalty of the claimant in this case cut any figure at all as to his right of recovery?

Mr. SISSON. I think it does. I am going to be just as frank as I know how to be, as I try to be with everybody. I do not believe the Federal Government, the Confederate Government, the English Government, the German Government, or any Government should ever profit by the sale of private property which it takes from the citizen during a struggle. I do not believe that ought to be done.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. No; you say it should not profit by the sale of property taken from the citizen after the struggle is terminated and after the period of disloyalty is consummated. Now, assuming that a citizen prolongs indefi-nitely the period of disloyalty, would the gentleman say that in that case, in spite of the action of the Federal Government, in spite of the surrender of the Federal Government—suppose the individual continued in his disloyalty and during the period of disloyalty suffered a loss such as is supposed to be covered by this litigation-would be be entitled to recover?

Mr. SISSON. I think he would, and I will give the gentleman my reason. I do not believe, in the first place, that one man loyal in his heart, because if one man should become disloyal to the Government he becomes guilty of a crime, and you can punish him in the criminal court. Under our system of government, under our modern system, you can not confiscate the citizen's property

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. You can confiscate his property if he commits a crime.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; you do that, but you do it by imposing upon him a punishment for committing a crime. The man who committed acts disloyal to the Government could be punished in court and could be fined, and therefore you take his property away from him. But you can not take it by governmental action, by an army going down and taking property, and it ought not to do it solely because the man happens to be disloyal. It should be done by due process of law and not by legislative

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman will understand, of course, that my suggestion as to the commission of a crime has no connection with this case. Of course, I did not intend that it should have any bearing on this case.

Mr. SISSON. I understand that. I think the gentleman and can come to an agreement.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. My question is, If the individual subsequent to June 1, 1865, continued in his disloyalty to the Government, would he be entitled to relief under this bill if it became a law?

Mr. SISSON. Well, first I want to understand what is the gentleman's definition of disloyalty. Would it be his disloyalty at heart, or must be manifest it in some act?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. In some overt act.

Mr. SISSON. If the army is in an organized state, every member of that army would be disloyal up until the moment of its surrender, but the moment the soldier surrendered, took his parole, the moment he agrees to lay down his arms against the Government and go back to his home, that moment that citizen's disloyalty ceases.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But not the other citizens who had no connection with the military organization.

Mr. SISSON. That rule would determine the loyalty of every citizen—that the moment he surrenders and his parole is given and he goes home and agrees not to take up arms against the Government. Now, that was the case in 1865.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If the citizens, on June 1, 1865, had surrendered, given up arms, made their peace, renewed their devotion to the Federal Government, then they were loyal citizens, and there is no bar in making that allegation and producing the proof as the law exists to-day.

Mr. SISSON. But unfortunately the law is as I read a moment ago.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I recollect what the gentleman said. Would the gentleman, in the face of that admission, deny that any allegation of proof of loyalty subsequent to June 1, 1865, would be necessary in order to recover?

Mr. SISSON. So far as I am concerned I would be willing to answer the question, if it could settle the entire controversy and the bill could be passed. As far as I am individually concerned I would be willing to accept that sort of a compromise.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. But does the gentleman from Mississippi understand what that language means—subsequent to June 1, 1865?

Mr. BUTLER. I think the gentleman means prior to June 1, 1865

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. No; I do not mean prior to June 1, 1865. These claims here are based on the assumption that these citizens were loyal because the war had ended. There was no disloyalty existing there in their hearts or proven by their acts, but at the time of their loyalty in a period of peace the Federal Government confiscated their property, converted the property into money, and placed it in the Treasury, and they are seeking relief through the courts. My question is, If that is the case, and they were loyal, what is there to bar them against making an allegation and proving it?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania favor extending this requirement of loyalty to all claimants against the United States Government for property taken from them?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I do not propose to enter into any academic discussion of the claims that have been and will be made against the United States Government.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I mean a claim arising to-day.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. This is a concrete proposition, and one of the most important that will arise in this Congress. can be disloyal to the Government unless you say he is dis- It is one to which every Member of this House will give his very best thought. The people who seek to make these recoveries are entitled to recovery if they are loyal and were loyal citizens of the United States and were not at fault and did nothing to defeat the justice of their claims.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina rose.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield further at this time. I desire to say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. Burke] that there is this difficulty about his fixing the period definitely. For example, quite a number of the Confederate soldiers surrendered prior to June 1, 1865. In fact, practically all of the soldiers had surrendered and nearly all of them were period refer to surrendered, and nearly all of them were paroled prior to June, 1865. Therefore if during the early part of 1865, after the Confederate Government had gone to pieces, after practically all of Tennessee, all of Mississippi, practically all of Louisiana, practically all of the eastern portion of Arkansas, all of Missouri and all of Kentucky had fallen within the Union lines, and during six months prior to this time this property was being taken, then the citizen who lost his property in the beginning of 1865, who himself had surrendered under that sort of an agreement, would be done an injustice. If we could arrive at the exact moment at which the citizen himself ceased to be disloyal to the Government, I would have no objection myself to fixing that date, but I fear that in many instances an injustice would be done to a great many people who ought to be paid for the cotton which was improperly taken from them.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think the claimant would be entitled to recover if he could not prove his loyalty on June 1, 1865, the day on which his property was taken? Under the suggested amendment, if he were not capable of proving his loyalty on June 1, 1865, the day on which his property was confiscated, does the gentleman think he ought to be entitled to recover? That is the crux of this whole proposition.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know that the gentleman and I could get any closer together than we have already gotten on this proposition. My proposition is that the private citizen should never lose his property so that the other government gets the benefit of his property. I think that is confiscation. To be frank, I think it is confiscation without due process of law. I think it is unjust and unfair. We would like to have all wars nice little affairs, but all wars are cruel. They are terrible. Therefore when a government is prosecuting a war and bom-barding a city, it is utterly impossible for the government to direct its shots exactly where they will hit the fellow who is in arms. It is necessary that the government shall prosecute the war to a rapid and successful conclusion. Therefore no civilized government has ever paid for property which was destroyed as an incident of war. Nobody would ask the Federal Government to do it. I think he would be a very peculiar man who would ask the Federal Government to pay for property which was destroyed in the prosecution of a war, but I think it just and fair that if the Federal Government takes a private citizen's property and then goes into the market with that property and sells it and covers the net proceeds of the property into the Treasury, that the Government pay it back to the citizen, even though he had been disloyal. It is just and fair that he get it, even if at the time they took the property he was I think the Government should pay him back what it took away from him. I hope I have made my position plain.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman has, and my heart is with the gentleman as a general proposition that the Government should be both merciful and generous in all legislation affecting a period of this kind.

Mr. CARLIN. And just.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And just, but the question in my mind, and it is a serious one, is whether or not the Government can go to the extent of paying out of its Treasury money that has been converted into it from the sale of property taken from individuals who were not loyal-who were positively disloyal-at the time the act of confiscation took place.

Mr. SISSON. I can realize fully how the gentleman's feeling would be in reference to this matter-perfectly honest and perfectly fair, as he is just as good as I am-and he can well understand that perhaps I would take a somewhat different view from what he does, maybe due to our peculiar environments and to the history and traditions of the respective sections in which we live, but I appreciate fully the gentleman's position and fairness, and, so far as I am individually concerned, I state without hesitation that if we could settle this matter upon that theory-while I do not agree with the gentleman in all his conclusions—and make June, 1865, the date at which the disloyalty should cease and the loyalty begin and all cotton taken after June, 1865, should be paid for provided the of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Watkins]?

citizen could satisfy the Court of Claims that it was his cotton or that he was the heir to the party whose cotton was taken, I would be willing to settle it just that way if I could, but, of course. I am not in charge of the bill and could not do so.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but in regard to the question of international law I understood the gentleman to say that if two countries were at war neither one of them would be allowed to make any profit out of the property of a private citizen of the other country. Did I understand

Mr. SISSON. I think that is true.
Mr. WILLIS. How does the gentleman apply that theory to the well-known doctrine with respect to contraband of war as recognized in international law?

Mr. SISSON. A contraband of war is based upon the doctrine that each government has the right of self-defense; therefore, to deprive the other government of the articles that have been agreed upon is proper, and those articles which are contraband of war now are very much less than articles which were contraband of war in the savage age of the world's history, because in the savage age of the world's history everything could be taken and a private citizen could be sold into slavery and you could bring in triumphant entry into your home a citizen chained to your chariot wheels. But governments have gotten more merciful, governments have become more civilized and have gotten upon a higher plane of thought and action, and it is something that we all ought to be proud of that we are permitted to live in an age when contraband of war has been so much restricted, for only those things which tend to prolong a war and tend to prolong the suffering and tend to prolong bloodshed have been construed to be contraband of war.

Mr. WILLIS. Just one more question. Does the gentleman think that cotton should properly have been considered contraband of war?

Mr. SISSON. Not under any circumstances. For instance, you could not take your cotton and eat it, you could not make powder out of it. Ordinary clothing is not contraband of war, or shoes

Mr. WILLIS. How about money?

Mr. SISSON. Well, money, of course-Mr. WILLIS. Now, cotton was money.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think the Confederate money would ever have been contraband of war. But seriously, for I consider the gentleman asked the question in good faith-

Mr. WILLIS. Oh, yes.

Mr. SISSON. There is no question but that cotton when sold to the Confederate Government was a proper contraband of war, because it then became an instrument in the hands of the enemy for the purpose of prosecuting the war, and therefore the Federal Government had the right to deprive the other Government of it. It is upon that theory, upon the theory of justice and in the interest of humanity and for the purpose of preventing bloodshed that the nations have made certain articles contraband of war.

Now, I do not know that there is anything I could say in support of this proposition more than I have said.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I will not delay the House but a few minute

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair ask the gentleman is he for or against the bill? Mr. SIMS. Oh, I am for it.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been tacitly understood that discussion would be alternated, and the Chair would like to know if any gentleman opposed to the bill desires to speak?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know whether the gentleman from Mississippi has used as much time as the gentleman from Ohio or not. I do not desire to use more than 10 minutes in connection with this question of loyalty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say to the gentleman that he had promised to recognize the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] after some one had spoken against the bill. If there is no one now desiring to speak against the bill, the Chair feels that he should recognize the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. How has the time so far been divided?

Mr. MANN. How has the time so far been divided?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it has been divided equally, barring the fact that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Willis] did not take his hour as intended.

Mr. MANN. I take it the gentlemen who desire to speak in favor of the bill are entitled to recognition. Did not the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] speak in the time

Mr. SISSON. No; I did not. I spoke in my own right. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi was beaking in his own right. There was a tacit understanding. speaking in his own right. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLERI

Mr. SIMS. I did not want over 5 or 10 minutes right on this point.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose or intention to detain the House for any considerable length of time, but I do feel it is important in discussion of this measure that we get back to the question itself and discuss that for a few moments, and if we can find out exactly what is involved here, then to dispose of this question and eliminate all these side issues that have been injected into it up to the present

Now, section 162, which is a part of the Judiciary Code, and which was adopted and approved on March 3, 1911, provides that the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the claims of those whose property was taken subsequent to June 1, 1865, under the specifications of the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863, entitled:

An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds and insurrection in districts within the United States.

And this bill simply provides for adding one provision to that section. That is all there is involved in it, and that provision is simply this:

Provided, That no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of such claims.

When Congress passed this act, section 162 of the Judiciary Code, it was the intention at the time that this money which is in the Treasury of the United States should be refunded to the people to whom it belonged. That was their intention, and it was evident at the time, and there was no question about it. Subsequent to that there has arisen some idea that possibly the question of loyalty is involved. If it had arisen at that time there is no doubt that it would have been incorporated in section 162, because Congress had the power to say that this money that had lain in the Treasury all these years should go back to the people to whom it belonged. That was the purpose, that was what was intended, and that was what was desired. It not having accomplished that beyond question, this idea of loyalty being involved and having arisen, and being presented since, this provision is intended to remove that, no more and no less.

This money has been in the Treasury of the United States for all these years. It belongs to these people who are mentioned in the report of the Treasury Department. They have furnished a list of them, which is included in the Senate document printed in the Forty-third Congress. As to the question of whether it belongs to these people there can be no doubt.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Willis] asserted a moment ago in his argument that it belonged to the United States, that it was not a trust fund, but the propery of the Government, and that if these claims were allowed and were paid it would come out of the general funds of the Treasury and would be that much of a charge upon the Treasury of the United States. He is incorrect in that if the Supreme Court is correct, because the Supreme Court has held, in so many words, in the case of Klein, which is decided in Thirteenth Wallace, that this is a trust fund and that the Government of the United States is simply the trustee of these parties, holding the money for the time to arrive when they establish and prove their claim and time to arrive when they establish and prove their claim and receive the proceeds arising therefrom.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER. Right on that point, yes; I yield with pleasure.

Mr. WILLIS. Has the gentleman considered the Haycraft case, which was a later case than the Klein case, in which it distinctly and clearly says it is not a trust fund? that is held in the Haycraft case. It says so clearly and definitely. I wondered whether his attention had been called to that decision or not. It is a later decision than the one in the Klein case.

Mr. CANDLER. Does it profess to overrule the Klein case? Mr. WILLIS. Oh, absolutely. Mr. CANDLER. I do not agree with my friend. In this case it says, in so many words:

We conclude, therefore, that the title to the proceeds of the property which came to the possession of the Government by capture or abandomment, with the exceptions already noticed, was in no case divested out of the original owner. It was for the Government itself to determine whether these proceeds should be restored to the owner or not. The promise of the restoration of all rights of property decides that question affirmatively as to all persons who availed themselves of the proffered prefere

I am frank to say if that case has been overruled I am not advised of it, and my information is, after investigation made by myself and by others, that it has not been overruled, but is the United States. That being true, the only question which is presented here is whether or not at this late day you will continue to interpose technical objections which have no substance to them in order to prevent the return of the money to these people that is held by the Government of the United States simply as a trust fund, acting as a trustee for these people. I do not believe after all these years that have passed and gone you will continue to resist the return of the money which honestly belongs to these people, but that in these days of peace, plenty, prosperity, and happiness, which is broadcast in the land, we will arise above technicality and do that which is just and which is right, that which ought to have been done a long time ago, in order to meet the standard of justice and the standard of right when it is applied to these people.

The gentleman referred to other bills and stated what was volved in them. There is no bill pending before this House at involved in them. this time except this little simple bill which is now under consideration, and what may be contained in other bills of course has nothing to do with this bill.

As I said at the outset, the question for us to determine at this time is what is involved in this identical bill itself, and as to whether it is just, and as to whether it is right, and as to whether it should be passed or not, and not to consider in any degree any other bill which may come up hereafter. such another bill does come up, it will be considered on its own merits and be disposed of as may be just and right at that time. So, I say, let us eliminate everything else and simply take this bill itself into consideration and determine it upon its merits and pass upon the justice of its provisions; and when we shall have done that we shall have discharged our duty

Now, I do not care to detain the committee further. wanted to call attention to this one proposition which is presented in this bill, and to impress upon the Members of the House the fact that propositions in other bills have nothing to do with this bill at the present time. If these other bills come up later, they will be considered and disposed of when the time arrives for their consideration.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CANDLER. I will yield for any question that occurs on this point, but I do not care to take up these outside matters. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman does not think that I would attempt to argue an irrevelant question.

Mr. CANDLER. I did not insinuate anything like that.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Do I not understand that the gentleman from Mississippi made a very able argument in support of another House bill of this character?

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman please designate the

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That is the Byrnes bill. Mr. CANDLER. I have not seen it and do not know its provisions. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I can inform the gentleman that the bill he refers to has not been considered, and that therefore the gentleman from Mississippi has not spoken upon it. Mr. CANDLER. I have not seen its provisions, and therefore

I could not express my opinion about it. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I understood that the gentleman from Mississippi made a very able speech in favor of that

Mr. CANDLER. No, sir. The gentleman from Mississippi made a speech in favor of the consideration of a bill of his own. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I know he did make a very able speech in favor of a bill.

Mr: CANDLER. I thank you for insisting I made a "very able speech" on that bill, but the thing I am now seeking to impress upon the House is that we should not consider extraneous matters or other bills that may come up later, but to only consider this bill at this time. The future will take care of itself. [Applause.] We should consider this and dispose of it now, and when we shall have done that, we will have done I do not want to detain the House, but again urge upon well. the Members the importance of considering this bill and disposing of it, and the sooner the better, and thereby we will do tardy justice to patriotic citizens who have waited long, but I hope waited not in vain. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Roddenbery having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 6380) to incorporate the American Hospital of Paris, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Gallinger, Mr. Curtis, and Mr. Martine of New Jersey as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. Clarke of Arkansas and Mr. Burnham members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Department of Justice.

ALLEGATION AND PROOF OF LOYALTY IN CERTAIN CASES.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I was at first opposed to this bill, but on further examination as to the title of this property I am led to favor it.

I wish to speak now very briefly concerning it, because I think a misapprehension rests upon the minds of many Members on this side of the House as to the status of the title of this property. This money is not the property of the United States. This property, of which the proceeds have been paid into the Treasury of the United States, has never been confiscated. The title to it has never been divested. It is still held in trust for the owners, and it never can become the property of the United States or be made available to the people of the United States except by some further act of confiscation at this late date.

Now, that is the precise holding in the Klein case, which has been cited by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Willis], who has so vigorously opposed this bill, and yet I doubt very much whether he would be ready at this time to advocate the passage of any further act of confiscation.

Mr. BUTLER. Then, Mr. Chairman, it will require a law, as I understand it, to make it the money of anybody?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It would, most assuredly.
Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman aware that in the Young case, which I mentioned a moment ago-the stenographers have the transcript now in hand, otherwise I could quote the passage—the court says definitely that the bonds to which reference is made are not a trust fund, but belong absolutely to the Government of the United States? That is what the Supreme Court says in the Young case, quoted in the Brandon case.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman refers to a case based on altogether different facts.

Mr. WILLIS. No; that is the case.

Mr. SISSON. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman, but I think the gentleman from Ohio is referring to the contention that is made, that where cotton was sold to the Confederate Government and none of the proceeds ever went into the hands of the original vendor of the cotton, then the Confederate Government became the trustee of the vendor, and the court held that that was not true, that it was the absolute property of the Confederate Government. That, however, has no application to the cases that would come under this bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman from Mississippi is absolutely correct, as will be found from an examina-tion of the case. I wish to read to the House the holding in the Klein case. The syllabus says that—

The act of March 12, 1863, to provide for the collection of abandoned and captured property in insurrectionary districts within the United States, does not confiscate or in any case absolutely divest the property of the original owner, even though disloyal.

And in the dissenting opinion in that case, in which, however, the dissent was based on grounds which are not material to the discussion now being carried on, the author of the dissenting opinion says:

If I understand the present opinion, it maintains that the Government, in taking possession of this property and selling it, became the trustee of all the former owners, whether loyal or disloyal, and holds it for the latter until pardoned by the President, or until Congress orders it to be restored to him.

Now, as has been so often said here, more than a generation has elapsed since the Civil War. The passions which were aroused by that great struggle have subsided, if they have not totally disappeared. The bitterness which was brought about by it has died away. In my judgment it is too late now to originate any new punishments for the acts which were committed at that time. The mantle of charity, if nothing else, ought to be thrown over all of the deeds done at that time. [Applause.] We ought not now to bring up these questions in this manner, which would enlarge rather than restrict the doctrine of confiscation for acts done in time of war, but, on the and could not be paid for under this bill.

contrary, we should now say that peace has so long prevailed that the time for punishment for the acts done in those days has passed, and that they ought to be forgotten.

As I said before, this act takes nothing from the Government. It takes nothing out of the Treasury except in the sense that when a man draws a check on his own account in a bank he removes money from it. In such a case it is money which belongs to him. This money now in the Treasury can never be used by the people of the United States, can never belong to them without some further act of Congress, and I do not believe there is a man in the House who would countenance any action of that kind. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take very much time, but I want to explain first, as I think I can, why there are two bills here substantially for the same purpose, one the Byrnes bill and the other the bill under discussion. The Byrnes bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on War Claims, reported by that committee, and went on the calendar. Speaking for myself, and I think I can speak for every member of the committee, we did not even know that the present bill had been introduced. I do not know what the fact is with reference to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, but it is quite probable that it did not know that the War Claims Committee had a similar bill, and therefore two bills have been reported by two different committees for substantially the same purpose, each bill having been properly referred. In other words, the committees having jurisdiction could have acted in each case.

Some amendments may be offered to this bill when we reach that stage, but if this bill becomes a law it is not my purpose as chairman of the Committee on War Claims, nor do I think it is the purpose of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] to press that bill for passage at all, it being practically for the same purpose. I say this to remove the idea that there was a "system" by which a number of hills were to be passed, one to by which a number of bills were to be passed, one to accomplish one purpose, another another, and each to dovetail into a general system by which money could be gotten out of the Treasury which otherwise could not be taken out of it.

On the question of loyalty I wish to be heard for a few moments. Before the Civil War the Court of Claims was open to the people of the South as well as to anybody else to assert claims against the Government of the United States; but when certain States were declared to be in a state of insurrection and war, the people of those States were not permitted to bring suit in the Court of Claims, but exception was made that persons bringing suit in the Court of Claims must prove their loyalty as a jurisdictional fact in order to get into the court at all. Even now the court will not hear any proof whatever on the merits of a claim, when the question of loyalty applies, until that question is settled by the court.

It is jurisdictional. If the court finds against the loyalty of the claimant there is no use in taking any proof in reference to the value of the property.

Now, with reference to the act of 1863, I did not know that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] was going to refer to the decision he has, but I am glad he did so, for I intended to do so myself. I understand the decision read holds that the question of loyalty has no relation to the title of the Government to captured and abandoned property, and holds same in trust for the true owners.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. SIMS. Certainly. Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not wish to make an erroneous statement?

Mr. SIMS. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Tennessee must be familiar with the fact that under the act of 1863 no person could recover in the Court of Claims who had given aid and comfort to the rebellion.

Mr. SIMS. I understood the decision of the court which was read held that captured and abandoned property, under the act, was not the property of the United States.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman's statement was that the act did not have anything in it as to a question of loyalty.

Mr. SIMS. Now this bill, I think erroneously, limits the claims arising under it to June 1, 1865. I think it ought to apply to all of them because the bugaboo of Confederate ownership of the cotton has nothing in it. In order to recover the claimant must prove his ownership. It would be an absolute defense to show that the Confederate Government owned the property or that an individual owned it other than the claimant. That is a positive requirement of the owner of a property in any suit, to show title is in himself. Consequently the bugaboo that a large amount of this cotton did belong to the Confederate Government has nothing to do with this matter

What is loyalty? Mere negative do-nothing loyalty does not count for anything in the court; it is the loyalty that is active and affirmative, loyalty that can be shown and proved by affirmative acts. But I want to say that it was a much harder matter to be affirmatively loyal in the South than it was north of the Ohio River. More penalty and more misfortune might follow an act of loyalty in the South than it would in the North. In the North a man might get some credit for it, and at heart hope that the Confederates would win. Some men in the South may have failed to show any affirmative evidence of loyalty when, perhaps, in their hearts they were very loyal. We should look at the surrounding circumstances at the time that the property was taken. But the court has held that loyalty must be established by affirmative acts. The gentleman from Pennsylvania wants an amendment to this bill so that a man should show loyalty by an affirmative act after 1865. When the war was flagrant in the Southern States the presumption was that all were disloyal who lived in those States, consequently he wants the benefit of it and the applicant must prove his loyalty. Now, does the gentleman from Pennsylvania want a statute that any party suing for property taken after June 1, 1865, must prove by affirmative acts his loyalty in order to go into the court of the country or the Nation that took the property? Such an amendment ought not to be tolerated for a moment. The presumption is, after the war was over and all armed bodies of men opposing the Government had surrendered, and men who had shot at each other in battle were at home plowing the fields, that then a man could go into the court without establishing affirmatively that he is still loyal or that he has been loyal all the time, or loyal at all. I am surprised that the liberal-minded gentleman from Pennsylvania would advocate an amendment of that kind to a bill; that a person whose cotton was taken after June 1, 1865, should as a condition precedent have to prove that he is or was loyal. You might as well say now that he would have to prove a condition of loyalty in order to go into the courts. The general pre-sumption should be that every man is loyal until proof shows the contrary, and he should not be required to assert it in his petition.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Is not that very presumption which the gentleman now mentions, that every man once having been disloyal continues to be disloyal, the basis of the necessity for this bill? And if that presumption did not exist, would this bill be in the House to-day?

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman's presumption-

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But it is not my presumption. It is the presumption on which this measure is predicated.

Mr. SIMS. The law which the bill is intended to amend provides that the claimant must prove loyalty throughout the war. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman now is discussing my proposed amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Yes. I mean the law as it now stands provides that he must assert and prove loyalty during the Civil War.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If he is presumed to be loyal on the 1st day of June, 1865, and, as a matter of fact, he is loyal, what harm can there come from inserting that amendatory provision in this bill?

Mr. SIMS. If there is a general presumption in favor of his loyalty, why the requirement that he shall prove that he is

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If there is a general presumption in favor of loyalty, why is this bill here at all?

Mr. SIMS. Because it is to amend a law that says his loyalty must be proven throughout the Civil War.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Then it is to fix definitely his status before the Court of Claims, is it not; and if the purpose is to fix it definitely, why not insert the date? Mr. SIMS. This is to waive the question of loyalty as a defense for property taken after June 1, 1865, and has nothing to do with the condition of a citizen who had property taken after that time occupied prior to that time, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to amend this bill by requiring the citizen whose property is taken after all reason and cause for being disloyal has ceased to prove that he was a loyal citizen at the time it was taken. Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman wishes to amend the bill so as to carry out the very provision that the gentleman from Tennessee says exists as a matter of fact, and that is that the citizen was loyal on and after June 1, 1865, and that because he was loyal then he is entitled to recover, and should not suffer because of the act of the Federal Government. The gentleman and I do not disagree in one iota except as to the insertion of this date.

Mr. SIMS. If there is a general presumption of loyalty, then there is no need of making proof of the general presumption as a jurisdictional fact.

Mr. BUTLER. When does that presumption arise?

Mr. SIMS. We propose to make it arise from and after the 1st of June, 1865—from that date on.

Mr. BUTLER. It does not arise when the war was legally held to be ended?

Mr. SIMS. For some purposes, as has been expressly stated here, August 20, 1866, was declared by act of Congress to be the end of the war, but does the gentleman from Pennsylvania want the whole country to think, and the people who follow us and read our history to think, that we became loyal only or ceased to be disloyal after August 20, 1866?

Mr. BUTLER. No; I do not want anything of the kind. Mr. SIMS. Then why, as a jurisdictional fact, does the gentleman want citizens of the United States south of the Ohio River, or those residing in the States in insurrection, to prove loyalty in order to go into a United States court to recover property taken after the war had ended but prior to August 20, 1866? It would simply be practically making the legislation useless to put in this requirement. To compel a man whose property was taken after June 1, 1865, to go to court and allege that he was loyal from that time on, and compel him to prove that before he can take one syllable of proof as to the value of the cotton taken, would be to make the legislation useless

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Would it be useless if the claimant were capable of proving that fact absolutely?

Mr. SIMS. If he were capable of proving the fact, he could recover his claim. Was not almost every man north of the Ohio River during the war capable of proving his loyalty? And yet we do not require that of him.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But there is no sectional line drawn in this bill, and there is no reference to it at all. Mr. SIMS. The facts of history draw it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The facts of history might draw it.

Mr. SIMS. And the law requiring proof of loyalty may draw it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman now, by this legislation and by his admission on the floor of this House, has established a period during which he admits there was an active hostility and a real disloyalty and after which there was no hostility, and after which there was peace, harmony, love, and devotion to the Republic; and during that latter period, he says, it is an imposition to compel the individual to state as a matter of fact in his pleading that he was loyal on the day after the war and on the day his property was confiscated for which he desires compensation from the United States.

Mr. SIMS. I do so, and think it is a reflection on him. The presumption is that, outside a state of hostility and war, all people are loyal to the flag under which they live; and to say that a citizen of the United States has to prove loyalty to the Nation before he can go into a court to have his grievance adjusted is a reflection upon every person to whom such a law can apply. You might prove it as a defense that a man was an outlaw and no longer entitled to go into the courts of the country, but I know of no such defense.

Mr. BUTLER. If the gentleman will permit, I am not asking the gentleman for the purpose of asking questions-Mr. SIMS. I know that.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to ask why the 1st of June is fixed? Mr. SIMS. We have fixed this arbitrarily because of the fact, as the gentleman knows, there was no state of organized insurrection or a state of war after that time, and it seems to me absolutely, with all due respect, to be raising a technical defense against just claims to require anything of the sort. is wholly unnecessary and useless. I do not care even if he was a Confederate soldier who came home and raised the cotton and it was taken from him after June 1, 1865, even if he was a paroled soldier, to say that he must go into court and affirmatively allege that he had not violated the terms of surrender, in order to have a standing in the court, is wrong. Much of this cotton was planted after the war ended, and harvested, and it was taken after the war was ended.

Now, I am like the gentleman from Mississippi as to the property bought by the Confederate Government to which title had passed. I do not see there is any reason, unless as a matter of charity, that we should pay those claims, and this bill does not provide anything of that sort. I do not know how many of these claims are left unpaid, but the Attorney General seems, from the communication read by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS], to speak about depriving the Government of the defense of limitations. There is not a man in this House who will plead the statute of limitations to any admitted liability against himself.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman inform me—this fund was originally about $25,000,000 or $26,000,000?

Mr. SIMS. I do not know how much it was. Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman can not state?

Mr. SIMS. About $10,000,000 is my recollection. Mr. BUTLER. A reduction has been made in it?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. Can the gentleman tell how that reduction was made upon proof of claims against it?

Mr. SIMS. By payment of claims out of it. Mr. BUTLER. Was loyalty in the case of those claims insisted upon?

Mr. SIMS. I can not answer positively about that. Mr. BUTLER. The gentleman does not know?

Mr. SIMS. No, I do not; but I will say there is not a man who will plead the statute of limitations to an admitted liability. There is not a gentleman in this House who would as a man do a thing of that sort. Why would he get up here and ask that the Government of the United States should have a lower standard of honor than the citizenship of the United States? Here are these claims paid into the United States Treasury. They are there now. As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green] showed, the Government has no title to the money, but is the mere custodian of it, and yet the Attorney General of the United States wants to plead the statute of limitations as a custodian.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I will say the statute of limitations was removed by the statute to which this is an amendment, and it is put in this statute simply to make all in one statute, but the limitation was removed by a previous statute.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman regard the pleading of the statute of limitations as an evil?

Mr. SIMS. I would regard any man or any government pleading the statute of limitations to an admitted liability as being morally wrong.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Then, if that is true, is it not a greater evil to establish a statute of limitations, which the gentleman does in this bill?

Mr. SIMS. No, sir.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If the claim is just, why establish a limitation at all, as he does in this bill, after January 1, 19153

Mr. SIMS. I am not in favor of it, and it is not in the bill that the Committee on War Claims reported.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If it is an evil here, does the gentleman defend it at all?

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman as a lawyer understands the policy of the statute of limitations.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I do not see any evil in it. Mr. SIMS. There is an evil in it when you recite it in a case where the person is sued sui juris.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If these claims are right, why should any man be limited to any period of time for the recovery?

Mr. SIMS. I am not in favor of it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman move to amend the bill accordingly?

Mr. SIMS. I will be glad to vote for such an amendment.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I will be glad to see you do it. Mr. SIMS. I will be glad to strike it out. The object of the statute of limitations is to quiet titles and cause people to settle matters while they are fresh in the minds of everyone, and to avoid perjury or temptation to perjury. If these claims had to be proven by witnesses at this late day, the temptation of in-terested parties to color their testimony and swear falsely would be so great that the House ought to hesitate to open the doors of the courts to them, but when the money has been in the Treasury of the United States so long that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary—

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And the loss to the owners of that money

Mr. SIMS. Yes; and the loss to those who were reported to the Treasury as being the ones who lost it. The Treasury has had it long enough that, if it had been put out at simple interest, it would have doubled two or three times, and with the amounts admitted, shall we, representing the people of the United States, refuse to open the doors of the courts to persons who own this property and those persons who will have to establish their cases according to the law and rules of evidence as required by the Court of Claims?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. On that question of the statute of limitations, section 162, which is amended and reenacted, or limitations, section 162, which is amended and reenacted, or confiscated as an incident of that war or that antagonism, he proposed, rather, to be amended and reenacted by this bill, can not come to-day to the Treasury of the United States with provides that full jurisdiction as given to the court to adjudge said claim, any statute of limitations to the contrary notwith-This is not a new provision at all, so far as the statute of limitations is concerned. It is simply put in to make the clause complete.

Mr. SIMS. I understand that; but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Willis] very eloquently argued the benefit of the statute of limitations, and he seemed to be borne out by the Department of Justice saying it would remove a defense which now existed.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman a question for information.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I heard a great deal here about the names of certain claimants in some document. claims been adjudicated by the Court of Claims? Have those

Mr. SIMS. No; it simply gives them the opportunity to go there.

Mr. COX of Indiana. That opens the doors?

Mr. SIMS. That opens the doors.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is this bill on the part of these claimants introduced because the law has already cut them out?

Mr. SIMS. It is for those who did not file while the law permitted filing. They have been shut out, of course.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there any other fact in the way of making out these claims except the requirement that proof of loyalty shall be made by the claimant?

Mr. SIMS. I think that is all.

Mr. FOWLER. And when that is proved, then that gives the claimant an opportunity to make his proof complete. Is that true?

Mr. SIMS. In the Court of Claims. That is my understanding.

Mr. Chairman, I did not aim to occupy as much time as I have, as this bill is still to be considered under the five-minute rule; but I hope that neither the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Burke] nor any other gentleman will offer an amendment that will require anybody to prove loyalty in order to recover for property taken subsequent to June, 1865, as a jurisdictional fact that must be established before they can even submit the evident merits of their claims to the consideration of the court.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. With reference to the last suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] and the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green], we are not concerned as to what particular fund this money is applied in the Treasury of the United States, so long as it remains there. The question before this committee is, Shall it be removed from the Treasury; and if so, by whom? And the question in my mind is, as this appears to be advanced as an equitable proposition, whether or not the individual who seeks the removal of that money from the Treasury of the United States to his own pocket shall do so with clean hands.

It is perfectly obvious to me that there can be no legitimate objection whatsoever to the amendment that I have suggested, and to which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] has so vigorously objected. He says, in substance, that it would be an insult to compel any man south of Mason and Dixon's line to make an affidavit as to his loyalty. Mr. Chairman, the absurdity of that argument is apparent from the fact that every Member of this House, the gentleman from Tennessee included, when he entered this House at the beginning of this session, and at the beginning of every session since he has rendered able service in the American Congress, has raised his hand before the Speaker and took the oath that he would be loyal to and defend the Constitution of the United States. Was there any insult, either actual or implied, in compelling Members from the North and South to do that? Was there anything degrading in it? Was there anything humiliating? And if a Member of the House of Representatives, chosen by his people to perform the high function which we are sent here to perform, can do so without surrendering his honor or his self-respect, why can not a claimant who seeks to place his hand in the Treasury of the United States go at least to that extent without being humiliated or being deprived of any inherent rights as a citizen?

The gentleman from Tennessee says we are living now in a period in which the war should be forgotten. Every American should subscribe to that suggestion, and I will go one step further and say that it was the duty of every man who now seeks to drain the Treasury of the United States to have forgotten the war after June, 1865, and if he did not forget the war and prolonged his antagonism to the Government, and if during that active hostility to the Government his property was clean hands and is not entitled to the equitable relief which is sought to be granted by this measure.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Very gladly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean to say that the cath now required of Members of this House goes further than the oath now required of these claimants under this statute to enable them to recover?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I did not. The oath required in the amendment which I have suggested appertains to the loyalty of a citizen in a time of peace in this country, when, as the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Tennessee declare, every citizen was presumed to be loyal; and if he was presumed to be loyal, I am willing to have the presumption coincide with the fact that he was loyal, and I want the record to show it. Every Member of this House is presumed to defend and support the Constitution of the United States, and I am willing in that case to have the presumption and the actuality harmonized and encouraged by taking my official oath. And inasmuch as we do take that oath in accordance with law and custom, I can see no humiliation, no surrender of my rights, no detraction from my dignity in appearing before the Speaker and taking the oath to which I referred.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. With the gentleman's permission, I would inquire a little further, if the gentleman thinks it would be proper to require Members of Congress to take an oath similar to the one required of claimants under this statute?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I would say that if a Member of the House were seeking to take from the Treasury of the United States money based upon a transaction 50 years old, at a time when his loyalty to the Republic may have been in question, it would be perfectly proper to compel him to make the declaration that at the time of the act complained of he was loyal to the Union and entitled to relief at that time, because if he was not entitled to relief at the hour of the confiscation he is not entitled to relief now, nor would he be 100 years from

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the gentleman puts it on that ground, is he not aware that under the laws of nations the property of noncombatants is, as a rule, exempt from seizure?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That may possibly be.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And that this provision as to proof of loyalty goes much beyond that.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But the proposed amendment only states that he was a noncombatant on June 1, 1865.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Oh, no; it goes much further than

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. It simply states that he was loyal in June, 1865. To be disloyal involved the same offense as being a combatant. There is no question about that. The as being a combatant. There is no question about that. The disloyalty is established by his attitude toward the Government at that time. The gentleman will not contend that if he was disloyal at the time, whether it was in bearing arms or in giving aid and comfort to another enemy of the Republic, it would make any difference. If he was disloyal at noon on the 1st day of June, 1865, and at noon on the 1st day of June, 1865, the Government confiscated his property, as an incident to and during his disloyalty, he is not entitled to relief. There can be no hardship in compelling him to state what my friend says is an obvious fact, that he was loyal on that date and that he then sustained and was then maintaining the same status of loyalty to the Government as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green] now sustain with reference to the Government and with reference to this House.

The gentleman says it is a shame and an imposition upon citizens of this Republic that the Attorney General should plead the statute of limitations after half a century of time has passed, during which time the party to which he belongs has been in control of the Government. Yet now at this time the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] and the proponents of this bill establish a statute of limitation in the very act now pending before the committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is not the gentleman aware that this bill does not bring forward the statute of limitations, but that it was in the statute and is there now without this bill?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman knows that in italics on the first page, in the second section of this bill, there appears a provision which in itself is a statute of limitation, and which in itself controverts the argument of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green] and of the gentleman from Tennessee behalf of a government against a citizen of that government. If it should work in this case and in this measure, which they propose and which the gentleman from Iowa advocates, why should it not in a greater degree obtain with reference to au act occurring nearly 50 years ago?

Mr. SISSON. In view of the fact that the clause relating to loyalty has always been in the laws since the Civil War, does the gentleman think it quite fair to say that the Government ought to invoke the statute of limitations, when the parties have been prevented by that very statute from bringing the suit?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The contention of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] is that it is fundamentally improper for the Government to plead the statute of limitations against a citizen and an innocent claimant.

Mr. SISSON. I do not know that I go quite so far as the

Mr. SISSON. I do not know that I go quite so far as the gentleman from Tennessee does, but in this particular case—
Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I do not believe the gentleman from Mississippi will go that far. I have not found any two gentlemen, advocates of this bill, who did agree.

Mr. SISSON. But in this particular case the fact that the citizen could not bring the suit would be at least an extenuation and a reason why he had not brought it prior to that time.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. There have been 50 years of legislation and legislative bodies during which that statute could have been removed.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes.
Mr. SISSON. The gentleman realizes that the temper of the country in former times was entirely unlike the temper of the country now; and he realizes also that we sometimes, perhaps unwisely, take advantage of certain situations in politics that we would not take advantage of in business with each other. And, while it is not necessary to discuss that condition which formerly prevailed, we are all happy that that condition does not now prevail.

Mr. BÜRKE of Pennsylvania. There is no gentleman more happy over the realization of what was once a dream and is now a reality than the gentleman who has the floor; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has the floor, had the honor to present to the House the bill appropriating a quarter of a million dollars to bring about and perfect the great reunion on the battlefield of Gettysburg, in which we hope every Confederate veteran will join with the boys in blue who fought against them in former days. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. In answer to what the gentleman said about the reunion, I want to say that I believe that all Confederate soldiers are going to be there that can get there. [Applause.]

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will come along. I will state further that, much to my gratification and State pride, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania has done her share and will do more to carry out the program both from the standpoint of the treasury and that of hospitality which the gentlemen of the South are so much entitled to. [Applause.]

Now, the fact that this statute of limitations has existed during all this period to my mind, instead of being a basis of criticism, is a vindication of it, because it has been sanctified by the seal of 40 or 50 years of approving history during which men have considered it probably in every Congress, if not formally, at least they have in their minds.

The fact that it has never been removed and still remains the law is in itself a vindication of its right to exist, and if its right to exist in that form and in the form of the amended bill before us is vindicated, what justification can there be for the criticism directed against it by the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Why does the gentleman from Pennsylvania say that the bar of the statute was never removed when it was removed by a clause in the revised code?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I find there is a conflict between gentlemen advocating the bill. The gentleman from Tennessee says the statute of limitations did and does exist, and now the gentleman from Iowa proposes to show that it has been removed and does not exist. I am at a loss to reconcile the arguments of gentlemen behind the bill. I am willing to agree with the gentleman from Iowa if his statement stands alone, and I only disagree with him to the extent that I am justified by the gentleman from Tennessee saying that the statute does exist and that it is to remove that statute practically that this bill is proposed.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I hold the authority in my hand, which the gentleman can examine, or I will read it to him.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I will take the gentleman's statement of fact, or any statement of facts he may make on this floor. We may disagree on a legal proposition, but I state [Mr. Sims] that a statute of limitations should never work in again that I find the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Tennessee in wholly irreconcilable positions. That is my misfortune, because I would like to have the light of both their torches blaze my way.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will pardon me, I did not hear what the gentleman from Tennessee said, but if he made the statement that the statute of limitations now interferes, he is entirely mistaken, because the civil code repealed the statute of limitations in reference to these claims.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If that is true and the statute of limitations does not exist, then what justification is there in the complaint of the gentleman from Tennessee that the Attorney General of the United States has committed an unjust act in pleading the statute of limitations in these cases?

Mr. SISSON. I did not hear the gentleman's statement; but the only trouble now in the way of these claims is the question of loyalty.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That is very true; and I say at this time that any man who seeks to take from the Treasury of the United States under circumstances similar to this, who hesitates to admit his loyalty to the Nation on the date of the confiscation, whether he hesitates because of the fact, or because of false pride, or from any other motive, is not entitled to recover a copper from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a suggestion to the gentleman from Louisiana. I desire to address the House at some length on this bill, and I know that there are a number of Members who are anxious to attend the river and harbor convention. I would like to ask the gentleman from Louisiana whether it would be possible for us to make some agreement as to the closing of debate on the next calendar Wednesday and adjourn now?

Mr. WATKINS. If we can agree on a limit for general debate I should be glad to do so. If we can agree upon a limit of one hour I will be willing to let the bill go over.

Mr. MANN. I would like to have one hour myself. Mr. WATKINS. Well, make it two hours, then.

Mr. MANN. There has not been much time taken by those in opposition to the bill, and I am willing to agree to two hours. Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. SISSON. It is understood, is it, that two hours will be agreed upon in the House?

Mr. MANN and Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear the tentative agreement between the gentleman from Louisiana and the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WATKINS. Quite a number of Members want to attend the river and harbor convention, and a number of Members requested me to give them an opportunity to be away from the I did not care to insist on their presence here during the debate, but if we can get an agreement to close debate in two hours I am willing to let the bill go over.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the Rules Committee have agreed to bring in a special rule permitting consideration of the immigration bill without reference to Calendar Wednesday, I see no objection. But if the Committee on Rules does not propose to bring in a rule of that kind I think we ought to expedite this matter now so that we may reach the bill on Calendar Wednesday notwithstanding.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RODDENBERY], agreeing with him as to the procedure, that if the House should be disposed to proceed to-night I should follow his example and make the point of no quorum, so that I might have some Members present to whom I could address myself.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the gentleman from Georgia that this is in the interest of the expedition of this bill to final conclusion. An agreement in the House to limit the debate to two hours and then take the bill up for consideration under the five-minute rule would be as short a time Mr. RODDENBERY. But that carries this bill over until next Wednesday.

Mr. GARNER. That is true. as one could possibly get consideration of the bill if some one

That is true.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Of course if the Committee on Rules should, according to the letter of the chairman, bring in early this session a special rule to consider the immigration bill, then the immigration matter is not relevant to this subject. However, Members, even new Members like myself, with a small smattering idea of procedure, realize and well recognize that it is but dilly-dallying with legislation and trifling with the people to delay for two or three weeks consideration of the immigration bill and then to pass it with great gusto and let it die in conference or in the Senate. I do not want to be a party by acquiescense, by silence, or by inaction to any procedure that is putting up buncomble on the people of this country by going to them and saying we have passed the immigration bill when we know it is passed under such conditions that it is deader than Hector. That is all I was asking about—to get the inthan Hector. That is all I was asking about—to get the information. Of course I presume the Committee on Rules will bring in the special rule, according to written promise

Mr. GARNER. If the gentleman from Georgia will permit, if he objects to the agreement to limit debate to two hours, carrying the bill over until next Wednesday, unless he had a majority to enable him to rise and limit debate by a vote of the House he would be unable to accomplish his purpose in any event.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Of course most of my preliminaries have been carried on in recent days without a majority being in accord with me. We have long ago abandoned the idea of proceeding with a majority on these matters, especially just before an election and right after an election.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand the gentleman will object to the arrangement made?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Oh, not at all, because I can not anticipate that the Committee on Rules will not bring in a special order for the immediate consideration of the immigration bill.

Mr. MANN. I think myself that the committee ought to, although I am not a member of that committee.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RUCKER of Colorado, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 16314) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the bill (H. R. 16314) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, be limited to two hours, to be divided equally, one half to be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WAT-KINS] asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill H. R. 16314 be limited to two hours, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 26680) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed. (H. Rept. 1262.)

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois reserves all points of order on the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from South Carolina. First, I should like to compliment the gentleman and his committee on being able to report this bill so early in the session. I would like to inquire of the gentleman if it is the intention to have the bill printed as some appropriation bills were printed last year-to show the amounts in figures instead of in words?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This bill will be printed in figures instead of words.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think that is a great reform that is being

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that to-morrow and on each day thereafter when the bill is in order under the rule I shall press for its consideration until final passage.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that those who have spoken upon the bill under consideration to-day (H. R. 16314) be allowed to extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. WATKINS. For five days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this bill under consideration to-day be given five legislative days in which to extend their remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF M'LEAN AGAINST BOWMAN.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to give notice that on next Tuesday I shall call up the privileged resolution in the McLean against Bowman election-contest case.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, may I make an inquiry of the gentleman in reference to that?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I shall be glad to answer any question the gentleman may ask.

Mr. MANN. The legislative appropriation bill will be taken up to-morrow. It might not be finished by next Tuesday; in fact, it would be very unusual if it were finished by that time. Does the gentleman intend to take up the election case on Tuesday in any event or, if the appropriation is not finished, to follow the appropriation bill?

Mr. ANSBERRY. If the appropriation bill is not finished, I shall not insist on the resolution being considered, but under an agreement I have with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] I want to dispose of it by the 12th of the month if possible, for the reason he is going away and I think they are relying on the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] to defend Mr. BOWMAN.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman has an understanding with him, is not necessary for me to make any inquiry.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I do not mean to say that it is agreed to be taken up Tuesday, but I want to get it out of the road.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] gives notice that on next Tuesday he will call up the election case of McLean against Bowman, not to interfere with the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The Chair would like to inquire of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Johnson] if he has any idea how long the legislative appropriation bill will take?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; I do not know, but I hope we will get through this week.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to make the following announcement.

The Clerk read as follows:

By unanimous consent the reference heretofore made of House Executive Documents Nos. 1001, 995, 999, 1003, and 1005 is hereby vacated and said documents are referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 22 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Thursday, December 5, 1912, at 12 o'clock noon.

(Resolutions adopted by the board of directors of the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, Nov. 8, 1912.)

of Electrical Engineers, Not. 5, 2012.

American Institute of Electrical Engineers, New York.

Whereas there are pending before the Congress numerous bills affecting and greatly modifying the patent system in the United States; and Whereas the patent system has been and is a tremendous factor in building up the present industrial prosperity of this country, thereby greatly contributing to the prosperity of the country as a whole; and Whereas any untoward change in the patent situation might diastrously affect this condition of industrial and general prosperity and the conditions contributing to their continual augmentation; and Whereas in view of the intimate relation of the patent system to the general welfare, no action looking toward any radical change in the patent system should be taken without most careful consideration; and sion made up of men from various walks of life and not from any one vocation or interest: Be it Resolved, That the American Institute of Electrical Engineers, acting through its officers and board of directors, respectfully urge the Congress of the United States that they provide for a commission made up of unblased, independent, nonpartisan men of such national standing as will command the respect of the whole country, and chosen from different walks of life, and not more than one from any one calling or interest, and serving without pay. Such commission to hold public hearings and otherwise, as may appear to them best, to make a thorough and careful study of the American patent situation and to prepare and submit a comprehensive report and recommendations to Congress for such changes, if any, as may, as the result of their study, appear to them expedient, whether in the Patent Offide, in the method of court procedure, or in the organic patent law, and recommendations as to the legislation they would propose for effecting said changes. And that we further respectfully urge that the Congress make ample provision for the expenses of said commission; and be it Resolved, That we respectfully urge the Congress of the United States to hold in abeyance all proposed legislation affecting the patent system in whatsoever way until such time as the said commission shall have had ample opportunity to hold the said hearings and make the said study and report; and be it further Resolved, That these resolutions be printed and a copy be sent to each Senator and Representative of the United States who is a member of the Senator and Representative of the United States who is a member of the Senator and Representative of the United States who is a member of the Senator and Representative of the United States who is a member of the Senator of House Committee on Patents.

ment to the paragraph which has just been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, this is probably as far as we shall be able to proceed this morning. It concludes the reading of the amendments so far as concerns those proposed by the committee.

I desire to press the bill for consideration during the morning hour to-morrow, and if Senators have amendments which they wish to present and have voted upon I hope they will then be

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have two amendments. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I have two amendments to offer, to come in on page 264, after line 17. They are two claims for longevity pay, which came in too late to be dealt with by the committee.

Longevity claims have all been allowed, and the committee has gone further and has brought in a clause providing for their being paid without the necessity of going in as separate claims in bills—a general payment. Therefore, I think these two should be included with the other longevity claims.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the committee can accept those amendments. They are in exactly the same class and are governed by the same law and decisions of the courts as the items of that character in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether he expects to accept amendments embracing other classes of claims under the headings as found in this bill?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly not. But I think that in a case like this, where the courts have settled the question and the Court of Claims has made a finding, it being exactly the same as 75 others, the committee ought really to accept the amendment, but outside of cases which come within such classes I do not propose to accept amendments.

Mr. LODGE. A general clause has been put in covering all these claims. They are not open to a single objection, of course.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not rise to make any objection, but I wanted to know what the policy of the chairman of the committee was to be in relation to other amendments that may be offered, because if such amendments are to be offered to this bill, and are to be accepted by the chairman, it seems to me the bill will be opened so widely and loaded so heavily that it will be almost impossible to pass it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say very frankly that I shall oppose, generally, amendments to this bill unless there is some reason so manifest why they should be allowed that the committee can accept them. Otherwise I certainly shall feel like referring them to the Senate and having them discussed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendments proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The Secretary. On page 264, after line 17, it is proposed to

To Frank H. Phipps, of Springfield, Mass., $2,314.17.
To Clifford H. Frost and Frank B. McAllister, trustees under the will of Zealous B. Tower, late of the United States Army, $1,669.51.

The amendments were agreed to. Mr. SHIVELY obtained the floor.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator from Connecticut has an amendment exactly the same as that of the Senator from

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has recognized the Senator from Indiana, who has the floor.

Mr. SHIVELY. Mr. President, I have here an amendment which I think is identical in nature with the amendment just offered, which was accepted by the chairman of the committee. It is an amendment to come in on page 259, after line 4. I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 259, after line 4, it is proposed to insert:

To Thomas Addington, of Winchester, Ind., $78.54.

Mr. CRAWFORD. At what place on page 259 is it to be inserted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On page 259, after line 4. Mr. CRAWFORD. Is that a longevity claim? I will ask the Senator from Indiana to hand it to me, and let it go over until we take up the bill to-morrow.

Mr. SHIVELY. I do not want to take any chances.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I shall probably have no objection to it. Mr. SHIVELY. I think it is exactly the same kind of claim that was presented and which was accepted by the chairman of the committee. I want to add, however, that it seems there has been some change in the print of the bill since I filed this report, so that perhaps that is not precisely the place in the bill where the amendment should appear.

IMPEACHMENT OF ROBERT W. ARCHBALD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Bacon) having announced that the time had arrived for the consideration of the articles of impeachment against Robert W. Archbald, the respondent appeared with his counsel, Mr. Worthington, Mr. Simpson, and Mr. Robert W. Archbald, jr.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives appeared in the seats provided for them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will make proclamation.

The Assistant Sergeant at Arms (Mr. Cornelius) made the usual proclamation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal of the last sitting of the court will be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I would raise the question of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire makes the point of no quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Cullom Curtis Davis Dixon Smith, Ariz. Smith, Ga. Smith, Md. Smith, Mich. Smith, S. C. Ashurst McLean Martin, Va. Martine, N. J. Bailey Bankhead Massev Borah du Pont Myers Fletcher Smoot Stephenson Sutherland Swanson Newlands O'Gorman Brandegee Bristow Foster Gallinger Gardner Oliver Brown Overman Bryan Overman Page Penrose Perkins Perky Pomerene Richardson Guggenheim Hitchcock Johnson, Me. Johnston, Ala. Thornton Townsend Warren Burnham Burton Clapp Clark, Wyo. Clarke, Ark. Wetmore La Follette Works Crane Crawford Culberson Lea Lodge McCumber Root Shively

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAM-BERLAIN] is absent necessarily on business of the Senate. I make that announcement for the day.

Mr. PAGE. On account of the continued illness of my colleague [Mr. DILLINGHAM], he is absent from the city.

Mr. WORKS. The senior Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones is necessarily absent on business of the Senate. this announcement for the day.

Mr. SHIVELY. My colleague [Mr. Kern] is unavoidably absent from the Senate. I make this announcement to stand for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the call of the roll of the Senate 65 Senators have responded to their names. quorum of the Senate is present. The Secretary will read the Journal of the last session of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment was read.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I should like to hear read again what is in the minutes as to the description of the papers which were subject matter of the vote. As I understood it, it did not seem to me to be correct

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the item.

The Secretary read as follows:

Pending the examination of the witness, Mr. Webb offered in evidence copy of an assignment by E. J. Williams to William P. Boland of two options covering a culm bank known as Katydid, executed on the 5th of September, A. D. 1911.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is correct.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no objections to the Journal, it will be considered as approved.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I ask that I may be sworn. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators who are present who have not heretofore been sworn will advance to the desk and take the oath.

Mr. BANKHEAD and Mr. LEA advanced to the Vice President's desk, and the oath was administered to them by the President

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I offer the following order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That such briefs and citations of authorities as have already been prepared by the managers on the part of the House and counsel for the respondent be filed with the Secretary and printed in the Record for the immediate use of Senators.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I thought the Senate had indicated its pleasure yesterday to await the disposition of the matter of presenting the briefs until the argument of the case was to be had.

I wish to say, Mr. President, assuming the ruling of the Senate yesterday to be to the effect that the managers would not be expected to bring any brief to-day, they have not brought a brief into the Senate at this time. If, however, Mr President, the Senate sees fit to adopt that order the managers will acquiesce in it and will at the earliest practicable moment bring into the Senate the brief which they have prepared—and to which perhaps they may wish to add a little between now and the time of its presentation—and file it in accordance with the order, so that it may be printed.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We, too, Mr. President, had assumed that that matter would come up later in the trial. But very soon after the brief of the managers shall be filed, of which we will be furnished a copy, of course, we will submit our brief

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the order which has been read from the desk? The Chair hears none, and it will be considered as having been unanimously ordered.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, may I at this point make one correction in the Record? On page 98, in the righthand column, five paragraphs from the bottom, the question was, "I understand that when the note was gone," and so forth. It should read "when the note was drawn."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That correction is recognized as proper by all, and it will be made.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I would like to ask whether we can be furnished with a copy of the proceedings each day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We have none on our desks.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will direct that there be furnished each day to the counsel and to the managers a sufficient number of copies. The Chair is informed that they are now upon the desks of the counsel. Mr. WORTHINGTON. I meant the Congressional Record. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will direct that the managers and the counsel for the respondent be furnished with copies of the Record also each day.

Mr. Manager WEBB. May I now ask that Mr. E. J. Williams be recalled as a witness?

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, my brother Webb was not at the session held by the managers this morning. He was detained elsewhere, but all the managers with the exception of my brother Webb were present. It was called to our attention that a certain witness who has been subpœnaed announced that he did not intend to come here unless brought on process issued by the Senate. It appeared yesterday, Mr. President, from reading the returns of the Sergeant at Arms, that Mr. J. H. Rittenhouse, an important witness in this case, had been regularly subposnaed to attend and was required to be here yesterday. He was not here yesterday. He is not here to-day. He is the witness who, we are informed, said he would not come unless brought here by process of the Senate.

Therefore, Mr. President, I ask to have called the officer who served the subpœna upon the witness and prove the

Then I shall ask for an attachment to bring him here. service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. He will be called.

James K. Julian appeared and was sworn.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, will you interrogate him as to the service?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Julian, were you charged with the service of a subpæna upon Mr. J. H. Rittenhouse?

Mr. JULIAN. I was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did you serve it?

Mr. JULIAN. I did.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At what time and place? Mr. JULIAN. Saturday, November 3, at 10 a. m., 713 Connell Building, Scranton, Pa.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In what manner did you serve him?

Mr. JULIAN. I served him personally and left a copy. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Delivering him a copy?

Mr. JULIAN. Delivering him a copy.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I failed to catch, Mr. President, whether you asked the witness what his office is.

Mr. Julian. I am an employee in the office of the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. And by the direction of the Sergeant at Arms of that office you served this subpœna upon J. H. Rittenhouse?

J. H. Rittennouse:
Mr. JULIAN. I did.
Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I make the statement that we are entitled to this attachment by reason that the ment that we are entitled to this attachment by reason that the witness was not here at the sitting when his name was called. Therefore I should like for him to be called now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Sergeant at Arms will call the name of the witness.

The Assistant Sergeant at Arms. Mr. James H. Rittenbuse! James H. Rittenbuse! Appear and answer the summons.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. The witness not having answered, Mr. President, I move for the appropriate order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The manager will send it to the desk and it will be acted upon at once.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON (after a pause). I will ask that the Secretary report the proposed order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report it.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That an attachment do issue in accordance with the rules of the Senate of the United States for one J. H. Rittenhouse, a witness heretofore duly subpœnaed in this proceeding on behalf of the managers of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the adoption of the order just read from the desk? If not, it will be considered as having been unanimously adopted, and the necessary attachment will be issued.

TESTIMONY OF E. J. WILLIAMS-CONTINUED.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Now, I ask that E. J. Williams be called. It has been suggested that the few remaining questions which I am to ask this witness may be heard more distinctly by standing at this point in the Chamber. [Taking a position in the aisle.]

E. J. Williams appeared and took the seat at the Secretary's desk provided for witnesses. Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Williams, yesterday afternoon, just before the Senate adjourned, I asked you if you knew that C. G. and W. P. Boland were parties to a lawsuit pending at the time you presented that note to them from Judge Archbald, and you said you did not remember. Is that correct?—A.

I can not hear you very well, sir.

Q. Yesterday afternoon I understood you to say that when the note was drawn by Judge Archbald to John Henry Jones and signed by Judge Archbald, and indorsed by Judge Archbald, yourself, and Jones, and was turned over to you to be discounted, and when you started to Mr. Boland to have him discount it, you did not know that W. P. or Christy Boland were parties to a suit then pending in Judge Archbald's court.-A. I do not think they were, sir.

Q. If I may be permitted to refresh your recollection, let me ask you if you did not swear before the Judiciary Committee last May

Mr. WORTHINGTON. On what page?

Mr. Manager WEBB. Page 479.

The WITNESS. Look at the date on the note and look at the date of the suit.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) If the note was drawn in the summer or fall of 1909——A. Yes. There was not suit then.
Q. Let me ask you this question: Did you not swear before the Judiciary Committee as follows--A. I might swear wrong, you know, because I did not know the date exactly.

Q. Listen to this question please, Mr. Williams:

The CHAIRMAN. At the time you presented the note to Boland and asked him to discount it, did you know that either one or both of the Bolands was party defendant in a case pending before Judge Archbald? Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I did know; but I did not think of that, though—that that had anything to do with it.

Did you swear to that before the Judiciary Committee?

A. I did not know and never considered anything of the kind. Q. Judge Archbald, in his answer, admits that when this note was executed by him and turned over to you and Jones for discount there was a suit pending in his court in which the two Bolands were parties because they owned two-thirds interest in the Marian Coal Co. If the judge knew that, I ask if you did not know it too?—A. No, sir; I did not know it.

Q. I ask you if you did not swear before the Judiciary Committee that you did know it-

Well, I did know, but I did not think that had-

A. No, sir. Q. "That had anything to do with it" ?-A. No, sir; not with me at that time. I did not go there on any suit or any consideration of any suit. I went there as a friend to them.

Q. I understand that, Mr. Williams,-A. They were, I think, friendly with me all right.

Q. The point I want to bring out is whether or not you knew when you carried that note to the Bolands that they were interested in a suit then pending in Judge Archbald's court?-A. I never considered that at all.

Q. Did you swear last May before the Judiciary Committee that you knew it?-A. I do not remember whether I did or not.

Q. You were intimate with the Bolands, were you not?—
. Very intimate with them; yes, sir.
Q. And intimate with the Judge?—A. Yes, sir; with them all. Q. Do you mean to say that you did not know the Bolands were interested in a suit with Peale against the Marian Coal Co.?—A. No, sir; I did not know. I am perfectly honest in my opinion all right that I did not know, and never considered it in the transaction at all.

Q. I asked you yesterday afternoon if you did not go to Judge Archbald immediately after you were subpensed to come down and testify before the Judiciary Committee, and you answered "I do not remember." Do you remember now whether or not you did go to Judge Archbald's office immediately after you were subprenaed to come before the Judiciary Committee?-A. I should not wonder a bit if I did. Q. Did you?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Did you go to his office in the Federal Building in Scranton immediately after you were subpænaed to come before the Judiciary Committee ?- A. Yes, sir.

Q. I ask you if you swore this before the Judiciary Committee-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. On what page? Mr. Manager WEBB. Page 800 [reading]:

Mr. Manager Webs. Page 800 [reading]:

The Chairman. John Henry Jones, testifying last Saturday, I believe, said that when he went to Judge Archbald's office last Monday—that is, the Monday before the one just gone—to have a note indorsed by the judge he found you present. Were you there?

Mr. Williams. Yes, sir.

The Chairman. That was after you had been subpœnaed to testify before this committee, was it not?

Mr. Williams. I guess it was; yes, sir.

The Chairman. Why did you go to Judge Archbald's office after you had been subpœnaed to come before this committee to testify?

Mr. Williams. I did not go about the—I just told him I was subpœnaed on the case.

The Chairman. You went down to his office to tell him you had been subpœnaed?

The CHAIRMAN. You went down to his omce to tell him?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir; I got subpœnaed.

The CHAIRMAN. What else did you tell him?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is all he said to me—to tell the truth and the whole truth about it—and that is all. And that is all the talk I had about the thing altogether. "Tell the whole truth to them," he says, "the whole thing." That is what the judge said to me.

The CHAIRMAN. How many conversations have you had with Judge Archbald about the sale of this culm bank since Mr. Brown examined you on March 23, 1912?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not many.

The CHAIRMAN. How many would you say, Mr. Williams?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I might have three or four talks with him now and then.

Is that correct? Is it true that you were in Judge Archbald's office?-A. Yes, sir. Q. On Monday morning, after having been subpænaed here on Sunday?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did you go to Judge Archbald's office immediately after you were subpensed to come down here and testify in this investigation before the House committee?-A. I think it was natural for me to go there. Was it not?

Q. Why was it natural?-A. And tell him what was going on. That is the point. He told me then, sir, to tell the truth and let the consequences go where they will. That is what he told me, and I am telling you the truth.

Q. So you remember this morning that you did go to his office, and you did not remember it yesterday. Now, I ask you if you did not give this to the Judiciary Committee as a reason why you went there? It is found on page 803, in your testimony :

Mr. Williams. He did pay my fare; yes, sir.
Mr. Webb. You did say, too, that the only time you saw him was at the railroad station; is that right?
Mr. Williams. I seen him. I was in the office Monday morning, and I was there for the same purpose as I was when I went to the depot to meet him—to get money to come here. That was my object.

Did you swear that before the Judiciary Committee?-A. Yes, sir

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (after a pause). The witness has answered the question.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Now, one more question, Mr. Williams. When you were talking to the judge about Mr. May's refusal to let you have this option after, as you said yesterday, Mr. May had gruffly declined to give it to you, did the judge then and there tell you that he had some cases in which Brownell was interested, and that he would go to see Brownell?—A. You say that. I do not understand you all right. Let me understand you better.
Q. I ask you if, after Mr. May had gruffly declined to let you have this option on the Katydid culm bank and you returned to the judge with that information, if the judge told you then and there that he had some cases before his court in which Brownell was interested?—A. No; I picked up the paper myself, sir, off the desk there. "Here are some cases," I said, "against the Erie, ain't they-these lighterage cases; two cases there?"

Q. Let me ask you this question, then. On page 588 of the record before the House Committee on the Judiciary I ask you if the chairman did not make this statement to you.

And he told you-

Referring to the judge-that the lighterage case was one of the cases that Brownell and the railroad company were interested in?

Mr. Williams. Yes, sir.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; those are the cases that are on the paper.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Did he tell you that Brownell was interested in those cases?-A. No, sir; he did not tell me nothing of that kind.

Q. I thought you said yesterday that you knew that Mr. Brownell was marked counsel?—A. I did not tell you any such thing, sir.

Q. What?—A. I did not tell you that. I told you that I picked up that paper off the desk and the two cases I seen there, and I asked what "lighterage" meant. I did not know what it meant at all. I did not know what lighterage was, and he explained to me the lighterage.

Q. Why were you examining the United States Commerce Court judge's docket? Why were you examining his docket at that time? When you were talking about securing this culm dump from the Erie Railroad, why were you examining his docket?—A. I do not understand that.

Q. Why were you examining the judge's docket—the brief, or whatever you call it?-A. The trial list was on the table, on the desk.

Q. Why were you looking into the trial list of cases before his court?—A. I just looked at it and picked it up.
Q. Was the word "lighterage" written on it?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you then ask the judge what "lighterage" meant?—

A. I did; yes, sir.
Q. Did he tell you then that that was one of the cases in which Brownell was interested, and that he would go to see Brownell?-A. That that was one of the cases against the Eric at the time.

Q. Why were you talking about cases which the Erie had? Was it because you were trying to get this dump from the Erie?-A. Because those were the cases that I seen on the list, sir.

Q. And you were trying to get the Katydid dump from the Erie, from Mr. May; is that right?-A. What?

Q. And that you were trying to get the Katydid culm dump through Mr. May from the Erie Railroad; is that right?-No; I was not. I told you that those are the first cases that I seen on the list.

Q. I understand. And the Erie Railroad owned this culm dump?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you were trying to get the culm dump from Mr. May, who was the agent of the Erie Railroad by being the manager of the coal company-that you were trying to get this dump from Mr. May? Now, can you tell me why you and Judge Archbald should discuss the two cases at that particular time concerning the Erie Railroad Co., which company was a party defendant in his Commerce Court at that time?—A. I can not tell you why.

Q. You can not tell us why?—A. I can not tell you why, sir; because those were the first cases I seen there on the paper

Q. Let me ask you this question: How long after you and the judge discussed these lighterage cases was it before the judge went to New York to see Brownell?-A. Oh, well, I could not tell you that.

Q. Was it three days or a week?-A. How could I tell you that? I do not keep those things stamped on my mind, you know. I could not tell you whether it was a week or whether it was a month. I do not know.

Q. You know it was not a month, do you not?-A. What?

Q. You know it was not a month?—A. I could not tell you. Q. Anyway, I understood you to say that the judge told you that he had gone to New York and had seen Brownell, and also that he had seen Mr. May on the street the day before, and that Mr. May said "tell Mr. Williams to come up and he can get that."—A. That is right, sir.

Q. Listen, Mr. Williams: "Mr. May likes you very much and you can get that and anything else you want."-A. Oh, well, that is right.

Q. How much of that did he tell you?-A. That is all right. How is that?

Q. How much of that did he tell you? Did he tell you that May had told him to tell you to come up and get the option? A. I went up right straight, sir, and got it.

Q. Who told you to go and get it?-A. Judge Archbald told me to go and get it; that he had seen May, happened to meet him on the street, and that he told him to tell me to come up and see him. I went up and I got it.

Q. And at that time he had already seen Brownell? Is that right?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. That he had been to New York and had seen Brownell?-That is all right.

Q. I want to ask you if you talked—
Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I should like to have the question submitted to the witness which I send to the desk, and also, following that question, one other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question desired to be propounded to the witness by the Senator from Ohio will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Did you or Judge Archbald first speak about these cases being on the trial list?

The Witness. No, sir.
Mr. POMERENE. I suggest that the question be repeated to the witness

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the question to the witness.

The Secretary again read the question.

The WITNESS. No, sir. I looked at the cases myself. Judge Archbald did not tell me.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not believe the witness understands the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness has substantially answered the question, the Chair thinks.

Mr. POMERENE. Which one first mentioned the fact of these cases being on the docket?
The Witness. Me, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next question desired to be propounded by the Senator from Ohio will be read:

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Did you and the judge ever before speak of other cases on the docket?

The WITNESS. No, sir; never before.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Williams, then you say that that is the only time you and the judge ever discussed cases on his docket?—A. What?

Q. I understand you to say that that is the only time you and the judge ever discussed cases on his docket?-A. Only as I asked him the question of what lighterage meant. That was the only question, sir.

Q. But the question was, did you and the judge ever discuss any other cases on his docket?-A. No, sir.

Q. That is the only case, then, that you ever discussed with him?—A. The only case, sir.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, I should like to introduce the following letter-

Mr. WORTHINGTON (after examining the letter). That is agreed to. Mr. Manager WEBB. I desire that the letter shall be read. Now, Mr. Williams, I wish you would please listen to this letter. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read, as requested. The Secretary read the following letter, which was marked "Exhibit No. 10":

[U. S. S. Exhibit 10.]

(R. W. Archbald, Judge United States Commerce Court, Washington.)

SCRANTON, PA., September 20, 1911. SCRANTON, PA., September 20, 1911.

My Dear Mr. Conn: This will introduce Mr. Edward Williams, who is interested with me in the culm dump about which I spoke to you the other day. We have options on it both from the Hillside Coal Co. and from Mr. Robertson, representing Robertson & Law, these options covering the whole interest in the dump. This dump was produced in the operation of the Katydid colliery by Robertson & Law, and extends to the whole of the dump so produced. I have not seen it myself, but, as I understand it, this dump consists of two dumps a little separate from each other, but all making up one general culm or refuse pile made at that colliery. Mr. Williams will explain further with regard to it, if there is anything which you want to know.

Yours, very truly,

R. W. Archbald.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Williams, did you carry that letter by your hand to Mr. Conn?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You did?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I believe you stated yesterday that you proposed to sell to Mr. Conn for $20,000?—A. What?

Q. I believe that you stated that you proposed to sell to Mr.

- Conn for $20,000?—A. No, sir; I did not.
 Q. No; it was 27½ cents a ton that you agreed to sell to him for.—A. Yes, sir; that is right now; but the $20,000 was not in it at all.
- Q. Anyway that deal was not consummated, not closed; Conn did not buy it?-A. They did not think that the title was good Q. I understand. He did not buy it?—A. No, sir. Q. Then later you negotiated with Jones—Thomas Howell Jones—for it, and he did not buy it?—A. No; but it was not on account of the title that Thomas Jones did not take it.

Q. I understand that. Then you negotiated the sale of it with Bradley last April. Is that right?—A. I told you yesterday that this thing was sold for $20,000, sir.

Q. To Bradley?—A. To Bradley; yes, sir.

Q. And did this investigation which was going on in Scranton and in Washington break up that sale?-A. If this investigation had not come for two days I would have sold it and got the money, sir.

Q. Did Judge Archbald write you and give you the letter to take to Conn?—A. Judge Archbald did, and I wrote the last letter; me and Boland—Bill Boland—had that letter to Conn dictated, and I took it over myself to him.

Q. I understand; but as to the letter you have just heard read from the Secretary's desk, did the judge give you that letter to take to Conn?—A. The judge?

Q. Yes; the letter which was just read from the desk there a moment ago introducing you to Mr. Conn.-A. I think that was my own letter, was it not?

Q. What was your answer to that?-A. Was not that my own letter?

Q. I suspect you have the letters confused. The letter I refer to is the one dated Scranton, September 20, 1911:

MY DEAR MR. CONN: This will introduce Mr. Edward Williams, who is interested with me in the culm dump-

The WITNESS. All right. Yes; that is right.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Who gave you this letter to take to Conn?—A. The judge.
Q. Who wrote it?—A. I guess the judge.
Q. Judge Archbald, do you mean?
Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is admitted. There is no question about it.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Very well.
Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) After the deal with Bradley for the dump failed, did you talk to Judge Archbald about this matter?—A. No, sir; I did not tell Judge Archbald when I was selling it to Bradley. I made that from my own mind. I did not tell Judge Archbald that I was going to sell it. He did not know that I was selling it.

Q. I ask you this question: If, after May recalled that tentative deed to Bradley and the contract was withdrawn and Bradley was unable to buy it on account of May's refusing to make the deed-I ask you if you talked to Judge Archbald about the failure to make the trade with Bradley?-A. I did not; no, sir. I did not tell Judge Archbald about the sale of it at all. I went on and done it myself. Q. You mean that you would make an important deal of that kind without your partner or friend being consulted?-A. Oh, yes; I was going to sell it, anyhow. I meant to give him half, all right. I did not mean to cheat him out of it at all; no, sir.

I am not that kind of a man, sir.
Q. I ask you this question: If you did not swear before the Judiciary Committee with reference to the question as to whether or not you had talked with Judge Archbald after Bradley had failed to get the deed, as follows:

The CHAIRMAN-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I ask from what page the manager is reading?

Mr. Manager WEBB. Pages 524 and 525.

The CHAIRMAN. After the deal failed of consummation, did you talk with him?

with him?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. What was that conversation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, he did not want to sell it.

The CHAIRMAN. Why?

Mr. WILLIAMS. He wanted to let it stand there.

The CHAIRMAN. Then he changed front entirely on the matter of selling it and dividing the profit, he taking a third; he had changed his mind entirely about it, had he?

Mr. WILLIAMS. He thought it would be worth more some other time.

The CHAIRMAN. Then you and he agreed that all your efforts to sell to Conn were not in earnest, and you did not want to sell to Conn?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. You agreed to do that. Why did you agree that you did not want to sell it, and when did you reach the conclusion that you did not want to sell it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. About three or four weeks ago.

I ask you if you swore that before the Judiciary Com-

I ask you if you swore that before the Judiciary Committee?—A. What is your question? Ask me the question square, and then I will answer it.

Q. The question, then, boiled down, is, after the Bradley deal failed the chairman asked you if you talked to the judge, and you said yes. Is that right?—A. Yes.

Q. And that you and the judge then agreed that you did not want to sell this dump; that the judge thought it would bring more at some later time?-A. The judge did not want to

Q. At that time?-A. No, sir.

Q. Then, I suppose you did swear this before the Judiciary Committee?—A. The judge did not want to sell it at the time, but I did; I wanted to sell it.

Q. And that was in April, was it not, that he did not want to sell?-A. I could not tell you the time. I can not tell you exactly the time or the date.

Q. You swore before the committee that it was "three or four weeks ago," when you were examined here about the 9th or 10th of May, so that would have made it some time in April.

Is that right?—A. Oh, yes.
Q. I ask you now if at that time it was not rumored around in Scranton that this investigation was being held into Judge Archbald's conduct, and I ask you if that is the reason that the judge stopped you from making any other sale of this culm dump?-A. Yes.

Q. That is true, is it?—A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Williams, after you had presented this $500 note to one of the Bolands, or both of them, for discount, and they declined to discount, I ask you if, subsequent to that time, several months, you did not tell one of the Bolands, or both of them, that they made a great mistake in not discounting that note-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I object to that question.
Mr. Manager WEBB. Let me finish it—if they did not make a great mistake in failing to discount that note; that if they had discounted it they would not have lost their suit?

The Witness. I never said such a thing, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Wait a moment. The Chair understands counsel to object.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. What is the use of objecting, Mr. President, since the witness has stated sufficient of his answer to show what it will be?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has cautioned him repeatedly not to do so.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The Chair has done his duty, surely. Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all the questions we have to ask the witness at present.

Mr. THORNTON. Mr. President, I desire that the witness answer the question I send to the desk before he is released by

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana requests that a question be propounded to the witness by the Secretary. The Secretary will read the question.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Have you read your testimony before the committee since it was given, or has it or any part of it been read to you since?

The WITNESS. No, sir.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, in view of the last question asked by the Senator from Louisiana, I want to ask the witness one more question.

Q. (Mr. Manager WEBB.) Since you were here and testified before the Judiciary Committee last May have you talked with Judge Archbald in his home at Scranton?-A. In his home?

Q. In his home, in his office, or anywhere.-A. Yes.

You have?-A. Oh, I talked to him.

Q. Have you talked to Judge Archbald since you testified before the Judiciary Committee?-A. Not anything about the

Q. Have you talked with Judge Archbald since you testified before the Judiciary Committee?-A. Not anything about the case at all. sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (to the witness). Answer the question.

The WITNESS. Don't I answer the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No.
The Witness. I have talked to him; but I never talked about the case.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Where did you talk to him?-

A. I have talked to him on the street.
Q. Where else?—A. Why, I have talked to him in the Federal building, but not in his office.

Q. Where is the Federal building you speak of-in Scranton ?-A. Scranton; yes.

Q. In the judge's room there?-A. No.

Q. Well, where were you in the Federal building when you and the judge talked?-A. I was out in the corridor.

Q. Anywhere else?-A. No.

Q. Did you ever talk to him in his home about it?-A. No: I never was in his home to talk to him about it.

Q. Did you ever talk to him anywhere else besides on the street and in the Federal building?-A. No, sir.

Q. What did you talk about then?-A. We talked about different things as he passed, but never talked about the case

Q. You never even mentioned this case?-A. No; never mentioned the case; I never talked to him a word about the case, because he would not talk about the case.

Q. Why? How do you know he would not?-A. Because he did not want to. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Occupants of the galleries must refrain from any expression of approval or disapproval, merriment, or otherwise.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) How do you know, Mr. Williams, that he did not want to talk about the case?—A. Because he never talked about the case.

Q. How do you know he did not want to talk about it? You said he would not, and did not want to .- A. He said he did not want to talk about the case.

Q. Did you begin, then, to talk with him about it?—A. What?
Q. Did you begin to talk with him about it?—A. No. He said, "Now, Williams, you know very well that we were told by the House not to talk anything about the case." I know

Q. Why did the judge admonish you in that way?—A. What? Q. Why did the judge advise you in that style?-A. Well, he warned me not to talk about the case.

Q. Why? Had you begun to talk to him about it?-A. No,

Q. Why should he volunteer that warning?-A. Because he did not want to talk about the case at all.

Q. Have you talked with Judge Archbald's attorneys about the case since you were here last May?-A. Judge Archbald's attorneys?

Q. Any of them; you know them .- A. Not that I know of.

Q. Well, now, think, please .- A. What?

Q. Do you know whether you have talked to any of Judge Archbald's attorneys about this case since last May?-A. Yes; I think I did.

Q. Did you see Mr. Price?—A. No; I seen Mr. Worthington.

Q. You saw Mr. Worthington?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you talk with him about this case?—A. In Scranton; yes, sir; I did.

Q. Where were you?-A. I was in the Federal building, sir.

Q. Where was the judge?-A. The judge was there, but he never said a word.

Q. Oh, the judge was present and heard you and Mr. Worthington talk about this case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many times did you talk to Mr. Worthington about the case?—A. That is the only time.

Q. How many times did Mr. Worthington go to Scranton since last April?—A. Only once I seen him; that is all.

Q. I ask you if Judge Archbald's counsel, Mr. Worthington, called your attention in the presence of the judge to any of your testimony?—A. What?

Q. I ask you if Col. Worthington, when he was in the Federal building in the judge's office and in the judge's presence, suggested to you that you had made a mistake or asked you to change, if you had made a mistake, any testimony that you had given before the Judiciary Committee?—A. I did not make any mistake, sir. Q. You did not make any mistake?—A. No, sir.

Q. So whatever is written in your testimony before the Judiciary Committee is correct?—A. I guess so.

Q. But answer my question: Were you asked in the presence of the judge about changing your testimony or as to whether your testimony before the Judiciary Committee was correct or not?—A. What was your question? Ask me that question again, sir.

Q. I ask you if any one of the judge's lawyers in the Federal building in Scranton in the presence of the judge asked you about the testimony you had given before the Judiciary Committee and either suggested that you had made a mistake or that you should change some part of it because you had made a mistake?-A. I do not know.

Q. Was that question discussed by any of the judge's counsel before the judge in the Federal building at Scranton?-A. I do not know; I could not say that it was. Q. Well, tell us, then, what was discussed in the presence of the judge by his counsel with reference to your testimony?-A. I do not remember exactly what it was.

Q. How long ago has it been?—A. Quite a while ago. Q. Two or three months?—A. Yes; more than that. Q. It has been since last May, you say?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you can not remember what happened two or three months ago?-A. I can not remember everything

Q. Did you not think that was an unusual meeting, and, therewould you not charge your memory-A. I met Mr. Worthington on the street at the courthouse, when he was going over, and talked to him, but I do not remember of the transaction, whether we talked over it, and I do not know that I ever changed anything in my evidence at all.

Q. Then I ask you if C . Worthington had a copy of your testimony before him when he examined you in the presence of the judge in the Federal building in Scranton?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He did have a copy of your testimony?—A. I remember one thing. He asked me if I ever told the judge that I was going to sell the thing. "Well," I says to the judge, "Did I tell you, judge? I do not know whether I told you or not." "Well," he said, "don't ask the judge," he says, "but you say so."

Q. Now, maybe you can remember something else that was said?—A. What is that?

Q. Maybe you can remember something else that was said. How long were you in the judge's presence with Mr. Worthington?-A. I do not know,

Q. Half an hour?-A. I could not tell you how long I was there. I might have been there an hour, and I might have been there half an hour; I do not remember how long.
Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness is with the counsel for the respondent.

Cross-examination by Mr. Worthington:

Q. Mr. Williams, that conversation with me which you have just mentioned occurred in the latter part of last August, did it not?-A. I do not remember when it was, Mr. Worthington; I could not say.

Q. Do you remember that I talked to you on two different days-one day, and then the next day?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on the first day I asked you to bring certain papers you had referred to which you did not have with you?-A. Yes,

Q. And you came the next day and brought them. Now, are you not mistaken in saying that Judge Archbald was present the first day?—A. I do not remember; but you remember very well when I asked the judge whether I told him or not about the sale of the property, you said to me "Don't ask the judge at all." You says, "You say so."

Q. Was not that the second day when you came back with the papers?-A. I am not sure.

Q. There were other people there, were there not, besides you and myself?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were they?—A. Mr. Martin was there. Q. Mr. Martin was there?—A. Mr. Price was there.

Q. And who else?—A. I can not say. The judge was there. Q. Was not Mr. Robert W. Archbald, the judge's son there?-A. Yes. I guess he was.

Q. Was there not a stenographer there?-A. Yes, sir; a stenographer.

Q. On both occasions?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Mr. Williams, have you had any business in the last 10 years; any regular business, I mean?-A. Have I had any business?

Q. Any 'regular business, I mean; any regular vocation?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is it?-A. Coal.

Q. Coal generally and not specifically?-A. Nothing else.

Q. Have you been known as Option Williams on account of your custom of dealing in options?-A. Boland is the author of that, you know.

Q. He gave you that title, did he?-A. Oh, yes.

Q. You have never repudiated it, have you?-A. No. I could get options when they could not touch them, sir.

Q. As to your relations with Judge Archbald prior to the time that you took to Capt. May this letter from Judge Archbald, did you ever have any business transactions of any kind with Judge Archbald?—A. No; I did not.

Q. That was the first business relation?-A. The first business: ves. sir.

Q. As to your other relations, had you up to that time ever been in his house?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you ever been to his house since that time?—A.

Q. Has he ever been in your house?-A. No, sir.

Q. Have you during the last few years had any office anywhere?-A. Not an office.

Q. You live, I believe, about 6 miles from Scranton?-A. I used to, but I live at Dunmore now.

Q. How far is that from Scranton?-A. That is about 2 miles away from the city.

Q. How long have you lived there?-A. I have been there now about three years; since my wife died.

Q. And before that, how many miles from Scranton did you live?—A. Six miles.

Q. You were in Scranton nearly every day, except-A. (Interrupting.) I lived there 42 years.

Q. While you lived in these places you were in Scranton nearly every day, were you not?—A. Every day.

Q. Every day, except Sundays?—A. Every day, except Sundays?—A.

days; yes, sir.

Q. Where did you stay; where were your headquarters, if you had no office ?-A. Any office where I had any business, sir.

Q. Did you have no particular place where you went regularly when you had no special object in view?-A. I was dealing with the Bolands, and they owe me money to-day, and I always went there to try to get some of that money, sir, [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Counsel will suspend. The Chair desires to say to the occupants of the galleries that absolute silence must be preserved, and if necessary measures will be taken to accomplish that end. Occupants of the galleries must not audibly interrupt the proceedings in this Chamber.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Is it not a fact that you spent your time, when you were not doing business anywhere else, in the office of W. P. Boland?—A. I spent a good deal of my time there.

Q. You spent more time at the office of W. P. Boland during the last few years than you did anywhere else, by a great deal, did you not?—A. Yes; I did.

Q. What office is that? Is it the office of William P. Boland or the office of the Marian Coal Co., or what?-A. Office of the Marian Coal Co.; yes. Q. Did Mr. Christopher G. Boland, a brother of Mr. W. P.

Boland, have an office there, too?—A. Right next to it.
Q. So you have been in the habit of seeing both of them practically every day for years, except Sunday?—A. Yes, sir. Q. You first gave testimony in this matter, I think, Mr. Williams, before Mr. Wrisley Brown, in Scranton, in March last?-A. I did, on a Sunday morning, sir-what I would never do again on Sunday.

Q. I am glad to know you have reformed. Who was present when Mr. Brown took your testimony?-A. William P. Boland and Wrisley Brown.

William P. Boland was there all the time, was he not?-A. William P. Boland was the man who asked all the questions.

Q. I was going to ask you whether he did not conduct the examination largely?—A. Yes; he conducted the inquiry. Q. And the next time you testified about this matter was in the office of the Attorney General, was it not?-A. Yes-no-Q. On the 12th of February last?-A. Yes. Oh, no; that was before.

Q. The first time was in the Attorney General's office .- A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was present when you were examined there?-A. There was nobody there but a stenographer and Wrisley Brown and William P. Boland.

Q. Are you not mistaken in saying that Wrisley Brown was in the Attorney General's office when you were examined? was not there when you were examined?-A. No, sir: he was not there.

Q. Mr. William P. Boland was there.—A. Yes, sir. Q. Was not Mr. Christopher G. Boland there?—A. Yes, sir. Q. And Mr. Cochran, of the Interstate Commerce Commission?-A. Yes, sir.

O. And William P. Boland there suggested questions to you, did he not?-A. He did.

Q. And the next time you were examined was before the Judiciary Committee, several months ago, I believe?—A. Yes,

Q. Do you remember that when your examination took place there Mr. William P. Boland came and took his seat at the witness table right at your side and stayed there some time, until a member of the committee suggested that was the witness table and then he went back?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understand you to say, Mr. Williams, when this letter of March 31 from Judge Archbald to Capt. May was shown to you, that that was not the letter you took to Capt. May. Where were you when Judge Archbald gave you the letter to Capt. -A. In his office in the Federal building.

Q. Did he dictate it to a stenographer?-A. I do not know. Q. Did he not go out and have the letter prepared?sir; I never saw the letter, because I never opened the letter.

Q. Exactly-A. I could not swear to the letter to-day, because I took it as it was.

Q. Did Capt. May show you the letter?-A. No, sir.

Q. You never saw it?-A. No, sir.

Q. Then, how do you know what was in it?-A. I did not

Q. You said yesterday that it simply recommended you as a person—A. That is all I expected it to do.
Q. Then, how do you know that this is not the letter?—A. Well, I do not know whether it is the letter. I could not swear to that letter.

Q. Did you take a letter about the Katydid dump from Judge Archbald to Capt. May more than once ?- A. Only once.

Q. You took only one letter?—A. Only one letter.

Q. Then, if you took this letter of March 31 this must be it .-A. Well, I do not know; I guess so.

Q. How did you happen to ask Judge Archbald to give you a letter to Capt. May?—A. If I can remember aright, it was William P. Boland that told me to ask Judge Archbald for a letter.

Q. Well, is not that the truth?—A. What?

Q. Is that not the truth about it?—A. That is the truth about it.

Q. Before that had you not had some negotiations with William P. Boland about this Katydid dump?—A. I did. He had told me about it before that; but he could not touch it with a 10-foot pole.

Q. Did you not sign a writing giving him an interest in it? I did, but when I went there to Mr. Robertson, he told me: "If you have anything to do with William P. Boland, you can

Q. I am coming to that --- A. (Interrupting.) I had to deny him any interest at all.

did sign a paper.

Q. Let me finish my question-A. And then I cut him out. Q. If you will let me finish my question, Mr. Williams, we will get along a little faster.—A. All right.

Q. Did you not sign a paper giving William P. Boland an interest in this projected Katydid dump transaction?—A. I did.

Q. One moment. [Continuing.] Before you went to Judge Archbald about the matter at all?—A. He would not tell me what dump it was until I would sign it, and when I signed it I went over to Robertson, and Robertson told me, "If you have anything to do with William P. Boland, I will not have anything to do with you at all."

Q. I want to talk about what happened before you went to Capt. May with this letter?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you not signed an agreement giving William P. Boland an interest in the proposed venture before you saw Judge Archbald and got the letter to Capt. May?—A. Yes, sir; but I cut him out.

Q. One moment. And after you had signed that paper, then he suggested that you go to Judge Archbald and get a letter to Capt. May, did he not?—A. What is that?

Q. After you had signed this paper giving Mr. William P. Boland an interest in the transaction, at William P. Boland's suggestion you went to Judge Archbald and got the letter to Capt. May?—A. That is right; yes.

Q. That is right, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After you had failed to get the option agreement from Capt. May did not William P. Boland suggest to you to go to Judge Archbald and get him to go to the Erie officials over Capt. May's head?-A. No; he recommended me, or he tried to induce me, to go to Judge Archbald and get a letter from him, Q. To whom?—A. To the Erie.
Q. To the Erie officials?—A. To Capt. May.

Q. I understand that, but after you had been to Capt. May and had not got the option, did not William P. Boland, when you reported that fact to him, ask you to go to the judge again and ask him to go see the Erie officials over Capt. May's head?—

A. No.

Q. You say that did not happen?—A. No; he did not say that.
Q. You are quite clear he did not say that in William P.
Boland's office?—A. No; he did not. I do not want to blame any man for what is not right. He did not tell me that.

Q. We have here the Robertson option, so-called, which has been put in evidence and proved that it is in the handwriting of Judge Archbald, and the signature admitted to be that of Robertson.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And your signature at the foot of it?-A. I guess it is. Q. You will see that has an acknowledgment to it [exhibiting paper to witness]. The paper itself is dated September 4, 1911, and the acknowledgment is dated September 12, 1911. It is recorded in the proper land office up there on the 13th of September, 1911. Do you know how that happened to be acknowledged and recorded?-A. Yes; I remember about it.

Q. You remember about that. Well, tell the Senate about it, please. Just tell us about it-how it came to be recorded .- A. It was William P. Boland who went and took it and put it on record.

Q. Did Judge Archbald or Mr. Robertson state anything about having it recorded?—A. No.

Q. Had you?—A. It was him that took it.
Q. William P. Boland?—A. William P. Boland.
Q. Had you said anything about having it recorded before that?—A. I had not.

Q. Now, about the dealings with Mr. Conn. Do you know how it happened that Judge Archbald got into communication with I it because the lawyer would not recommend it.

Mr. Conn as a purchaser for his little railroad up there for this coal dump?

The Witness, How he got into communication? Mr. WORTHINGTON. Yes; who suggested it to him? A. I did not suggest it to him.

Q. Did not William P. Boland tell you that Conn was a probable purchaser, and to go and see Judge Archbald and to get Q. Then you got this letter on the 30th of September, which is in evidence here, and took it to Conn?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not first go to Boland's office with it? The WITNESS. With what?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That letter to Conn. Did you not receive that letter from Judge Archbald to take it to Conn, and instead of taking it to Conn did you not take it to the office of William P. Boland and show it to him?—A. I do not think I ever took the letter from Judge Archbald to Conn. I think it was sent some other way; not by me.

Q. I will ask whether before the Judiciary Committee, referring to page 507 of the testimony before that committee-

I do not remember that I took it there.

Q. Referring to the top of page 507, I will ask you whether this happened with respect to this very letter:

A member of the Judiciary Committee-

We have a photographed letter here that has just been shown you—a letter of introduction to Mr. Conn.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.
Mr. CARLIN. Did you show that letter to anybody?
Mr. WILLIAMS. The contract with Conn, you mean?
Mr. CARLIN. I mean the letter introducing you to Mr. Conn, recommending you to Mr. Conn.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Did I show it?
Mr. CARLIN. Yes.
Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not remember whether I did or not.

Mr. Williams, if there was a photographic copy of that letter to Mr. Conn made, can you explain how it was made? Did you make it?

A. No, sir; I could not explain.

Q. You thought the title to this dump was all right, you said?

The WITNESS. What is that?

Q. You said you thought the title to the dump was all right?—A. It is all right to-day. It is just as much all right to-day as it ever will be.

Q. Mr. Conn's lawyers did not agree with you?—A. No, sir. Q. They are Messrs. Wells & Torrey, an eminent law firm in Scranton, is it not?—A. Yes. It is not Torrey, but it is Wells.

Q. Wells, the senior member of the firm. After you came down here and appeared before the Attorney General in February last, there was another effort made to get Conn to take the property—the dump?—A. That was by myself. That was the last.

Q. That is the letter of March 13, Exhibit 4 in this case?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That [exhibiting] is the letter you refer to, is it not?-A. I do not know.

Q. Look at it, please. I should like you to be sure .- A.

(Examining paper.) Yes.
Q. That is right? That letter was prepared in the office of Mr. Boland?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Mr. Boland helped to put the words in it-dictated them?-A. Yes, sir; he did.

Q. He dictated it to the stenographer, his niece, Miss Boland?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you signed it?-A. I took it over myself. Q. Mr. Boland told you to hurry?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he tell you why he wanted to have you hurry?-A. Because this suit was coming on-

Q. And he wanted to get the sale through before the storm came. He used that language or that in substance?-A. He did.

Q. You helped him to do that without telling Judge Archbald what was going on?—A. No, sir; I did not tell Judge Archbald. Q. By the way, this letter of March 13 seems to have had a part of it cut off. Can you tell me whether you saw that done?-A. Oh, they always did that.

Q. Who always does it?-A. Mary, the stenographer.

Q. Did you see her cut the top off of this?-A. I did not notice it; no, sir.

Q. Did you not say before the Judiciary Committee that you did see her cut it off?-A. I have seen her cut it off at different

Q. You took that letter to Mr. Conn, and Mr. Conn still refused to buy because he did not think, or because his lawyer did not think, the title was good?—A. He could not recommend Q. Exactly. Then right away Mr. Boland helped you get up the sale to Mr. Bradley for $20,000?—A. I had done that myself before Mr. Boland ever-

Q. You say it was done before Mr. Conn refused to take it the last time?-A. Yes, sir. I could have sold, but I would rather sell it to Mr. Conn, because there was more money in it, than to sell it to Bradley.

Q. Was not the arrangement to sell to Bradley made in William P. Boland's office?—A. No, sir.

Q. You say it was not?—A. No, no. I had agreed with Mr. Bradley myself, outside of anybody else in the world, to sell it to him for $20,000.

Q. Did not Mr. Boland urge you to hurry up this Bradley sale?-A. Yes; he did. That is true enough.

Q. And so you went on hurrying up a sale—that is, trying to get Conn to buy-and when he would not, to get Bradley to buy it, and arranging a sale to Bradley without saying a word to Judge Archbald?—A. Yes, sir; but I did not mean to cheat Judge Archbald.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not mean to intimate that.

A. No, sir. I am not doing that kind of work.

Q. Another thing, to make certain of this March 31 letter. The first time you saw Capt. May about this Katydid dump business was when you took that letter from Judge Archbald. You had not had any talk with Capt. May about the Katydid dump until you went to him with that letter from Judge Arch--A. I do not think I had any talk with him at all.

Q. What arrangement did you have with Judge Archbald about what his interest in this dump should be and what your interest should be when you went to Capt. May with that letter on the 31st of March?-A. I never had any particular arrangement with Judge Archbald.

Q. You went and asked him for this letter and got it?-

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after the letter you entered into the negotiations without saying a word to Judge Archbald as to whether he was to have an interest or not?-A. I said he was to have an interest. I did not say how much or what he was to get.

Q. You never had any writing with him on the subject?—
A. No, sir; only my word of mouth. That is all he had.
Q. Very well. Did Judge Archbald ever at any time tell you that his name was to be concealed or kept out of the Katydid transaction?—A. He never told me.

Q. Did he ever intimate or suggest such a thing to you?-

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever tell him that it was contemplated to keep his name out?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or to execute any paper and refer to him as a silent party?—A. No, sir. I considered that he knew more about that

- than I did, and for that reason I would leave that to him.

 Q. I want to come down to what you were saying a few moments ago. You say when you went to Robertson he told you that William P. Boland must not have anything to do with it?—A. Nothing to do with it at all.

 Q. Or the sale would not go through?—Λ. Yes, sir.

Q. Or he would not sell his interest?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he tell you why?—A. No, sir.
Q. He gave no reason?—A. He gave no reason; no, sir.
Q. Did he tell you that before he would sign the agreement with Judge Archbald agreeing to sell his interest for $3,500the paper which I have just shown you, which Boland had recorded——A. I do not understand your question.

Q. No doubt it is my fault. I refer to this paper [exhibiting], Exhibit No. 2 in this case—the Robertson agreement—which is in Judge Archbald's handwriting. You say that you and Robertson signed it, and then you say it was recorded a few days afterward by Boland?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want to know whether Robertson told you, before that paper was signed, that William P. Boland must have no interest in the property?—A. Yes, sir; particularly.

Q. That is dated the 4th of September. I want to ask you if that is so, why it was that on the next day, the 5th of September, you signed a paper assigning two-thirds interest in this transaction to William P. Boland?-A. I never did.

Q. You never did?-A. No, sir.

Q. This paper which we have referred to in these proceedings as the "silent-party" paper was dated the 5th of September, and says:

For services rendered or to be rendered in the future by William P. Boland and silent party, whose name for the present is only known to Edward J. Williams, W. P. Boland, John M. Robertson, and Capt. W. A. May, superintendent of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., it is agreed by said Edward J. Williams, who is the owner of two options covering a culm bank known as the Katydid, situate in the vicinity of Moosic, Pa., that he hereby assigns two-thirds of any profits arising from the sale of the above-mentioned property over and above the amounts to be paid John M. Robertson and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., $3,500 and $4,500, respectively, to be divided equally between William P. Boland and silent party mentioned above.

A. I never did, sir.

Q. After Robertson had told you that William P. Boland must not have anything to do with the matter, did you tell him?-A. I told him, and he says to me, "Well, I quit; I am out."
Q. Was that before or after the Robertson paper was signed?-A. It was right after Robertson told me.

Q. Right afterwards?—A. Right after Robertson said it. He says, "All right, I am out; I quit." Why should I sign anything to him? I never signed it.
Q. About this "silent-party" paper; did you receive any copy of it?—A. No, sir.

Q. This appears to have come from the possession of the managers.—A. I got two copies here, but they were never signed.

Q. Did you not swear before the Judiciary Committee that you never received any copy of the paper?-A. There are two copies. There is another one here, but I never signed any of

Q. Did you not swear before the Judiciary Committee-Did he not swear that there were three copies? Is it not in the book there that three copies were signed?

Q. We will find that in a moment. When you were testifying before the Judiciary Committee where were these copies?-A. They were in my pocket then, and I did not know they were in my pocket when I was here before.

Q. You did not know how they got there?-A. When I went to look at my pocket when I got home I found those copies.

Q. In your pocket?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. When I talked with you the first day, last August-A.

showed you it, did not I?

Q. You said you had such papers, but they were at your home, did you not?—A. No; they were right in this pocket

Q. Did you not tell me that they were at your house; and did I not ask you to bring them down the next day?—A. No; they were in the same pocket. It may not be the same coat, all right.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. Managers, I propose to add these exhibits to the contribution which you have made. [After a pause.] The managers have no objection to these papers going into the evidence. I will not undertake to read them, because the wording is the same as in the original paper itself. They have a line for the signature and the word "seal" in typewriting after that line.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the counsel propose to introduce them now or prove them?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I would like to introduce them now, know sometimes it is said that exhibits for the defense or the respondent should be put in when the time comes to put in evidence. I find always that it is very much more convenient for the court and everybody else to put them in as we go along.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I hope they will be printed in the RECORD right at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no objection, the Chair understands.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. All right. Then I offer them, and they are in evidence.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit A.]

Assignment made this 5th day of September, A. D. 1911, by Edward J. Williams, of the borough of Dunmore, County of Lackawanna and State of Pennsylvania, party of the first part, to William P. Boland and silent party, whose name for the present is only known to Edward J. Williams, W. P. Boland, John M. Robertson, and Captain W. A. May, Sup't, of the Hillside Coal & Iron Company, it is agreed by said Edward J. Williams who is the owner of two options covering a Culm Bank known as the "Katydid," situate in the vicinity of Moosic, Pa., that he hereby assigns two-thirds of any profits arising from the sale of the above-mentioned property over and above the amounts to be paid John M. Assignment made this 5th day of September, A. D. 1911, by Edward J. Williams, of the borough of Dunmore, County of Lackawanna and State of Pennsylvania, party of the first part, to William P. Boland and silent party mentioned above, their heirs, successors or assigns, and this shall be their voucher for same.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Did you ever get any authority from Judge Archbald to sell any part of his interest in the Katydid dump-any part of the contract-to anyone else?-A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever tell him that you had assigned an interest to William P. Boland?-A. No, sir.

Q. I should like to know, Mr. Williams, in your own way, what is the truth about whether you did or did not say anything to Judge Archbald about this "silent-party" paper?— A. I do not know nothing about it.

Q. Did you not swear before the Judiciary Committee several times that you never executed that paper and did not know anything about it?-A. I did not know anything about it, and I do not know anything about it to-day, sir.

- Q. Did you not several times swear, as you have sworn here, that you put Judge Archbald in that paper as a silent party because you did not think it was lawful for him to be in the transaction?-A. I did not. I always said I did not know anything about that paper. The signature was wrote across the typewriting on the paper, and I never signed that. I never did
- Q. Do you say now that, as a matter of fact, you never told Judge Archbald that you had referred to him as a silent party or never told him such a thing was contemplated?-A. No, sir.

Q. Do you mean that you did not tell him any such thing?-

A. You can ask him now, if you want to.

Q. But for the present I have to confine my questions to you, Mr. Williams. Did you ever tell him?—A. No, sir. Q. Or intimate to him——A. No, sir; I did not.

- Q. That such a thing was done or contemplated?-A. I did
- Q. Or did he ever intimate or suggest to you that he desired his connection in that matter to be concealed from anybody?-A. No, sir; he did not.
- Q. At one time I believe it was supposed that the contract with Conn was going to be executed, was it not?—A. Yes; I thought it was going through all right.

Q. Did not Judge Archbald prepare a contract and submit it to Mr. Conn?—A. Yes, sir; he did.

- Q. Did you see that contract?—A. Yes, sir; I did see it.
 Q. Did you read it?—A. No; I did not read it. I seen it.
 Q. Did you look at it at all so as to see whether Judge Arch-
- bald's name was mentioned in it?-A. Judge Archbald's name was in it.

Q. How do you know?—A. He read it to me.
Q. He read it to you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You can not identify the paper, then?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, Mr. Williams, about another matter. You took this letter from Judge Archbald to Capt. May and did not get any You took this agreement from Capt. May about the option?—A. No, sir.
Q. How soon did you go back to Judge Archbald and report that result?—A. I could not say.

Q. Was it the same day?—A. Whether I went in two days or the next day, or when, I do not remember.

Q. Where was this letter delivered to you?-A. It was two

Q. This letter was given to you in the Federal building to be taken to Capt. May?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was Capt. May when you delivered it to him?-A. In the office of the Erie Co.

Q. How far away was that from Judge Archbald's office in the Federal building?—A. About 2 miles away.

Q. Had you not said several times that you right away went to Judge Archbald and told him about what Capt. May had said?-A. Now, I could not say. I guess I did go as soon as possible.

- Q. From a distance of 2 miles?—A. Yes, sir. Q. When you got back to Judge Archbald's office you saw on his desk this trial list, you say, on which was the word "lighterage." Is that right?—A. Yes, sir.
- Q. And you picked up that paper and asked Judge Archbald what lighterage meant?-A. Yes, sir; I did.
- Q. Was that the way that came about?-A. That is a fact, sir. Q. Have you ever seen that paper since?-A. I never seen it since; no, sir.
- Q. Was this trial list one on which there were a number of -A. Oh, lots of cases.
- Q. The cases numbered?—A. Oh, there was lots of cases. looked through it, all over the list.

Q. In what court was it?-A. I do not know. I could not say what court it was.

Q. You do not know whether it was a trial list of the Commerce Court or Interstate Commerce Commission-A. I could not say. I could not swear to that.

Q. Or the district court of the United States for the middle district of Pennsylvania?-A. I could not say.

Q. You can not say?-A. No, sir. If I would swear I could not swear what court it was.

Q. In order to be clear about this I will ask you whether, when you were giving your deposition to Mr. Wrisley Brown in Scranton, page 228, you did not say that after delivering that letter to Capt. May you "went to the judge right away"? "Yes; I went to the judge right away."—A. Well, that might be: I do not remember.

Q. You do not remember whether you said that or not?-A.

No; I do not remember. That is pretty near two years ago. Q. But you were testifying very shortly after the occurrence.

It was only in April.—A. I do not remember.
Q. It was the year afterwards. I do not want to misrepresent it.—A. You know this, Mr. Worthington, that when that testimony was taken it was in a hurry on a Sunday morning, and they would run over it in a hurry, there were so many questions asked. I was there about four or five hours.

Q. Then I will ask you whether, when testifying before the Judiciary Committee, page 511, you did not say this in referof the committee, "Was it the next day after you had seen May that you went back to the judge," your answer was, "Yes, sir"; do you remember that?—A. I do not.

Q. Can you be clear about this matter at all, Mr. Williams? After you had taken this letter to him and he did not give you an agreement or agree to sell, did you go to sleep on it and do nothing or were you active about it?-A. I went to see the judge that day or the next day. Q. Then you saw this trial list with the lighterage case on -A. Yes, sir; that is the time.

Q. Then you had the conversation with the judge which you have narrated as well as you remember about what that case was?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He explained to you the matter?—A. I did not know in the world what lighterage meant, and I asked him the question.

- Q. To make sure what the case was, tell us again what the judge said the lighterage business was.-A. He said it was those little tugboats that carried railroad cars across the river there.
- Q. To get some idea as to how correct you are about dates, I should like to ask you what is your recollection as to how long it was after you first went to Capt. May about this business until he gave you the option, as it is called here?—A. I could not say whether it was a week or a month. I could not say, I could not be sure.

sir. I could not be sure.

Q. You think it was somewhere in the neighborhood of a week or a month?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If, as a matter of fact, the first letter to Capt. May was March 31 and the option was August 30, how do you account for being so far out on your dates?—A. I could not remember how long it was.

Q. I will ask you, Mr. Williams, whether, as a matter of fact, this talk with Judge Archbald about the lighterage case was not long after he had been to see Mr. Brownell and after Capt. May had given the option?-A. No; I think that was before he went to see Brownell, if I remember.

Q. I will ask you whether or not on the 28th day of September, 1911, in the office of William P. Boland, you did not say, in substance, that you were "going to the judge's office to look at a brief which the judge was preparing for the Erie Railroad Co."?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nothing of that kind happened?—A. No, sir; I did not see about a brief. I do not know what a brief is. I do not know the difference between a brief and something else.

Q. No such conversation occurred, then?—A. No, sir.

Q. I will ask you whether you did not call later in the day to see William P. Boland, and tell Miss Mary F. Boland, or somebody in her presence, that you had seen the brief "and it was about a case against the Erie Railroad Co. for a lighterage charge"?—A. No, sir; I never told him.

Q. Nothing of that kind happened?—A. No, sir.

Q. Away down in Sentamban of the tile with the control of the contr

Q. Away down in September, after the option had been given by Capt. May?—A. No. sir; nothing of the kind at all.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, we would be very glad if the Senate would take a recess for about 10 minutes in order that I may confer with my associates about some other matters. I think we will save time by it,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered. The court will stand in recess for 10 minutes, until 5 minutes before 4 o'clock, it being now 15 minutes

The Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment thereupon took a recess for 10 minutes and reassembled at 3 o'clock and 55

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the call of the roll of the Senate 51 Senators have responded to their names, and a quorum of the Senate is present.

CROSS-EXAMINATION OF E. J. WILLIAMS-CONTINUED.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. Williams, you said yesterday that you had good reason to know that the Bolands owned a large amount of the stock of the Marian Coal Co. What did you mean by that?-A. How is that?

Q. You said yesterday that you had good reason to know that the Bolands own most of the stock of the Marian Coal -A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you mean by that?—A. Because I had to sell out to them, sir. I was squeezed out of it, sir.

Q. You said something about their owing you money.—A. They owe me $1,300 and $1,100.

Mr. Manager WEBB. We think the question and answer are immaterial. Whether the Bolands owe him money or whether he owes the Bolands money we do not think has anything to do with the conduct of Judge Archbald.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think that what has been brought out, Mr. President, sufficiently shows that the relations between this witness and the Bolands are quite important.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The counsel will propound the question.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) The question is whether the Bolands are indebted to you, and, if so, why—I mean William P. Boland and Christopher G. Boland, or either of them?—A.

Christopher G. Boland owes me money.
Q. Can you tell us briefly what is that about?—A. Why, that is part payment. They paid a part of the agreement that they had to sell out.

O. To sell out what?-A. The Marian coal lease-the culm lesse.

Q. Does Christopher G. Boland recognize that indebtedness to you or does he dispute it?-A. Yes; he does, of course.

Q. He does?—A. Yes, sir. Q. Why does he not pay you?—A. Well, because they claim it was to be paid out of the dividends, but they claim that there was no dividends yet until they get this money. Now, if they will ever get it from the D. L. & W. for overcharges, for reduction of rates

Q. Well, what has that got to do with your going to them with this $500 note? I think you gave that as a reason why you went to them .- A. Oh, that has nothing to do with my going to them about that $500 note.

-I thought you said something to that effect yesterday?-

A. Oh, no; I was always friendly with them.

Q. Well, they owe you money and they recognize that they owe you money?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you expect to get it from them in the future?-A. Yes,

Q. Have they said anything as to when you may expect to get that money?—A. How is that?

Q. Have they said anything to you as to when you may expect to get that money?—A. As soon as they get money out of it, and if they get this $50,000 from the D. L. & W., why that is money, is it not, and they are able to pay me then.

Q. Well, I do not care anything more about that. Mr. Williams, did you suggest to Judge Archbald in reference to the papers, or some of the papers connected with this Katydid transaction, that he should have one of his sons sign the papers and not sign them himself; and did he not say that he proposed to sign the papers himself and not have his son sign them?-A. No; he did not.

Q. Nothing of that kind happened?—A. No, sir.
Q. I want to ask you whether, on or about January 16, 1912, in the office of Mr. W. P. Boland, in Scranton, Pa., you said, in substance, that Mr. Archbald told you it would be better for him to sign the papers in this deal, that you agreed with him, but that you later told the judge that it would be better for his son to sign the papers, and you said the judge intended singing them, and you could not prevent his doing it?—A.

Q. Nothing of that kind was said by you?-A. I never told the judge that, or the judge never told me that.

Q. Now, about this visit you made to the judge just before you came down to testify before the Judiciary Committee. subpœna was served upon you, I understand. On what day of the week was it served?—A. I don't remember.

Q. You were required to appear on what day of the week;

do you remember?-A. I don't remember.

Q. Anyhow, you went to the judge and told him you had been subpensed and had not the money to pay your fare, did you not?-A. I did.

Q. You went to his office in the Federal Building?-A. I told him so.

Q. And you asked him to lend you the money so that you could come down here?-A. Yes.

Q. You told him you were going to testify or had been sub-pænaed before the Judiciary Committee in his matter, did you not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he not say that he would not give you any money, but that he was going on the train somewhere the next day, and that if you would meet him at the station at that time he would give you a ticket to Washington?-A. That is all; yes, sir.

Q. And you did meet him there?-A. I did meet him at the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western depot, sir.

Q. And he went around to the window and bought that ticket and handed it to you right there?—A. He did.

Q. In the presence of a number of people who were in the room?-A. All that was around there at the time.

Q. And you say that he told you to come down here and tell the truth?-A. He told me to tell the truth and never mind the consequences. He said, "Tell the truth."

Q. You said twice, as I understood you, that this Bradley deal was stopped because this investigation was coming on, or this lawsuit, you said once. You mean the investigation which has resulted in this trial, do you not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what do you know about that? I want to know whether you have personal knowledge about that or whether you are giving what you have heard rumored on the street or somewhere else. What do you know about why Capt. May recalled the contract which he had submitted to Mr. Bradley?— A. What do I know? I know that I asked the deed back from Bradley that he had had sent to him to see whether he would accept the deed under the conditions.

Q. I understand you. The contract was sent by Capt. May to Mr. Bradley to see if it was satisfactory to him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the next day, or very soon, Capt. May recalled the contract and said it could not be executed. That is so ?- A.

Q. But you say that that was done because this investigation was coming on. I want to know what the source of your information on that subject is .- A. That is all I got.

Q. Who told you that? Who told you that Capt. May re-

Q. Who?—A. Mr. Bradley told me.
Q. Who?—A. Mr. Bradley told me.
Q. Mr. Bradley told you?—A. Mr. Bradley.
Q. He told you that Capt. May had recalled the deed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Bradley undertake to tell you why he recalled -A. No; he did not. it?-Q. Did he tell you?-A. That Capt. May wanted it back.

Q. Did he not tell you that Capt. May had told him that there had been letters written making claims against the mine on behalf of the Everhart heirs, and that his counsel had advised him that under the circumstances it would not do to go on with the contract?-A. I guess he did; yes, sir.

Q. Where did you get this idea into your head that it was because of this investigation that Capt. May recalled the contract?-A. Well, I got that from other sources; not from Capt.

Q. You did not get it from Capt. May or from Mr. Bradley?—A. No, sir.

Q. Now, is it not a fact that the day you went to Judge Archbald's office in the Federal building, just before you came down here to testify before the Judiciary Committee, that $500 Jones note had to be renewed?-A. I do not know.

If that was so, you have forgotten it, have you?-A. Yes, sir. Q. But did you not go there to meet Jones and the judge for that purpose?-A. I do not remember. Q. You do not remember?-A. No, sir.

Q. About this letter to Mr. Darling that is in evidence. You took that letter to Mr. Darling, and he told you that that dump had been sold or leased or something of that kind?-A. The dump had been leased to Peale, Peacock & Kerr.

Q. That was the end of it?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You took the judge's letter to him?-A. That settled that deal.

Q. Very well. I should like to know how you came to go to Mr. Darling. Who suggested to you to go to Judge Archbald and get a letter to Mr. Darling?—A. It was William P. Boland who told me about it, but he did not know that Peale had leased it already.

Who was it suggested to you to take Mr. Dainty to Judge Archbald and to try to get Judge Archbald to help him about the selling of the outstanding Everhart interest to the Lehigh Valley?-A. I do not think anybody suggested that to me.

Q. Did not William P. Boland suggest it?-A. No; I could not say that.

Q. You could not say that?—A. No, sir. Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all, Mr. President.

Redirect examination by Mr. Manager WEBB:

Q. Mr. Williams, did you tell Mr. Worthington a few minutes ago that in the examination before Wrisley Brown, in Scranton, William P. Boland asked most of the questions?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say that now?—A. I say that now; yes, sir. Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, at this point we offer the deposition of E. J. Williams, taken on the 23d day of March, 1912, in Scranton, with reference to this matter.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Williams, did you sign this statement?—A. Oh, I might have signed it, but I did not know what was in it; it was not read to me at that time.

Q. Answer the first question. Did you sign it?—A. I signed it; yes, sir; but I did not know what was in it altogether.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, if that paper is offered solely for the purpose of showing what proportion of questions were propounded to Mr. Williams by Mr. Boland, and how were propounded by Mr. Brown, we have no objection. many were propounded by Mr. Brown, we have no objection; but if it is offered in evidence to make what this witness said there in that ex parte investigation evidence against Judge Archbald we do object to it.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Mr. Williams, I ask you again if this statement was not read over to you by Mr. Brown, who asked you if you wanted to make any change in your testi-We were in such a hurry, sir, to get out from A. No. there after being there four or five hours. I wanted to get some time to get dinner. It was about, I think, 2 o'clock, and I got there in the morning.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, we think it is competent to show that these questions were all asked by Mr. Wrisley Brown and the responses thereto were corroborative of what he has sworn with reference to this matter here to-day.

The WITNESS. Mr. Wrisley Brown would not know how to ask these questions altogether without the help of William

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, it seems to me that it would be very unfortunate if we should have to try to get into this case what might be considered evidence against Judge Archbald of what this witness happened to say in an ex parte investigation in Scranton. The questions are all there; it is stated who asked them; and it is easy enough for the managers to do what I have done, count the number of questions that were asked by Mr. Boland, and it will appear that he asked I out of 10, or something of that kind. The witness is mis-1 out of 10, or something of that kind. taken-there is no question about that-in saying that Mr. Boland asked most of the questions, so far as the report shows, and we ought not to have a statement made in this way by this witness or anybody else when there was no opportunity for Judge Archbald to be represented, put into this case as evidence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the paper could not be put in evidence for the purpose of proving the testimony of the witness upon that occasion, unless the managers are prepared to take the position that they have been entrapped by the witness and desire to show what he has testified to on a former occasion; and the Chair does not understand that to be the proposition.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Well, Mr. President, in one view of the matter we think it is competent to show that Mr. Brown asked the questions, and not Mr. Boland. In another view of the question we take it that it is competent for the reason that the witness was examined on the 22d day of March, when the facts were fresh in his mind, and that it is competent to corroborate him as to what he has sworn here to-day to show that he has sworn it on other occasions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not of opinion that the corroboration of the witness is in order unless he is impeached in some way. There is no doubt about the right of the managers to prove that the questions were asked by who-ever the party is, but the Chair does not think that the paper itself would be admissible as evidence of what the witness then swore to.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Then does the President admit it in evidence for the purpose of showing who did ask the questions? Mr. WORTHINGTON. I would object to that. It seems to me if it is admitted for any purpose, of course, it goes into the record. It is an easy matter, of course, for anybody to ascertain how many questions were asked by Mr. Boland. As a matter of fact, only 12 were asked by him during a long examination.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that it would be better for the managers to prove what they desire without introducing the entire paper, because that would be putting in evidence that which is not proper for consideration as evidence.

Mr. Manager WEBB. To prove it in any other way would be an almost endless task, because there are 48 pages of typewritten matter, and the witness would probably have to go over it to see

Mr. SIMPSON. To see what?

Mr. Manager WEBB. To see who asked the questions.

Mr. SIMPSON. We are quite willing that Mr. Webb or any of his colleagues shall count them and their say so be put in the record.

Mr. Manager WEBB. I do not care to testify.

Mr. SIMPSON. We do not ask you to testify; but you can get some one outside. Mr. Brown can count them, and his say so

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I happened to think this question might arise, and so I counted them myself. There are only 12 questions by Mr. Boland and 100 or more by Mr. Brown.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, I dislike to do anything that may seem to be an abuse of the patience of the Senate, but it seems to me, inasmuch as Col. Worthington has seen proper to bring into this case a part of this deposition, that therefore we are entitled to have it all. It is upon that familiar principle that we insist upon our right to introduce this document in evidence in its entirety.

Mr. President, as to the limitation or the effect of this instrument, that is reserved to the Senate when it comes to render its verdict or judgment. We are addressing, as I undertook to say yesterday, a tribunal that acts in the double capacity of the judge of the law and the jury to determine the facts. Therefore, Mr. President, if you as judges admit this paper now, when you come to consider the question of fact as jurors, then you can, if you see fit, limit the effect of its operation. It is impossible for us to separate the function of the judge from the function of the jury here. Inasmuch, I repeat, as counsel for the respondent has introduced a part of this deposition, I insist that it is right and proper for us to have it all in the record—the whole truth, and not a part of it.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I presume we are entitled to close on our objection, Mr. President. We introduced no part of this deposition in evidence. I asked the question of Mr. Williams as to whether Mr. Boland was not present when he was examined, and he answered that question, which was all I asked. Then he volunteered the statement, "Yes, and asked most of the ques-I did not ask him who asked the questions. I showed that Mr. Boland was present at the very time he has testified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If a part of the deposition has been offered by counsel for the respondent, of course the Chair will recognize the right of the managers to offer the entire paper; but that is a question that seems to be in dispute. That proposition was not first suggested by the manager who first offered the paper. He put it upon an entirely different ground, as the managers and the Senate will remember. Chair is not prepared to pass upon the question as to whether or not there has been in fact any part of the deposition put in evidence by the counsel for the respondent. If there has been a part of it put in evidence, the Chair recognizes the right of the managers to have all of it on that ground alone. The Chair thinks the other propositions are untenable. The Chair, of course, recognizes the right of the managers to prove how many of these questions were asked by the respective parties.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Then we will offer, Mr. President, that part of it for that purpose. I do not recall the exact questions that Col. Worthington excerpted from the deposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Offer it for what purpose? Mr. Manager WEBB. For the purpose of showing the entire questions and answers with reference to the matter about which Col. Worthington asked the witness.

Mr. SIMPSON. There was no such offer-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Probably the stenographer's notes would have to be consulted to see what part of it, if any, was offered by counsel for the respondent.

Mr. SIMPSON. There was no such offer made at all. There have been questions asked by Mr. WEBB for the managers and there have been questions asked by counsel for the respondent as to whether the witness did not testify at a certain place in a certain way. The managers might just as well say that because they asked whether or not on such and such a date he did not testify to such and such a thing before the Judiciary Committee the whole of his testimony may be put in in bulk here in that way. That is not the result which flows out of any such a suggestion as that. It is an inquiry of him for the purpose of putting him straight upon the record, and it is a particular right which those who are cross-examining have; otherwise cross-examination would amount to nothing. there grows out of that no right to put in a whole bulk of testimony. Such a thing would be the most absurd rule of law imaginable.

If Mr. Worthington had said, "Mr. Williams, did you not on such and such a day testify thus and so?" and read the question and answer, and the managers then thought there was something in some other question or answer in that document which in some way corrected or straightened out or affected that matter, they could then ask him, "Did you not also testify thus and so on that same day?" and get that straightened out in the record in that way; but to put the whole document in, whether it relates to the question or not, would be-Mr. Manager CLAYTON. May I ask the counsel-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must insist that the argument proceed in order. If there is objection, counsel will be heard, a reply will then be received by the Senate, and a conclusion accorded to the party making the objection; but irregular discussion can not be continued without manifest inconvenience and ill result.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I did not intend to interrupt, Mr. President, except by permission of the Senate and the consent of counsel, and it was for the purpose of directing-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had reference to the entire discussion and not to the particular manager who last addressed the Chair. It is necessary that we proceed in order. When there is objection, counsel will be heard; then a reply will be heard, and then a conclusion, but it must be done in that order if we are to proceed methodically.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think, sir, I have brought before the Senate what I desired.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, we have agreed that this matter may go over until to-morrow, so that we may see just what has taken place.
Mr. Manager WEBB, That was the agreement, Mr. President.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) You told Col. Worthington a few moments ago that you could get options when others could not do it. What peculiar influence or power did you have to get options when other men failed to get them? Was it the influence of Judge Archbald?—A. How is that?
Q. You told Col. Worthington a few moments ago that you could get options on culm banks when other men failed to get them. What was your peculiar influence to enable you to get these culm banks when other men could not—was it Judge Archbald's assistance—A. No, sir.

Q. What did you mean when you told the colonel that?—A. What?

Q. What did you mean when you told Col. Worthington that?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Please say "Mr. Worthington."
Mr. Manager WEBB. "Mr. Worthington," I beg pardon.
A. I had one lease from Forest City to Moosic of all the Erie culm without the judge's aid. I never asked the judge—Q. Why did you tell Mr. Worthington that you could get eptions when other men failed?—A. I could. I could get this one when Boland could not touch it at all,

Q. You got this option on the Katydid when other men had failed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was the one you referred to; and you got that through the influence of Judge Archbald, did you not?—A. I did not, sir. I only got one part of it through Judge Archbald.

Q. That was the Katydid?—A. Yes; one part of it.

Q. And the Katydid dump belonged to the Erie Railroad Co.—one part of it?—A. One part of it; one-half of it; yes, sir, Q. Mr. Robertson wanted to sell his part, did he not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Eric Railroad Co. would not buy it? Is not that true?—A. No; he wanted to sell it; he had been trying to sell it to the Erie Co.

Q. The Erie would not buy it?—A. No, sir. Q. And the Erie would not lease their part?—A. No.

Q. Until you took hold of it?-A. Yes. They had agreed to sell it to the Du Pont Powder man before that for less than onehalf what I offered for it.

Q. But it was never carried up to Mr. Thomas by Mr. May, and nothing ever came of it. Is not that true?-A. No; but they offered it for $2,000 to du Pont, sir.

Q. Then you say you got the Erie Railroad Co.'s part of this dump through Judge Archbald's influence. Is not that your statement?—A. Yes; by paying a double price for it.

Q. I understand, but at whatever price it might be?—A. They did not favor me because of his influence, because I paid $2,500 more for it than they offered it before. Q. You alone could not get it from Capt. May; you could not get it by yourself?—A. I do not know.

Q. You tried it and failed?—A. I did at the time, but he did not say he would not give it to me.

Q. He declined to let you have it?-A. He declined at the time.

Q. Yes; and you carried the matter back to Judge Archbald?—A. I did.

Q. And are you willing to swear now that you got this culm dump from the Erie Railroad Co. through your influence or through Judge Archbald?—A. I got part of it; yes; their half. Q. Their half through whose influence?—A. Judge Archbald's.

Q. Before you took this letter to Mr. May, did the judge tell you that he had already phoned May in advance that you were coming to see him?—A. No, sir.

Q. I believe the judge in his answer to this article says that before he wrote this letter to Mr. May he had already phoned May about this Katydid dump. Did he ever tell you that he had phoned him?—A. I do not remember anything about it.

Q. When he sent the letter up there to May by you did he tell you he had already communicated with May about the dump?-A. No, sir.

Q. I want to ask you a question or two about this silent-party agreement. It seems that you have stated that you did sign a silent-party agreement and stated that you do not remember it. I ask you if this is not the way it occurred, and if you did not swear to this before the Judiciary Committee: That you did have a silent-party agreement with Mr. Robertson?—A. What-that I did?

Q. I ask you whether, after you had been examined back and forth on this question before the Judiciary Committee, I did not ask you the question, "Mr. Williams, it seems that you did sign a silent-party agreement, but you think that this one in evidence, September 4, is not the one, because that is not the date"?-A. Do you not know that other copy you showed me last night here?

Q. Yes. What about it?-A. That is not the copy. Where did it come from?

Q. That is not the copy you signed?-A. I did not sign any,

Q. Did you sign--A. (Interrupting.) I never signed it. I do not know anything about the copy that you are talking about, where the writing is across the typewriting; I never signed that. I told them at first that I never had signed that.

Q. That particular copy; but I ask you again now, leaving out that particular copy which we referred to last night, did you not sign a silent-party agreement when you got the lease from Robertson, and did you not swear that before the Judiciary Committee?-A. To whom did I sign?

Q. Let me ask you if this statement was not made by you before the committee?

Mr. Rucker. Who was the silent party referred to in that paper?
Mr. Williams. I think that was—
Mr. Rucker. I am not talking about that. Who was the party you referred to when you said "silent party"?
Mr. Williams. It was Judge Archbald.
Mr. Rucker. There is no question about you signing such a paper, is thore?

is there?
Mr. Williams. Yes, sir.
Mr. Rucker, And it had reference to Judge Archbald?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think it was in John——
Mr. RUCKER. I am not asking what it was in.
Mr. WILLIAMS. Let me tell you. It was in John M. Robertson's option. That is where the "silent party" was.
Mr. RUCKER. Why did you write in this paper the phrase "silent party," referring to Judge Archbald? [Page 575.]

Now, then, was not that reference to "silent party" in the option that you first secured from Robertson? you seem to have finally sworn before the Judiciary Committee?-A. I could not say that I ever saw that in Robertson's

Q. Did you ever sign an agreement in which there was a silent party mentioned? I am not talking about the one of September 4 or 5 now, but I am asking this: Did you ever, with Robertson or with anyone else, sign a contract or an assignment in which "silent party" was mentioned?-A. I do not remember any such contract; I do not remember.

Q. Let me ask you if you did not tell Mr. Worthington this on his examination of you before the Judiciary Committee, reading at page 579 of the record:

Mr. Worthington. I would like to ask you to explain, if you can, why it is you say to me that you executed only one contract or assignment to Mr. Boland, in which there was nothing said about a silent party, and then the next minute you say to the members of the committee that you did understand you signed something in which there was reference to a silent party? How do you explain that contradiction?

Mr. Williams. I don't remember signing such a contract as that, but I tell you that there was a silent party in one paper that we had—a silent partner.

Did you tell Mr. Worthington that?—A. I do not know. Q. Sir?—A. I could not say whether I said that or not.

Q. Was there any paper that you ever signed, whether in the presence of Mr. Boland or any other person, in which the words "silent party" were used?—A. Why should he use the "silent party" when he put his own name in the Conn paper? Why should he put in "silent party"?

Q. You need not argue the case. I wish you would listen to this question. Again, on page 590:

The ACTING CHAIRMAN. Then your contention is that the contract which has been shown you here, Exhibit 20-

That is the contract of September 5, in which you refer to the silent party and which you now say you did not sign-which contains the language "and a silent party, whose name is known only to the persons named therein," was drawn in August and not in September? In other words, I understood you to say that the date had been changed on it?

Mr. Willlams. It was drawn before April, sir.

The Acting Chairman. It was drawn before April?

Mr. Williams. Yes, sir.

The Acting Chairman. But it was drawn and signed by you? Is that right?

Mr. Carlin. He says a contract was, but this contract never was.

The Acting Chairman. I understand; but I am asking about this particular contract. As I remembered his testimony day before yesterday, he contended that while he signed this contract with the "silent-party" language in it. it was really signed before he ever tried to make the deal with Robertson, and that after the deal was made with Boland he contends the date was changed on it to September 5. Was not that your contention the other day, Mr. Williams?

Mr. Williams. Wait, now—

The Acting Chairman. I wish you would listen to my question.

Mr. Williams. Yes, sir.

The Acting Chairman. I say, was not that your contention the other day?

Mr. Williams. Yes, sir.

The Acting Chairman. That while you did sign this contract, this assignment to Mr. Boland, it was really signed not on September 5 but at some day before that time?

Mr. Williams. It was signed before this [exhibiting memorandum book]. Now, there is the time I got the culm from Robertson. You will see the date.

The Acting Chairman. April 5?

Mr. Williams. April 5; yes, sir.

Mr. Graham. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that you put in the record what that book is.

Is that your present contention—that you did sign a silent-

Is that your present contention—that you did sign a silent-party contract, but that it was not dated September 5, but some prior time? [A pause.] What do you say about that now, Mr. Williams?—A. I do not know anything about that contract that Boland claims that was wrote right on an angle across the paper there; I do not know anything about it; I can not have any memory of such a paper that ever came before me.

Q. Did you ever before September 5 sign any contract containing a silent-party reference?—A. The only paper I signed to him was before the option was got; before I got the option from Robertson.

Q. I believe you admit that you did sign this paper exhibited to you yesterday—the assignment of September 5—in which the silent party is included. You signed that?—A. I never signed that paper. I can not remember anything about such a paper in the world. And where did you get the paper you brought before me last night? Where did you get the paper? Will you bring that here? [A paper was handed to the witness by Mr. Manager Weel.]—A. Oh, that is it? Well, this is not the paper, you know.

Q. (By Mr. Manager WEBB.) Now, which was the paper you signed?—A. Let me tell you now. That paper was printed down to the bottom here [indicating] and written across that This is not the paper, sir. No, sir.

Q. Did you sign this paper?—A. Did I sign it?

Q. Is not that your signature?—A. Yes, sir; that is my signature; but how did they get it there? That is the question. It is my signature all right; but you know how Jim Crawford's will was made, but I never signed. Why did he not bring that before, instead of bringing the other paper that was signed right across the printing of the stenographer?

Q. Are you in the habit of signing papers the contents of which you do not know?-A. No; not very often, sir,

Q. Then you did sign this paper?—A. Did I?
Q. You say you did?—A. Oh, you say so. No; I do not say so, because that paper—why did you bring that paper? Last night was the first time I saw it. The other paper, I told you, was signed at an angle across the writing on the paper.

Q. Well, Mr. Williams, I understand you to say that is your signature?—A. I say that, but I say Jim Crawford's will was signed the same way.

Q. Then you say that that is your signature?—A. Yes; it is my signature; but where did they get it? That is the point.
Q. That is Exhibit 7. One more question, please. When you went to the judge, after having seen May, and the conversation arose about the lighterage case, who mentioned the lighterage cases first?-A. I did.

Q. Let me ask you if you did not swear this before the House Judiciary Committee last May [reading from page 497]:

The CHAIRMAN. Did the judge, about that time, mention the lighterage cases to you in any conversation?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I seen them right there on the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Was anything said about the lighterage cases?

Mr. WILLIAMS. He said that he had cases for them there at the time.

That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. Meaning that he had cases before him in the court

The CHAIRMAN. Meaning that he had class that time?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir. I did not understand what lighterage was at all.

The CHAIRMAN. And did he say that the Eric Railroad was a party defendant to those cases?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes, sir.

Did you swear to that?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is true, is it not?—A. Yes, sir; that is true. Mr. Manager WEBB. That is all, Mr. President.

Recross-examination by Mr. Worthington:

Q. When you said just now, "Yes; that is true," in answer to Mr. Webb's question, what did you mean?—A. What did I

Q. What was it you meant was true?-A. It was true that we talked about the lighterage case.

Q. Do you mean to say it is true the judge asked the question first?—A. No; I do not say that. I say that we talked about it. Q. How do you know that Mr. Robertson offered to sell his interest in the Katydid culm dump to Capt. May's company and could not do it?—A. He told me himself.

Q. Robertson told you?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is all you know about it—what Robertson told you?— A. Yes, sir. There is the man there.

Q. Where?—A. Up there [indicating the gallery].
Q. I understood you to say to Mr. Webb just now that you tried to get the Katydid yourself before you went there with a letter from Judge Archbald. That is not so, is it?—A. I got the Robertson part of it, I told you; yes, sir.
Q. You did not go to Capt. May until you went there with a etter from the judge?—A. No, sir.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I send to the desk two questions which I should like to have the witness answer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks that the questions submitted by him be propounded to the witness. The Secretary will read them.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Was the docket which you saw in Judge Archbald's room in writing or in print?

A. In print.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next question offered by the Senator from Georgia will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. Please describe the appearance of the docket, and state at what place, with reference to the top or bottom of the page, the Erie cases were printed in the docket.

A. They were printed on top of the page.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness may retire. The managers will call their next witness.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, we do not wish the witness to be discharged at this time, because we may desire to recall him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes. The witness will remain in attendance.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think it should be understood that no witnesses are to be discharged unless counsel on both sides consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the order given, then.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Do you mean to say-I ask for information—that if we are through with a witness and hear no expression of a desire on the part of the respondent that the witness attend further upon the court, we shall not have him discharged until we get the consent of the opposing counsel?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the suggestion of counsel.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I think it much better, if either side wishes to discharge a witness, to ask the other side whether it has any objection.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I ask that because I think in one or two instances we have already, perhaps, dispensed with the attendance of some of the witnesses, and it seems to me that that makes a very difficult rule for us to follow. But we will do the best we can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is a different case altogether. The suggestion refers only to witnesses put upon the

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I meant it to apply to those who are subpænaed. As a matter of fact, we have refrained from issuing subpænas to witnesses because we have understood they would be brought here by the managers on the part of the House. I think it might be very troublesome if a witness subpænaed here should be discharged without our knowing it. It is very easy to arrange the matter. Counsel and the managers are here together every day, and we can communicate with them by telephone when we are not here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless the matter is arranged between counsel, the Chair suggests that if the counsel for the respondent desires a witness it is perfectly competent for him to subpæna the witness on his own account.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I would say, in fairness to the managers on the part of the House, that in quite a number of instances gentlemen having important business engagements have asked the managers to let them go home, and, if needed, to call them back by wire and they would come. We have done that in a number of instances. Now, it may be developed in the case that we may not want to call back those gentlemen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has already suggested to counsel for the respondent that if he desires the attendance of any witness who has also been subpoenaed by the managers, it is competent for counsel to subpæna him, and that will insure his attendance.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. That is entirely satisfactory.

Mr. Manager WEBB. Mr. President, Mr. Sterling, one of the managers, will examine the next witness, who is Mr. W. A. May.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Call in the witness.

Q. What do you mean by the Katydid dump?dump made by the operations of the Katydid colliery.

Q. Describe briefly what you mean by a culm dump.—A. Culm is the refuse coal made in preparing coal for market.

Q. How is the refuse made?—A. By breaking up run-of-mine coal, running it through the breaker and making it into the various sizes.

Q. A culm dump is not made except as an incident to mining coal, is it?—A. That is all.
Q. And is thrown aside, and at one time was abandoned as refuse?-A. That is correct.

Q. And as worthless?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the accumulation of this refuse at the different collieries are called culm dumps?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you not suggest to Judge Archbald in the conversation over the phone that he send you a letter?-A. It may be possible; I do not remember, Q. In any event, Mr. Williams came to you with a letter?-A. Yes, sir; he did.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I ask that this be marked as an exhibit.

The letter referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 11."

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Look at Exhibit No. 11, Mr. May, and state if that is the letter Mr. Williams brought to you about the day it bears date .- A. (After examination.) That is the letter.

Mr. Manager STERLING (to Mr. Worthington). Do you want to see it?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We are familiar with it.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We offer the letter, and will ask the Clerk to read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, it will be marked and read.

The letter referred to was marked "Exhibit No. 11" and was read, as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 11.]

(United States Commerce Court, Washington.)

SCRANTON, PA., March 31, 1911.

W. A. MAY, Esq., Superintendent Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

DEAR SIR: I write to inquire whether your company will dispose of your interest in the Katydid culm dump belonging to the old Robertson & Law operation at Brownsville? And, if so, will you kindly put a value with a proper it? price upon it?

Yours, very truly, R. W. ARCHBALD.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING). I wish you would look at the notation at the bottom of the letter and state who put that there—A. I put the upper notation; that is, just below the signature. That is in my handwriting.

Q. When did you do that?—A. On March 31, 1911.
Q. Please read your notation.—A. "Have asked Beyea to have an estimate made of the quantity of material in this bank."

Q. Who is Beyen?—A. He is the land agent.

Q. When Mr. Williams presented that letter to you, just state what he said to you and what you said to him .- A. I do not remember anything he said to me.

Q. Do you remember the substance?-A. I do not.

Q. What did you say to him?—A. I took the letter and put the notations thereon. I do not remember what I said to him. Whether I told him I would have an examination made or not, I do not remember.

Q. To refresh your recollection, Mr. May, did you not say to him that it was not the policy of the railroad company or the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. to dispose of its coal properties?—A. I do not believe I said so.

Q. Did you write Judge Archbald--A. I did not.

Q. In reply to that letter?-A. I did not.

Q. Did you not send any word to Judge Archbald by Mr. Williams at that time?-A. I do not remember.

Q. Do you say now that you did not?-A. I do not say that I did or that I did not.

Q. Do you say that you probably did?-A. I would not.

Q. Do you know whether or not you made any answer in any way, either by letter or by word, through Mr. Williams to Judge Archbald to that letter?-A. I do not remember what I said.

Q. What did you do next after you had made the notation on the letter?-A. I do not remember what I did. Q. Did you order an estimate made of it?-A. I did.

When?-A. The notation was on there.

When did you do it, I am asking you?-A. March 31, 1911.

Q. Why did you do that?-A. Because we wanted to get at the quantity of material in the bank.

Q. Did Mr. Beyea make an estimate of the material?-A. He

Q. Why did he not?-A. He gave it to the engineer in his office to make it.

Q. Was it made by your office or by your company?-A. The estimate was made.

Q. When?—A. Shortly after this date.
Q. What was done about it, then, when you got the estimate?—A. The estimate was made, the sizes of the coal arrived at, and then the matter was brought again to my attention.

Q. By whom?-A. By Mr. Beyea and by Mr. F. A. Johnson. who arrived at the quantity, or rather the percentage, of the various sizes in the bank.

Q. What did you do when you got the report from the engineer?-A. Nothing was done, as I recall it; nothing was done at that particular time.

Q. What did you next do with reference to the matter?-A. The next thing I recall is that I spoke to Mr. Richardson

Q. Had you heard again from Judge Archbald between the 31st of March and the time you spoke to Richardson with reference to it?-A. I do not remember that I did.

Q. What did you and Mr. Richardson do with reference to it?—A. When he visited the mines I spoke to him about it.

Q. What did you say to him?-A. We merely discussed the advisability of selling the dump and concluded not to sell it.

Q. And concluded not to sell it?—A. At that time.
Q. How is that?—A. We concluded we would do nothing at that time.

Q. You decided that it was against the policy of the company to sell its coal property and determined not to sell it?-A. Not

Q. Not necessarily? Did you do it or did you not do it? What was the result of your conference with reference to selling the Katydid?-A. The matter was dropped for the time

Q. What conclusion did you come to with Mr. Richardson with reference to selling the Katydid?-A. We simply stopped at that point-did nothing more.

Q. You decided not to sell it?-A. We decided not to sell it. Q. Then Williams came to you again, did he not?-A. He might have come to me again.

Q. What did you say to him then--A. I do not remember. Q. After you and Mr. Richardson had concluded not to sell it?-A. I do not remember.

Q. He came then with a letter from the judge, did he not ?-I have no recollection of getting a letter from the judge through Mr. Williams.

Q. Did you not say to Mr. Williams when he came to you after you conferred with Richardson that you were not going to sell the Katydid?-A. I might have done so; I do not remember.

Q. Did you learn then, after Williams had been to you that time, that he had gone back to Judge Archbald ?- A. I did not.

Q. When did you next hear of this negotiation for this Katydid coal bank on the part of Judge Archbald and Mr. Williams?-A. I think it was in August.

Q. About what time in August?-A. About the 25th of August.

Where did you hear of it?-A. In New York.

Q. Where?-A. In Mr. Richardson's office.

Q. Both his office and Mr. Brownell's office are in New York?-A. They are.

Q. At the same place, are they not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did Richardson say to you then?—A. As I recall it, he told me to take up the Katydid dump matter again.

Q. With whom?—A. With Mr. Williams.

Q. Did he say why?-A. He told me that Judge Archbald had seen him.

Q. Did he tell you when Judge Archbald had seen him?-A. He did not.

O. Did he tell you where he had seen him?—A. I do not recall that.

Q. Did he not tell you that Judge Archbald had come to his offices in New York; that he desired to buy the Katydid coal dump, and that he had told Judge Archbald that he would take it up with you again? Is not that what he said to you?—A. I think that is so.

Q. That is substantially what he said to you?-A. Yes.

Q. And from that you began negotiations again for the sale of the Katydid coal dump?-A. I did.

Q. What did you do?-A. I casually met Judge Archbald and told him

Q. You say you casually met him. What do you mean casually meeting him?—A. I accidentally met him, then.
Q. Where did you meet him?—A. I met him on the street. What do you mean by

Q. When?-A. I think the 29th of August.

Four days after you had been in New York?-A. Yes, sir. Q. What did you say to him?—A. As nearly as I recall it I told him to send Mr. Williams up to see me about the Katydid bank.

Q. Why did you send that message by Judge Archbald?—A.

I incidentally met him and told him because the letter had originally come from him.

Q. And Mr. Richardson told you to open up negotiations again with Williams, you say?—A. Yes.
Q. The reason you told Judge Archbald to send Williams to you again was because you knew that Judge Archbald was interested in the proposed purchase of the coal dump. Is not that true?—A. Not necessarily.

Q. You say "not necessarily." Now, was it true or not? Did you suppose that he was interested at that time?—A. I knew he was interested, but what the character of his interest was I did not know.

Q. Did Williams come up to see you after you sent word to him by Judge Archbald?-A. He did.

Q. The same day?-A. No, sir.

Q. When?-A. I think it was the next day.

Then what did you do when Williams came?-A. I told him that I would recommend the sale of the dump for $4,500. I do not remember whether I told him I would write him, but because of that interview I wrote a letter.

Q. To Mr. Williams?-A. To Mr. Williams,

Q. When you met Judge Archbald on the street, what else did you say to him besides telling him to send Mr. Williams up to see you?-A. Nothing that I recall,

Q. Did you not say to him that you would let them have the Katydid coal dump?—A. No, sir; I do not recall.

Q. You told him what you wanted to see Williams about, did you not?-A. I do not think I did. I might have. I do not remember.

Q. Is this the letter [exhibiting], marked Exhibit One-half, in which you say to Mr. Williams that you recommend the sale of whatever interest the Hillside Co. have?-A. (Examining.) That is the letter

Q. It is the letter you have just referred to?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What occurred next, after you had written that letter to Mr. Williams, the one dated August 30?-A. I think the next thing was the bringing of Mr. Bradley to my office by Mr. Williams.

Q. When was that ?-A. That was in April of this year.

Q. Do you remember about what time it was?—A. It must have been about April 8 or 9.

Q. Who came with Mr. Bradley to your office?-A. Mr. Williams.

Q. What occurred there?-A. Mr. Williams introduced Mr. Bradley to me as a purchaser of our interest in the Katydid

Q. In this letter of August 30 you propose to sell the interest of the Hillside Co. for $4,500. Now, when Williams came there with Bradley, did they state to you the terms on which Bradley was taking the property?—A. No; they did not. Q. You say they did not?—A. They did not.

Q. Go ahead and state what was said .- A. As nearly as I remember it, I asked Mr. Bradley for references as to his financial responsibility, and he gave me the references; and as I was going down to the Consolidated breaker, which is situated in that vicinity, I told him I would go down to the dump with them, and I did go down to the dump, I think that afternoon, and Mr. Bradley looked at it and said he was willing to take it.

Q. At what price?-A. At $4,500 for everything below pea size, and to pay royalty on pea and above.

Q. You say that Bradley said he would take it at that price?-A. He did.

Q. Was not that the price at which Williams and Archbald were buying it?—A. It was the price that they were to get it at. Q. From you?—A. From us.

Q. But you knew they had sold it to Bradley for $20,000?-A. I did not.

Q. Did you know what price they had sold it at?-A. I did

Q. Then Bradley did not say he would take it at $4,500, did he?-A. No; he said that he was willing to take the bank, after looking at it. I do not believe he said he would take it at $4,500.

Q. Did you not know of an effort on the part of Williams and Archbald to sell this property to Conn?-A. I did.

Q. Then this was not the next thing that occurred. was it with reference to the sale of the property to Conn?—A. The sale of the property to Conn was his request from me to know what our investigations disclosed as to what the bank contained. That is my recollection.

Q. That inquiry was from Conn?-A. That was from Conn.

Q. Had you received a letter from Judge Archbald prior to that about the sale to Conn?-A. No; I think that Mr. Conn inquired before that letter came.

Q. Look at this letter [presenting letter], Exhibit 12, and state if you got that letter from Judge Archbald?—A. (Examining letter.) Yes, sir; I got that letter from Judge Archbald.

Q. What date does it bear?—A. November 29, 1911. Q. Did you make any notations on that letter?—A. No, sir. Mr. Manager STERLING. Just give it to the clerk. We offer it, Mr. President, and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Did you want to see it, Mr. Worth-

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Oh, no. The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 12.]

SCRANTON, November 29, 1911.

W. A. May, Esq., General Manager Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

My Dear Carr. May: I have closed a deal on behalf of Mr. Williams for the Katydid culm dump with the Laurel Line Co., as reported to you by telephone this morning, and am therefore ready to close with you at any time you indicate—the earlier the better. Please let me look over the papers you have drawn before you execute them. I go to Washington on Monday for a few days, and, if not too much to ask, I would like before I go to get the preliminaries disposed of.

Very truly, yours,

R. W. Archeald

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING). The letter that has just been read, marked Exhibit 12, was in the handwriting of Judge Archbald, was it not?-A. It was.

Q. Did you answer that letter?-A. I answered the letter;

yes, sir.

Q. Look at Exhibit 13 [presenting letter] and state if that is the answer which you made?—A. (Examining letter.) That is the answer I made.

Mr. Manager STERLING. We offer it in evidence, and I ask the Clerk to read it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 13.]

DECEMBER 1, 1911.

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

My Dear Judge: Your note of the 29th ultimo, telling me of the consummation of the sale of the Katydid culm dump and requesting that the papers for the sale of the Hillside's interest be submitted to you before you leave for Washington on the 4th instant, is received.

I regret very much that I can not have the papers ready by that time. I shall, however, take the matter up with our attorneys to-day and do the very best I can. If it were not necessary to submit the papers to our New York office I could do as you wish, but that is the obstacle. obstacle. Yours, very truly,

General Manager.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. May, the letter just read was not the original?-A. No. sir.

Q. That was just a copy of the letter which you sent to Judge Archbald?-A. Just a copy.

Q. Look at Exhibit 14 [presenting letter] and state if you received that letter from Judge Archbald.—A. (Examining letter.) I received that letter from Judge Archbald. Mr. Manager STERLING. We offer it and ask that it be read. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read it. The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 14.]

(United States Commerce Court, Washington.)

SCRANTON, PA., December 14, 1911.

MY DEAR CAPT. MAY: The closer I look into the claim of Mr. Debertson, the more I am impressed with the idea that it is something substantial. And the less, on the other hand, do I feel that there is very much consideration to be given to the Everhart end of it. In order, however, to relieve the matter of any question, I am endeavoring to see whether I can secure from them and from the E. & G. Brookes Co. people a release of their respective interests, for which I have made them what I consider a fair offer. In the meantime, may I ask that you regard the price which you have given us for the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. interest as confidential.

Yours, very truly,

R. W. Archbald.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. May, when you received that letter did you form the opinion then that Judge Archbald had a pecuniary interest in this transaction?-A. I arrived at no conclusion as to his interest.

Q. He spoke about the price he was paying for it in that letter? Did it occur to you that he himself had any interest in the dump?-A. I did not know what interest he had.

Q. That is not the question, Mr. May. Did it occur to you from the letter which he wrote you at that time that he was buying this on his own account or that he had an interest in the dump?-A. I did not know what his interest was.

Q. I am not asking you that. Did it occur to you that he had any interest at all in it?—A. He might have had an interest of some kind, but what his interest was I do not know.

Q. Well, you thought he had an interest of some kind in it, did you not?-A. Of some kind; but just what it was I did not

Q. Then you replied to that letter by Exhibit 15, did you not [handing a letter to the witness] ?-A. (After examination.) I

Mr. Manager STERLING. Will the Secretary please read the letter which we offer?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 15.]

DECEMBER 15, 1911.

Hon. R. W. ARCHBALD, Scranton, Pa.

MY DEAR JUDGE: Your letter of the 14th instant in regard to claim of Mr. Robertson, stating that you were trying to get in touch with the E. & G. Brooks Co. people, etc., and requesting that I say nothing about the price given you by the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. for its interest, is received.

I shall say nothing to anyone about our interest.

Yours, very truly,

Vice President and General Manager.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) That is a copy of the letter which you sent to Judge Archbald, is it not?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was not until April, until Mr. Bradley came with Mr. Williams to your office, as I understood you?-A. It was in April.

Q. And after you had gone with Mr. Bradley to look at the dump did you have any meeting with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was it that you told him or that he told you that he would take the dump?-A. I think it was when we were on the dump

Q. Was there any arrangement made at that time about drawing up the contract?-A. I think there was; at least the form was drawn.

- Q. When?-A. It was drawn within a day or two after we were down at the bank.
- Q. To whom was that contract made?-A. To Mr. Williams. Q. It is the contract that was offered in evidence here yesterday, is it not?—A. I presume so.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. That is admitted.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Well, it is this contract without date, or proposed contract, marked "Exhibit 5," in which it is stated that the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. grants and conveys unto Edward J. Williams all its right, title, and interest to the Katydid culm bank. That [showing the paper to the witness] is the contract which you drew up at that time, is it not?-A. That is the form.

Q. And what did you do with it?-A. I sent that form to Mr.

Bradley.

Q. With a letter?-A. With a letter.

Q. Is the letter in here [indicating]?-A. I do not know Mr. Manager STERLING (to Mr. Manager WEBB). Did you offer that letter yesterday? Mr. Manager WEBB. Yes. The Secretary. It is Exhibit 6.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Is this letter, marked "Exhibit 6," signed by yourself, and dated April 11, the letter which accompanied the contract which you sent to Mr. Bradley?-A. That is the letter, but it is signed by my chief clerk.

Q. Is not that your signature?-A. It is my signature; but he signed it.

Q. Well, it was signed on your authority?—A. Yes; it was.

Q. That was a copy that you looked at, was it not?-A. I think it was.

Q. Now look at this [handing paper to the witness] and see if this is not the original—the upper part of it?—A. Yes; that is correct; that is the original.

Q. Look at the notation at the bottom in typewriting. Who put that at the bottom of that letter?-A. The typewritten portion?

Q. Yes, sir.-A. My stenographer.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is Exhibit 16, is it not, I will inquire of the Secretary?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is marked "Exhibit 16." Mr. Manager STERLING. We offer Exhibit 16, including the typewritten statement at the bottom under the signature.

ask to have the entire letter and the notation read. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

Inc.

The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 16.]

(Pennsylvania Coal Co., Hillside Coal & Iron Co., New York, Susque-hanna & Western Coal Co., Northwestern Mining & Exchange Co., Blossburg Coal Co.)

OFFICE OF THE GENERAL MANAGER, Scranton, Pa., April 11, 1912.

Mr. RICHARD BRADLEY, Peckville, Pa.

Dear Sir: Herewith please find proposed form of agreement conveying the interest of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. in the culm pfles on the surface of lot 46, sinate partly in Lackawanna and partly in Luzerne Counties, Pa.

Will you please confer with Mr. E. J. Williams, to whom I have sent a copy of this letter, in regard to the form herewith and advise whether or not same meets with your approval. If the agreement is satisfactory to you, it will submitted to the executive officers of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. for their consideration and approval.

Yours, very truly,

W. A. May,

W. A. MAY, Vice President and General Manager.

APRIL 12, 1912.

APRIL 12, 1912.

This letter and the attached form were returned to me at the Laurel Line station at 1.10 p. m., April 12, 1912, by Mr. Bradley, who stated that the form was satisfactory to him. I at the same time told him that notice was served on me by C. P. Holden not to dispose of the interest of the E. & G. Brook Land Co., as he held an option, and also in the name of his wife, who also has a small interest, and a notice from James E. Heckel, administrator of the James Everhart estate, which is the owner of five twenty-fourths. Mr. Bradley wanted to know whether he should go down there to-day, he being on the way there at the time I saw him. I told him I saw no objections to him going down, but I would have to consult our attorneys before going any further with the matter. He did not say whether he had seen Mr. Williams or not. williams or not.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) That was the notation that you put at the bottom of the letter after Bradley had returned it to you?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And after he had returned it to you at your request?-A.

Yes, sir. Q. That occurred the next day, or two days, after you had sent that letter with the contract to Mr. Bradley?—A. It occurred on the 12th of April, and I sent it on the 11th.

Q. The next day?—A. The next day. Q. Now, what had occurred in the meantime to cause you Williams?—A. Mr. C. P. Holden called on me at my office and objected to the sale of our interest. On the morning of the 12th I received two or three letters, one from him, one from his attorney, and I think one from the administrator of the James Everhart estate.

Q. Do you know how it came about that all these people sent these letters in to you at that time, just at the time you were about to convey your interest?—A. I do not know why.

Q. Do you think it remarkable that all these persons would get these letters in there objecting to the sale of that property after it had been lying dormant there for so long and they had never made any claim to it?-A. Not necessarily.

Q. You do not think it strange at all?-A. Not at all.

Q. They did not object to your selling your interest in it, did they?-A. There was a question as to-

Q. Just answer my question. In your notation you say that they objected to your selling their interest in it. Did they object to your selling their interest in it, or did they object to the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. selling its interest in it?—A. They objected to a sale of any kind, as I understood it.

Q. Then your notation is not correct?—A. That may be.

Q. Did you consider it of any importance that somebody else would notify you not to sell the interest of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. in this dump?—A. It was of importance to us.

Q. You were not selling anything but your interest, were you?—A. That was all.

Q. This contract which you had prepared to send to Bradley simply specified that you were conveying the right, title, and interest of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.?-A. That is right.

Q. And you were not intending to warrant anything, were you?—A. But—

Q. Wait. You were not intending in that contract to warrant anything, were you?—A. We were not going to warrant anything. thing; but we had other interests that I had to look after, and this was a very small matter.

Q. Just answer my question. Is it not a fact that between the time you sent this contract to Bradley and the time you met him at the Laurel Station and demanded it back it had developed that this investigation was going on from the Department of Justice with reference to Judge Archbald's connection with this deal and the Erie Railroad Co.?-A. If it did I did not know it.

Q. Had you not heard-A. I had not.

Q. Had you not heard just at that time, when it was beginning to be rumored about the streets of Scrantonnot.

Q. Wait-that an agent was there from the Department of Justice investigating these deals which Judge Archbald was having with the railroad companies, and was not that the reason you demanded this contract back from Bradley?—A. It was not.

Q. At what hour of the day did you see Bradley?-A. About 1 o'clock.

Q. On the 12th?-A. On the 12th.

Q. And you had mailed this contract to him on the 11th?-A. On the 11th.

Q. What time of day had you mailed it?-A. I think it was mailed in the afternoon.

Q. Of the 11th?-A. Yes; of the 11th.

Q. Now, when was it that these letters which you speak of came into your hands from these people notifying you not to sell?-A. On the morning of the 12th.

Q. They were all there on the morning of the 12th?-A. Not all of them. There were two or three; some came later.

Q. Did you get information from anybody, or did somebody tell you, that a tip had gone out from the office of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. that they wanted an excuse for withdrawing this contract, and for that reason had these letters sent in there?-A. No, sir.

Q. At any rate, you refused to make the conveyance to Mr. Williams at that time, did you?-A. I did at that time.

Q. Now, going back, it was during the negotiations after you had received that letter in April from Judge Archbald, after you had talked with Mr. Richardson and had a conference with him-I mean the conference in which you and he determined not to sell the Katydid coal dump-that you and he changed your minds with reference to it, or he changed his mind and gave you different directions from what he had given you before?-A. He told me-

Q. Wait now. That occurred, did it not, between those dates?-A. Please repeat that question. I did not get it. I want to answer it.

Q. Between the time that you got the letter from Judge Archbald in April and after the time that you and Richardson to change your mind with reference to selling that dump to Mr. | had conferred and decided not to sell the Katydid coal dumpit was after that and before you sent word by Judge Archbald to Williams that you would sell him the mine-that you and he changed your minds with reference to selling the coal dump, was it not?-A. There was no change in my mind, but Mr. Richardson told me to take the matter up again.

Q. And he told you that Judge Archbald had been to New York to see him at that time, did he not?—A. That is as I remember it.

Q. Did he tell you when he was in New York?-A. No; he did not, as I recall.

Q. Do you know when he was in New York?-A. Judge Archbald?

Q. Yes.--A. I do not.

Q. What effect did the fact that Judge Archbald appeared to be interested in this proposition have upon the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. and the Erie Railroad Co. with reference to the change of policy?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I object to that question except as it may refer to what is in the witness's own mind to what he knows of his own knowledge with reference to the others.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I am merely asking for his knowledge about it—if he has knowledge.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. If I understand it is confined to his knowledge, of course I do not object; but we do not want any hearsay

- The Witness. Will you repeat that question?
 Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) What effect did the fact that Judge Archbald appeared at that time to have an interest in this dymp have upon the officials of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. and the Erie Railroad Co. with reference to changing their policy in regard to selling this coal dump?-A. I do not know. I only know that Mr. Richardson, in the ordinary course of business, told me to take the matter up again and see what could be done with it.
- Q. Now, that is not all he told you, is it?-A. That is all I remember.

Q. He told you that Judge Archbald had been to see him, did he not?-A. Yes; that is correct.

Q. And you talked about the fact that Robert W. Archbald was a judge of the Federal court, did you not, at that time?-A. No, sir: we did not.

Q. And do you not know as a fact that because Judge Archbald saw him about it and because he was a judge of the Federal court was the reason that you changed your mind with reference to the sale of the Katydid dump?-A. Not at all.

Q. Did you not swear to that before the committee?-A. I did not.

Q. Well, you would not have sold it to Williams, would you?-A. No; we would not.

Q. You would not have sold it to anybody else, would you?-A. Yes; we would.

Q. What is the answer?-A. We would have if there had been no entanglements or complications in connection with it.

Q. Why would you not sell it to Williams until after Judge Archbald came into the deal?-A. Because I did not consider him responsible.

O. You knew that he was not paying a dollar for it; that he was just getting an option and depending on the sale of it to pay you anyhow, even with Judge Archbald in it, did you not?—
A. I do not remember that I knew what he was going to do with it.

Q. Did you know when you made this contract with Bradley that Mr. Bradley was to give you a check for $4,500?-A. Yes; that was subsequent.

Q. You knew, then, that Bradley was paying to you the price which they had agreed to pay you?—A. Yes; that was in April, but the letter was given to Mr. Williams in August of the previous year. Of course at the time

Q. You were not expecting Judge Archbald or Williams to pay anything until they sold it, anyhow, were you?-A. I do not remember that I thought anything about it.

Q. Did you ever ask him for pay after you told him he could have it?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. It was in August—the 30th day of August—that you wrote that letter to Williams——A. It was.

Q. Stating the terms on which he could have it?-A. It was. Q. They did not pay you then, and they never offered to pay you; and not until April, until Bradley came there and agreed to take the mine from Williams and Archbald, was anything said about the Hillside Iron & Coal Co. getting its forty-five hundred dollars?-A. Bradley was the first man that offered to pay us, or, rather, he was the first man we expected to get any pay from.

Q. Why would you not have been just as secure in your pay if you had sold it to Williams on those terms as you were in selling it to Williams and Archbald?

The WITNESS. Please repeat that.

Q. Why were you not just as secure in getting your pay, if you had sold it to Williams on those same terms, as you were by selling it to Archbald and Williams together?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why not?-A. Because we did not know where the money was to come from.

Q. You knew it was not to come from anywhere until they sold it. You were giving them an option and if they did not sell it they would not take it from you .- A. If they had offered the price themselves, we would have accepted that of course.

Q. But you did not expect them to do that?-A. I do not remember anything

Q. Although Archbald was in it, you did not expect them to do that?—A. I do not know.

Q. You expected to wait for your money until they had sold it and that is what you did do, although Archbald was in it; is not that true?—A. That is what we did in Bradley's case.

Q. Now, let me ask you. You testified last summer before the Committee on the Judiciary in this investigation?-A. I did.

Q. I will ask you if this question was asked you by Chairman CLAYTON:

The CHAIRMAN. What I want to know, Mr. May, to be perfectly frank with you, is, was it on account of Judge Archbald's influence with you that you afterwards wrote Williams this letter of August 30, in which you signified a desire to sell the property?

And did you not make this answer:

Mr. May. It was the receipt of Judge Archbald's letter, in the first place, that caused me to make the examination. Even after August 31—or August 30—and up to April of this year I have refused to sell the bank, or our interest in the bank.

And then this question:

The CHAIRMAN. Then you paid no attention to Williams in his nogotiations, except whenever he presented a request from Judge Archbald, about the sale of this property. Is that the fact?

And your answer:

Mr. May. I think that is so.

A. That is correct. I answered that way.

Q. You would answer the question the same way now ?-A.

Q. And then this question by Chairman CLAYTON:

It was through Judge Archbald's influence that Williams was getting or seeking to get from you the sale of this property?

Mr. May. Yes.

A. That is right. But if you will allow me, I should like to add to that-

Mr. Manager STERLING. Wait until I ask you these questions:

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) And were you asked this question:

The CHAIRMAN, And without Judge Archbald's influence Mr. Williams could not even have had an investigation of the value and the title of that property made?

Mr. May. No.

The CHAIRMAN, He could not have done that?

Mr. MAY. No.

That is correct?—A. That is correct.

Q. And this question:

The CHAIRMAN, It was through Judge Archbald's influence that Williams was enabled to have you make this investigation as to the value of the property, the physical contents of the culm bank, and the legal title? Is that true?

Mr. Max. That is right.

A. That is correct.

Q. And this question:

The CHAIRMAN. And it was through Judge Archbald that you finally signified your willingness to sell this culm bank?
Mr. MAY. My willingness to recommend its sale,

Is that correct?-A. That is correct.

Q. And this question:

The CHAIRMAN, You would have had nothing to do with Williams without the influence or suggestion of Judge Archbald?

Mr. May. No; I would not.

A. That is correct. Now may I say what I wanted to say a moment ago?

Mr. Manager STERLING. Just a minute.

The Witness. It is with reference to what you have asked. Mr. Manager STERLING. You may make a statement, if you desire to.

The WITNESS. It was only the judgeship added to his influence as a man and in no other way that these answers were made.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) As I understand you, then, it was the fact of the judgeship and Robert W. Archbald as a man that had its influence upon the Erie Railroad Co. and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. that induced you to sell the Katydid coal dump to Mr. Williams and Mr. Archbald?-A. It certainly added

Q. Wait; is that true now?-A. I want to explain.

Q. Can you not answer it yes or no?—A. No; I can not. Mr. Manager STERLING. Go ahead and explain.

A. It simply added to his position; I mean as a man. The thought was not with the expectation-

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Not what the thought was with reference to it. What I want to know is, what effect the fact that Mr. Archbald was a judge had upon this transaction?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Mr. President, I submit when a witness is asked what was operating in his mind he has a right and should be allowed to answer. The witness was asked what he was thinking, and he was proceeding to state what he was thinking when counsel stopped him. I do not think that is thinking when counsel stopped him. I do not think that right. The witness should be allowed to finish his answer.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I withdraw the objection and will

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The witness will answer the question and make the explanation he desires

The Witness. Only as it added to his influence, only as it added to his standing as a man, did it affect me. I had no thought of influencing him as a judge.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) It added what to his standing as a man—the fact that he was a judge?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask if this question was asked (p. 743):

Mr. RUCKER I am not asking you about your practice, but I am asking you a direct question: Did the fact of Judge Archbald's making the application, he being a Federal judge, prompt you in whole or in part to make this deal?

Mr. Max. It might have influenced me.

That is correct?-A. I want to add that-

Q. Wait. Did you answer that question in that way?—A. I did.

Q. Did he ask this question, page 742:

Mr. RUCKER. But when Judge Archbald wrote you and asked if you would sell it, and if so, to fix a price, you immediately set about to do that work, did you not?

Mr. May. Yes; I did.

That is correct?-A. That is correct.

Q. And Mr. Rucker proceeded:

Let me ask you this direct question: He was on the Federal bench at that time?

Mr. May. Yes; he was.

That is correct?-A. That is correct.

Q. You knew at the time that the Erie Railroad Co. had a litigation pending in the Commerce Court, of which Judge Archbald was a member, did you not?-A. I did not.

Q. Mr. Richardson knew it, of course, did he not?-A. I do not know.

Q. He is connected with the general solicitor's office there in New York?—A. No, sir. Q. How?—A. No, sir; he is not connected with the general solicitor's office.

Q. He is in the same office with the general solicitor?-A. He has an office on the same floor.

Q. Right next to Mr. Brownell, the general solicitor?-A. No.

sir. It is on the same floor; it is not right next door.
Q. It is all one suite of rooms occupied there by the Erie Railroad Co.?-A. All of the rooms are occupied by the Erie company, but Mr. Brownell's is some distance away.

Q. Mr. Richardson told you that Mr. Brownell had brought Judge Archbald into his office, did he not?—A. No; I do not recall that.

Q. Did you not know at the time that Mr. Brownell had introduced Judge Archbald to Mr. Richardson?-A. No; I do not think I did.

Q. Mr. Brownell, of course, knew what litigation it had pending in the Commerce Court, did he not?-A. Why, presumably.

Q. I will ask you another question, referring to the record at page 742:

Mr. RUCKER. Then, I will ask you if the fact that Judge Archbald was the judge before whom litigation might be taken had anything to do with your determination to sell that property to Mr. Williams at his, Judge Archbald's, request?

Mr. MAY. Well, it might have.

You answered in that way, did you not?-A. Well, it might

No. but I do not think it did.

Q. Mr. May, how many personal conversations have you had with Judge Archbald, or did you have with him, about this transaction prior to the time you withdrew this contract from Bradley?-A. I do not remember.

Q. About how many?-A. I could not tell you.

Q. Have you any estimate at all now of how many times you talked with him personally or over the phone about this?-A. No; I have not.

Q. It was quite a number of times, was it not?—A. No. sir; I can not say; I do not know.

Q. Was it many or few?-A. Well, I do not know.

Q. You talked with him more times about it than you did with E. J. Williams, did you not?—A. No; I do not believe I

Q. As many times?-A. I do not know. I want to answer your questions, but I can not do it.

Q. How many times did Judge Archbald call you up on the phone about it?—A. I do not know.

Q. Williams brought this first letter to you personally, did he not—that was in March?—A. Yes. Q. The 31st day of March?—A. Yes; he did.

Q. Then he came back in June and talked to you about it, did he not?-A. I do not remember.

Q. You testified to that before, did you not?—A. I do not remember it if I did. I would like to have the record read.

Q. In any event, Williams told you, did he not, in some conversation, that Judge Archbald was going to New York to see Brownell?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did you first learn that he had been to New York?-A. In June.

Q. In June?-A. No; I beg your pardon, not in June-in August.

Q. Judge Archbald was there the 4th of August. You say you did not know it until the 25th of August?—A. I did not know it until the 25th of August.

Q. And that is when Richardson told you that Judge Archbald had been down there and told you in the same conversation to take up the negotiations again?-A. That is right.

Q. Is that the first time you had seen Richardson after the 4th of August?-A. That was the first time.

Q. He told you that he had told Judge Archbald he would have you do this, did he not?-A. I do not remember what he

Q. And did he not also say to you at that time that Mr. Brownell, the general solicitor, had brought Judge Archbald into his office?-A. I do not remember that he did.

Q. I will ask you if the chairman did not ask you this question, reading at page 722 of the record:

The CHAIRMAN. Did you refuse to talk business about the sale of the Katydid culm bank with Williams?
Mr. May. Yes; I did.

A. If it is there, I said that; yes, sir.

Q. (Reading:)

The Chairman. When was it you refused to talk over this matter of e sale of the Katydid culm bank with Williams?

Mr. May. I think it was the latter part of June.

That is correct, is it not?—A. If it is there it is correct.

Q. I read further:

The CHAIRMAN. Where was it, and when was it Williams saw you at the time you have just mentioned?

Mr. Max. I think it was in my office; but I do not remember.

The CHAIRMAN. In the latter part of June, to the best of your recollection? Mr. May. Yes, sir.

A. That is right.

Q. That was after you and Mr. Richardson had first conferred and decided not to sell the coal dump?-A. That is correct.

Q. And it was after Archbald's trip to New York, and after you had been to New York that you notified Archbald to send Williams around and you would let him have it?—A. That is correct.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Mr. President, I think we are through with this witness now, but I would like to reserve the right, if it is the intention to adjourn now, to ask him further questions in the morning, if I see fit.

standing.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. Mr. President, before adjourning I will state that the witness for whom the order was taken to-day for the attachment has come, and he is now in the corridor of the Senate Chamber, I believe. I should like him to be brought in and to have him admonished to be present at the session of the court to-morrow and until discharged, refer to Mr. James H. Rittenhouse.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. into the presence of the court. The witness will be brought

Mr. James H. Rittenhouse appeared in the Chamber.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Witness, you are brought before the court to be admonished that you must scrupulously obey the orders you have received in the summons to appear here and not to absent yourself without leave of the Senate. You may now retire.

Mr. Manager CLAYTON. I ask that that be the course pursued.

THURSDAY, December 5, 1912.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God, we come to Thee with glad hearts when we remember that amid the busy whirl and turmoil of life's activities we ofttimes forget Thee, yet Thou art ever mindful of us, and though by devious ways we ofttimes wander from the paths of rectitude and duty Thou art constant in Thy ministrations to us.

Pardon, we beseech Thee, our shortcomings, our weakness, our sins, and hold us close to Thee and life's duties henceforth. And Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. Brown, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for three days, on account of illness.

PHYSICAL VALUATION OF RAILBOADS.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned last Tuesday the previous question had been ordered on the bill H. R. 22593, known as the Adamson bill, providing for the physical valuation of railroads, and there was pending a motion to recommit with instructions, offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann], and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] raised a point of order that the motion to recommit was not in order because it was not germane to the subject matter of the bill.

Unless some gentleman desires to be heard on it, the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker-The SPEAKER. The gentler The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

OLMSTED] is recognized.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, so far as I am concerned, I concede at once the high authority of the precedent cited by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] in support of the proposition that it is not sufficient for the amendment to be germane to the original bill to which this bill is offered as an amendment, but it must be germane to this pending bill. The question is whether this amendment is germane to this bill.

I call attention to page 386, section 780, of the Manual, which treats of the whole subject in this way:

A general subject may be amended by specific propositions of the same class. Thus, the following have been held to be germane: To a bill admitting several Territories into the Union, an amendment adding another Territory; to a bill providing for the construction of buildings in each of two cities, an amendment providing for similar buildings in several other cities; to a resolution embodying two distinct phases of international relationship, an amendment embodying a third.

In section 5838, volume 5, of Hinds' Precedents of the House of Representatives appears a ruling that-

To a bill admitting several Territories into the Union, an amendment adding another Territory is germane.

And, then, in the next section-5839-it says:

To a resolution embodying two distinct phases of international relationship an amendment embodying a third was held to be germane.

There was pending in that case a resolution setting forth that was an imperative duty, in the interest of humanity, to express the earnest hope that the European concert would do certain things in relation to the fanaticism and lawless violence prevalent in Turkey. The resolution then pending combined three resolutions in one. The first one was as I have stated. The second was-

That the President be requested to communicate these resolutions to be Governments of Great Britain, Germany, Austria, France, Italy, the Government and Russia.

And, further:

That the Senate of the United States, the House of Representatives concurring, will support the President in the most vigorous action he may take for the protection and security of American citizens in Turkey.

Then Mr. Hepburn, of Iowa, offered an amendment, as follows:

That, for the purpose of emphasizing our protest against the murders and outrages above recited, the President is directed to furnish the trutish minister his dismissal as a representative of the Sultan at this capital, and to at once terminate all diplomatic relations with the Capital, and to at one Government of Turkey.

That was an entirely new, a different, and distinct subject.

A point of order was made against it by Mr. McCreary, of Kentucky, which was overruled by Speaker Reed, presumably upon the same ground as these other cases to which I have referred were ruled, that such resolution embracing more than one subject it was germane to add still another subject.

Then, in section 5840 it was held that to a bill providing for the construction of a building in each of two cities an amendment providing for similar buildings in other cities would be germane. That was decided longer ago by Speaker Banks, of Massachusetts.

Now, the question, it seems to me, is whether this pending bill contains more than one subject, more than one substantive proposition. If it does, then a third or new substantive proposition would be germane and in order under the rulings which I have cited. Does this bill contain more than one substantive proposition?

The SPEAKER. Is that the rule on that-as to the substantive propositions? What is the subject of this Adamson

Mr. OLMSTED. This bill has at least two subjects. The first provides for the physical valuation of the property of common That is one separate and distinct subject. The Interstate Commerce Commission is to take testimony and determine the value of the property of common carriers. The common carriers may appeal or protest. Then a hearing is awarded upon the protest, and after the hearing the commission is to fix finally the physical value of the property of the common carrier.

That is one proposition. Then the bill contains another. It empowers the commission to investigate as to the amounts and dates of all bonds and stocks outstanding. That is a separate and distinct proposition contained in this bill. The physical valuation of railroads has nothing to do with stocks and bonds, and stocks and bonds have nothing to do with the physical valuation of the railroads. The commission is to find absolutely and determine the value of the physical property; and in addition to that—an entirely separate and distinct proposition-it is to investigate concerning stocks and bonds.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.
Mr. FITZGERALD. The Adamson bill proposes to add a section to the existing law, and in this section is embraced a scheme which is considered essential in order to enable the Interstate Commerce Commission properly to determine whether the rates are reasonable. They are parts of one scheme, and not two independent substantive propositions.

And has not the gentleman, in quoting his authorities, entirely ignored all the decisions, including one by himself, which have established the rule that when a bill proposes to amend an existing law in certain particulars, amendments that might be germane to other provisions of the law but are not intimately related to the thing before the House are not germane to that

Mr. OLMSTED. No, Mr. Speaker; I have not ignored that proposition. I referred to it particularly at the outset. Perhaps the gentleman from New York was not listening.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was listening carefully.

Mr. OLMSTED. I admitted that authority in support of the proposition that the proposed amendment must be germane to this bill. I concede that proposition. In fact, as the gentleman from New York has stated, I made such a ruling myself when occupying the chair upon a former occasion. The question is, Does this bill itself contain more than one proposition? Now, does it? First, there is the physical valuation of the property of common carriers to be determined by the Interstate Commerce Commission. That is one thing complete in itself. Then there is a second proposition, that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall determine as to the amount of bonds outstanding and the names of the stockholders and bondholders, and so forth. The names of the stockholders have nothing to do with the physical valuation of the property of the railroad or with the fixing of rates of that railroad, nor have the names of the bondholders. The commission is instructed to-find and report the facts as to the connection of any bank or banker, capitalist or association of capitalists, or financial institutions or holding company with the ownership, manipulation, management, or control of any stocks and bonds of any such company.

That has nothing to do with the fixing of rates. This amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] proposes to go further, and after the commission has ascertained these facts about stocks and bonds, provide against the fictitious issue of stocks and bonds in the future—a most important proposition, and, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fitz-GERALD] please, fully as important as touching upon the question of rates as anything involved in this bill or any other bill, because if we stop the fictitious issuance of stocks and bonds and the watering of stocks and bonds we stop the inflation of the capital upon which interest and dividends are paid, and rates must be fixed proportionately. So that even upon that argument this proposition to stop fictitious issuance of stocks and bonds may be held germane.

But what I suggest to the Chair is that this bill already containing two or more propositions, an amendment introducing a still further proposition is in order under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman a ques-Has this Adamson bill any provision in it whatever about the issuance of bonds and stocks?

Mr. OLMSTED. Not about the issuance of bonds. The SPEAKER. The Mann amendment has entirely to do with the issuance of bonds and stocks, has it not?

Mr. OLMSTED. Substantially so; yes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman contend that if a bill contains two different substantive propositions, that authorizes a general omnium gatherum of everything that everybody wants put in it on the subject?

Mr. OLMSTED. That is the effect of the rulings which I have cited, particularly the ruling of Mr. Speaker Reed, permitting as germane an amendment canceling the commission of the Turkish ambassador.

The SPEAKER. What was the main proposition in that resolution?

Mr. OLMSTED. It was expressing the sentiments of the Senate and House, deploring the outrages which were being perpetrated in Turkey, and another resolution requiring these timents to be expressed to the Governments of Great Britain, France, and other countries; and then an amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Hepburn, requesting the President to cancel the commission of the Turkish representative at this Capital was declared to be in order.

The SPEAKER. But those things were on the same subject. Mr. OLMSTED. I think not. There was nothing in the original resolution about the Turkish ambassador, or severing relations with the Turkish Government.

The SPEAKER. The original resolution expressed our horror of the way that the Turks were treating people.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is correct. The SPEAKER. And the Henburgh And the Hepburn amendment simply emphasized our opinion of it by adding something that made it effective.

Mr. OLMSTED. This proposal emphasizes the ascertainment of stocks and bonds and the physical valuation, and gives some effect to this bill by providing against the future issuance of stocks and bonds except under certain conditions. The investigation as to stocks and bonds is already provided for in The amendment goes a step further in the same direction and makes the bill effective just as the Hepburn amendment made the Turkish resolution effective by the introduction of a new proposition.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania think that even granting the force of the precedents which he has cited a different philosophy applies to legislation than to the passage of resolutions that have no legal effect?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not think there is any difference in principle, but I have cited several instances which applied directly to legislation. For instance, if we had here a bill granting a pension to John Smith, simply that and nothing more, an amendment granting a pension to John Jones would be held not to be germane, but if the original bill granted a pension to John Smith and another pension to John Jones, it would be held under the rulings that an amendment to pension also John Williams would be in order.

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. Suppose that we were back previous to 1860 in this country, and were considering a bill providing for the enumeration of slaves, or telling how they should be enumerated, as an amendment to an act already in existence. Does the gentleman hold that an amendment abolishing slavery would be in order upon such a bill as that?

Mr. OLMSTED. No: because that bill would contain simply one proposition, the enumeration of slaves, and the abolition of slavery would not be germane to a single proposition to take a census of slaves.

Mr. SIMS. And this bill has only one object and purpose, and that is the valuation of railroads. Then admitting that the information authorized to be acquired by ascertaining the amount of outstanding bonds and stocks is germane to ascertaining the value of the property of the railroads, how, then, can a bill proposing to regulate the issuance of stocks and bonds, directed against railroads themselves, be germane to a mere inquiry as to the amount of outstanding bonds?

Mr. OLMSTED. I have tried to explain that this bill contains more than one proposition. It is to a certain extent a general bill. It provides for the physical valuation of railroads. That is one thing that is definite and complete. After that has been provided, it provides for the ascertainment of the names of stockholders and bondholders and the amount of stocks and bonds and all that sort of thing, and the relation of banks to the companies. I submit that under the precedents it is germane to add a provision that, as the result of that investigation, bonds and stocks shall be issued hereafter only on certain conditions and subject to certain limitations, and with the consent of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SIMS. Does not the amendment offered in this case have to do with the issuance in future, and not with the fact of how many have already been issued?

Mr. OLMSTED. It does

Mr. SIMS. How can it be any more germane to the second subject of the bill than to the first?

Mr. OLMSTED. I have tried to explain that when the bill itself contains more than one proposition, under the uniform rulings of different Speakers it is germane to add a new proposition.

Mr. SIMS. To add one that is not germane to any proposition in the bill?

Mr. OLMSTED. It need not be germane to any proposition in the bill. But I submit that this is germane to a proposition in the bill and is on the same subject. If you say all this is to have relation to fixing the rates, nothing is more important in fixing the rates than that there shall be no fictitious issuance of stocks and bonds. I submit these observations for the consideration of the Chair.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois, in his remarks upon this point of order day before yester-day, contended, first, that this amendment which he had proposed was in order because it was germane to the act which was proposed to be amended, and, second, because it was germane to the bill which we now have before us,

I shall not discuss the first proposition he advanced, but will speak very briefly indeed in support of the second contention which he made. As has already been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], this bill contains two different propositions. The first relates to the physical valuation of railroads and the second relates to the issuance of stocks and bonds. It provides in the most sweeping and specific terms for the investigation into the amount of stocks and bonds that have been issued, the purpose to which the moneys received therefor have been applied, the persons who have been connected with the issuance of stocks and bonds, any manipulation thereof, and the whole history of the transaction; and then it goes further and provides that the railroad corporations themselves must furnish for this purpose, among others, full access to their books, records, papers, documents of all kinds, and further provides that the commission may make rules and regulations for the enforcement of the provisions in this bill.

Now, what is the object of this provision with reference to the amount of stocks and bonds issued here and the manner in which they have been issued? Abstractly considered, neither this House nor any person in the United States cares how much stocks and bonds have been issued in the past. The money has been spent, it has gone, and the liens created must stand and be recognized as valid obligations.

The argument here was when the bill was under discussion that publicity thereby obtained would be a restraining factor in the issuance of stocks and bonds in the future, and in a measure control it.

I wish to go further in my argument and show that the bill undertakes to exercise control over the issuance of stocks and bonds; to go further and show that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois goes further and is relevant to the subject which it seeks to amend, and therefore, in dictionary terms at least, is germane thereto.

As I said, I wish to show that this bill, in fact, provides for the control over the issuance of stocks and bonds. Hereafter, if this bill passes, no stocks and bonds can be issued without the commission has the right to call for and report upon them, without the commission has the right to investigate into the issuance of them and the manner in which the proceeds have been spent. Up to this time, and as a matter of circumstance now, the commission has nothing whatever to do with the issuance of stocks and bonds, except that it may bear in some remote degree on some other question sought to be investigated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Iowa to point out in the bill anything that has to do with the future issuance of stocks and bonds.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. If the Chair will pardon me, I did not suppose it would be contended that the matters provided for in this bill with reference to the present stocks and bonds would not apply to stocks and bonds issued in the future.

The SPEAKER. Is there anything in the Adamson bill about the issuance of stocks and bonds? If there is, I wish the gentleman would point it out.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. In case any stocks and bonds are issued in the future, I hardly think it would be contended that thereupon the Interstate Commerce Commission will not have the right, if the bill passes, to investigate the issuance of stocks and bonds and require the railway company to furnish a full report, and then to make orders, regulations, and rules which will have the force of a law.

Of course, if it is contended here and if the Chair should hold that these provisions with reference to stocks and bonds had application only to stocks and bonds which have been heretofore issued, I shall have to admit that my argument falls to the ground.

Mr. SIMS. It can only have reference to the stocks and bonds outstanding at the time the investigation is made, and could Mr. SIMS. not possibly apply to subsequent stock and bond issues unless there is a subsequent investigation.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Tennessee say that if this act is passed and stocks and bonds are subsequently issued by railroad companies under and by virtue of this act, the commission will have no right to investigate as to the issuance of those stocks and bonds?

Mr. SIMS. Incidentally to making the physical valuation-Mr. GREEN of Iowa. But the gentleman is not answering the question at all. The question can be answered by yes or no. Mr. SIMS. Under this law it does not make any investigation conditional and precedent to the issuance of stocks and

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It does not. That is true, but this amendment which is offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] simply seeks to further control, to exercise a further act of control. This investigation is an act of control over the issuance of stocks and bonds.

Mr. SIMS. Oh, no.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It must be, necessarily,

Mr. SIMS. Not at all. Mr. GREEN of Iowa. And the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois goes only one step further toward the process of controlling it.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Certainly.
Mr. CULLOP. From the tenor of the gentleman's argument I take it he misapprehends the purpose of the measure. It is for the purpose of changing the method by which freight rates or transportation tolls are now fixed, and it has nothing to do, so far as the amount of overcapitalization or overbonded indebtedness is concerned, with the fixing of rates at all. That is not the subject matter of the bill. It is upon the actual valuation of the physical property and not its capital stock or its bonded indebtedness. That is the purpose and object of the measure, and so far as the bonded indebtedness or capital stock is concerned, if this measure passes, they do not enter into the consideration as an element in the fixing of the transportation tolls in any manner whatever. Therefore, this amendment offered is not germane to either the text or the subject matter of the proposed measure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. His contention in this matter, as I understand it, is that this Adamson bill is solely for the purpose of fixing the physical valuation of railroads and that part which is in the bill about stocks and bonds is simply to throw light on that subject

Mr. CULLOP. Only, and for no other purpose.

The SPEAKER. And that the Mann amendment treats with an entirely different subject of controlling the issuance of stocks

Mr. CULLOP. That is it exactly. That is my contention

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana in the general discussion of the bill are not, so far as I know, yet in the RECORD; but if I mistake not he, or at least some other gentlemen who were speaking at the time, contended in that discussion that the object and purpose of this provision to which I have alluded was altogether different from what he now sees; and, indeed, how could it be otherwise? What has the amount of stocks and bonds to be issued to do with the physical valuation of a railway or any of its property?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman misapprehended my statement of that question if he refers to me. What I said was, if we resorted to the physical valuation of transportation property for the purpose of fixing rates, that as an incidental matter following from that it would destroy as a natural result or consequence the overcapitalization or the making of overbonded indebtedness in the future, and that it would eliminate that feature as a speculative matter in dealing with these properties on the market. This result will follow as an inevitable conclusion. That was my statement.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That is exactly what the gentleman was arguing before.

Mr. CULLOP. It was the effect and not the language that I had in mind.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That the purpose and object of these provisions was to prevent overcapitalization and that that would be the effect, and now I think I have shown here by this act of investigation, by this act of summoning as they may the evidence of clerks of the railways, or of any party connected with it, to give information regarding that, to give information with relation to stocks and bonds, they must and do exercise a control over the issuance of them. For that reason the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Illinois is germane.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, before the Chair finally determines the point of order he should have in mind the history of this legislation. The records of the House will show that during the last session the majority of this House directed a general scheme of investigations of alleged wrongdoing of various large business interests of the country, and I think the report of the Committee on Rules on this subject divided the work of investigation among several of the committees of the House, and among them was that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce should investigate this subject. ent sorts of investigations have been had. I think some are pending, and some very important reports have been made. One of the investigations concerning the financing and issuance of securities by common carriers, as just stated, was directed to be made by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I think that the report of the Committee on Rules will so show. The records of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which are public and open to inspection, will show that the committee, after some discussion, thought it best to conduct its share of the investigation not by means of summoning witnesses itself to ascertain what facts there were relative to the subject matter and what plans and reports should be made, but by directing the Interstate Commerce Commission itself, which had the experience and the machinery, to make the investigation and to report its views upon the methods to right some of the wrongs which would be shown by such an The hearings before that committee will show investigation. such to be the fact, and in the process of its work the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce had this bill as a basis and measure of some part of what it ought to do. Now, the investigation directed by the House concerned not only the alleged wrongs which had previously existed, but the method and plan of righting those wrongs, in order to properly subserve the welfare of the people, as might be shown by the investigation. So this measure was planned to accomplish these results. The records show it was so reported, and it came before the House to meet the report of the Committee on Rules for such an investigation and the submission of a proper plan for a righting of the different wrongs shown and known to exist in the issuance of securities by common carriers. Now, if the Chair will examine the text of the bill and consider the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission under it, I think the question he addressed to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Green] will be answered. On page 2, lines 1 and 2, of the bill:

That the commission shall investigate and ascertain the value of the

Of course "property" means not only the physical property but it means every sort of property, and the value is measured not only by the cost of reproduction, not only by the amount that has been expended in its construction, but by the market value as evidenced by the outstanding securities. Now, the other committees, upon their investigations and in their reports, I think, have invariably reported to us some method—at least they reported different means and different plans of legislation by which the alleged wrongs shown by their investigation shall be righted. This bill does exactly that same thing, except we contend that it does not go far enough, but there is enough in the bill as a basis for the legislation which ought to be had, under the investigation ordered by the House, to warrant the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. fixing the value of the property, of course, it would include the market value of the stocks and bonds. The bill provides the history of these stocks and bonds shall be investigated and reported, and if evils be disclosed the remedies for those evils should be ascertained and set forth in the legislation, and the remedies can be carried into effect by the very organization, by the very body, provided by this bill to conduct the investigation. The very purpose of the investigation directed by this House, the very purpose of the investigation directed by this measure and by the committee, can not be made fully effective unless by some such amendment as is proposed by the gentleman from Illinois and as was proposed by the minority of the committee in the process of its hearings and consideration. And for that reason the history of the bill shows that the whole subject matter is germane; that it was considered; that this House wanted it so considered; and there is enough in the bill under the common acceptation of construction, under the construction of the courts as to the definition of values, under the language of the bill, to take that additional step and provide a remedy for the wrongs which will be found to exist by the In-remedy for the wrongs which will be found to exist by the interstate Commerce Commission in conducting its investigation. The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota a question. Now, if that is true—and the Chair has no doubt it is—what is the reason the committee did not report some such proposition as the Mann proposition in the bill?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The matter was discussed by the committee, Mr. Speaker, and the majority of the committee took the responsibility of reporting the bill in its present form. The records of the committee will show the minority did propose this identical plan suggested by the gentleman from Illinois and the majority, for reasons best known to themselves, refused to consider it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That hardly has any bearing upon the question of whether the Mann amendment is in order on the pending bill.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker-

The SPEAKER. The Chair will not bother the gentleman from Tennessee to make an argument on his side.

Mr. SIMS. I was only going to refer to the history to which the gentleman from Minnesota referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has investigated the parliamentary phase of this question fully. We have not anything to do here with the merits of the substance of the motion to recommit which was submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. If that proposition were submitted in a bill, or if the Chair thought it was germane, he would be very much in favor It is not necessary in this opinion, but it is stated anyhow, that the issue of stocks and bonds by public-service cor-porations ought to be regulated by law. That, however, has nothing to do with this preliminary question which is pending here now.

The rule about motions to recommit is this: A proposition is not germane in a motion to recommit unless it would have been germane as an amendment to the bill.

The authorities all run one way. I have investigated them range and the first one way. I have investigated them carefully. The proposition laid down by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmstep] is partly correct and partly incorrect. It does not go to the extent which he undertook to make it go. The rule is not that, if there are two substantive propositions in a bill you can add anything else to it. The rule is that on such a question as admitting Territories into the Union as States; if you were trying to admit Idaho, for instance, alone, you could not add Montana and Washington, and so forth. But if you turn it around the other way and make the bill general in its character to admit Montana and Idaho and Washington, then you might add to it, as an amendment, Wyoming, for instance.

At one time there was a proposition pending to appropriate money to destroy the boll weevil and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gillett] offered a proposition to add some money to destroy the gypsy moth. Mr. Speaker Cannon held that there was no connection between the two propositions, and ruled out the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

There have been divers and sundry rulings of that kind. In the case cited by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted], when the House was expressing its opinion as to what the Turks were doing to the Christians over in Turkey, that was the subject matter. The resolution was to express our horror of what they were doing, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Hepburn, offered an amendment which was more emphatic in its expression of horror than any of the rest, proposing to give the Turkish ambassador his passport. Consequently it was held to be germane.

During the term of the present Speaker a proposition was up to prohibit the trading in cotton futures on the exchanges of the country. Some Member offered an amendment to that the country. proposition to include wheat and corn and other products. Chair ruled it out by citing all these precedents which he has just cited and some additional ones. The Chair was more in just cited and some additional ones. The Chair was more in favor of prohibiting the dealing in futures in wheat and corn than on cotton, because he has more to do with those products, but that fact did not have anything to do with the parliamentary point. Therefore he sustained the point of order made against the germaneness of the amendment,

The situation here is that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce brings in a bill which deals with one subject, and one subject only, and that is to fix a physical valuation of railroads. The only reason that they mention bonds or stocks in the bill at all is that, whether right or wrong, in this country we have fallen into the habit of estimating the value of a railroad by counting in both bonds and stocks, one being property and the other being debts. So that evidently the committee, in reporting this bill, thought that out of deference to the rule which prevails in this country we ought to find out what stocks and bonds have been issued. But this bill as reported nowhere provides or says a word about authorizing or directing anybody to issue stocks and bonds. The motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to recommit with instructions has entirely to do with the future issuance of stocks and bonds. It seems to be a very elaborate and perfect scheme. The Chair will say that for it. But I have asked the gentlemen who have argued this question in favor of the germaneness of this motion to recommit to point out in the bill a single word or clause that makes the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] germane.

A case in point arose here—and it happened to be on the 1st day of April, 1910—and I will quote from the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] in that case, which seems to be absolutely unanswerable. He said:

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] referred to amendment 78 of the Senate, and it has been referred to by other gentlemen, as an amendment to the tariff law. It is not an amendment to the tariff. It is a provision which relates to reports required by that law.

And that is what it man to

And that is what it was, too.

But the provision in the Senate amendment is neither in form nor substance an amendment to the tariff law. Now, I insist that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is not germane to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment provided that a certain section—section 78, the Chair believes it was—in the Payne tariff law about ascertaining the property that the corporations had, in order to levy that tax on them, should only be made public on a resolution of the House or Senate, whereupon Mr. Fitzgerald, of New York, offered an amendment to repeal the entire Payne tariff law. Mr. Mann said:

An amendment to repeal the tariff act is not germane to that Senate amendment.

Mr. Mann, continuing, said further:

Mr. Mann, continuing, said further:

The gentleman from New York is too well acquainted with the rules of the House not to know that this amendment which he offers is not germane. If the gentleman from New York, while the Senate amendment was before the House, had proposed an amendment similar to that which he now offers to this amendment, any chairman would have held it out of order as not a germane amendment to the proposition of the Senate. If the gentleman could provide for a repeal of the entire tariff act under the Senate amendment, then he could have provided for a repeal of a particular part of the tariff act. If it be in order to offer an amendment under the Senate amendment to repeal the entire tariff act, it will be in order—and I wish it were—to repeal the duty on wood pulp and paper [applause], because if it had been in order I should have offered such an amendment.

After a great deal of argument on both sides by distinguished parliamentarians, Mr. Speaker Cannon rendered the following opinion:

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read the amendment which has been agreed to.
The Clerk read as follows:
"Concur with the following amendment:
"Strike out all of amendment No. 78 and insert instead thereof the following:

following:
"'For classifying, indexing, exhibiting, and properly caring for the returns of all corporations required by section 38 of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue, equalize duties, encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes," approved August 5, 1909, including the employment in the District of Columbia of such clerical and other personal services, and for rent of such quarters as may be necessary, $25,000: Provided, That any and all such returns shall be open to inspection only upon the order of the President, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and approved by the President."

Then the Speaker said:

The Speaker. The House will notice that this is a proposition or an amendment covering one specific subject in the tariff act—as to the returns made by corporations. It does not relate to the amount of the tax, the kind of corporations to be levied upon, the time of levying, or touching any other matter, but only and simply the returns of corporations.

Upon the motion to concur with an amendment, which amendment provides for striking out of the Senate amendment and inserting what has just been read, the previous question was ordered, and the House has, on a yea-and-nay vote, agreed to the amendment, so that is a closed incident.

ow, the argument of the gentleman from New York brings up a ingenious theory-It will be observed that these two gentlemen have swapped places. [Laughter.]

places. [Laughter.]

But the Chair does not feel called upon to decide upon his theory, because it has been held—and, so far as the Chair has been able to ascertain, uniformly held—that where there is a proposition to amend a law in one particular—a specific particular—a proposition to amend generally or to repeal the law would not be germane. The Chair, after a hasty examination, finds as follows:

Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, page 411:

"5806. To a bill amendatory of an existing law as to one specific particular an amendment relating to the terms of the law rather than to those of the bill was held not to be germane."

Under that decision, if the amendment of the gentleman had been offered before the previous question operated, it would not have been in order, as the precedents are uniform that you can not by a motion to recommit make that in order which would not have been in order if offered as an amendment. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

And the Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] in this case.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] offers a motion to recommit.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order, Mr. Speaker, that it is too late, the previous question having been ordered.

Mr. MANN. Ordered on what? Mr. SIMS. On the passage of the bill. It is too late.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion, and then we shall see.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Mann moves to recommit the bill H. R. 22593, "To amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof providing for physical valuation of the property of carriers subject thereto and securing information concerning their stocks and bonds and boards of directors," to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, with directions to that committee to report said bill back to the House forthwith, with the following amendment, to wit: Insert, page 3, after line 21, the following:

following amendment, to wit: Insert, page 3, after line 21, the lollowing:

"Sald investigation and report shall also fully cover as far as practicable questions pertaining to the issuance of stocks and bonds by common carrier corporations subject to the provisions of this act and the power of Congress to regulate or affect the same and particularly the power of Congress to prevent the issuance of stocks and bonds by such corporations without full value being received therefor, and to require the application of the proceeds from the sale of stocks and bonds to be actually invested for the benefit of the corporation to the end that interstate railroad rates may be based upon reasonable and honest capitalization, and to the further end that the investing public may have full knowledge concerning proposed investments so that such corporations may be able to obtain money on better terms and thereby give better service at lower rates."

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a point of order against the motion, for two reasons. The first is that the previous question has been ordered on the passage of the bill, and all that was reserved when that order was made was the right to rule on the point of order which was pending at the time that the previous question was ordered; second, that the proposed amendment is not germane to the bill. In other words, it is the same objection which lay against the other motion to re-Those are the two reasons for which I make the point commit. of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker—
The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Illinois on this point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will not take the time to enter into an extended discussion of the first point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], because the rules expressly provide that a motion to recommit shall be in order after the previous question is ordered on the bill; and I direct the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to that provision of the rule, because it is wholly unnecessary to direct the attention of the Chair to that provision of the rule. The previous question does not operate upon a motion to recommit until the motion is before the House.

On the second proposition, as to whether this is germane to the bill, I call the attention of the Speaker to what is proposed by the bill.

The Speaker a moment ago, in making the ruling which he made, stated that the purpose of the bill was to make a physical The Speaker did not hear the valuation of railroad property. discussion on the bill in Committee of the Whole, probably. While the title of the bill refers to the physical valuation of the property, the bill itself provides that the commission shall investigate and ascertain the value of the property of every common carrier; and as was clearly brought out in the discussion in the Committee of the Whole, the investigation is not confined to the valuation of the physical property, because the Committee of the Whole, under the lead of the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], in charge of the bill, voted down a proposition to confine the investigation to the value of the physical property, for the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Smrs] contended that the purpose of the bill was much broader than that, and it is.

I call the attention of the Speaker to the provisions of the bill in reference to the investigation and report:

They shall also show, as the commission may deem necessary, the story of the organization of the present corporation operating such

The SPEAKER. Where is the gentleman reading?

Mr. MANN. At the bottom of page 2 and the top of page 3.

Mr. MANN. At the bottom of page 2 and the top of page 3. Of the present corporation operating such property or of any previous corporation operating such property in such detail as may be deemed necessary, and any increases or decreases of capital stock in any reorganizations, and moneys received by any of such corporations by reason of any issues of stocks, bonds, or other securities, or from the net and gross earnings of such companies, and how the moneys were expended or paid out for the purposes of such payments.

The said investigation and report shall also show the amounts and dates of all bonds outstanding against each public-service corporation and the amount paid therefor, and the names of all stockholders and bondholders, with the amount held by each, and also the name of each director on each board of directors; and find and report the facts as to the connection of any bank or banker, capitalist or association of capitalists, or financial institution or holding company with the ownership, manipulation, management, or control of any stocks and bonds of any such company, and the transactions and connections of any bank or banker, financier, financial institution, or holding company with the reorganization of any such company in recent years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these provisions of the bill do not, as was Now, Mr. Speaker, these provisions of the bill do not, as was intimated by gentlemen, confine the investigation to the issuance of stocks and bonds now outstanding. It will be years before the full investigation of these matters is completed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the commission will be directed and is directed in each of its reports to bring its investigations down to the date when the investigation is made.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. I call the gentleman's attention also to the paragraph in the middle of page 5, which contemplates keeping the commission informed with reference to future changes and

Mr. MANN. I was just going to read that to the Speaker. Mr. OLMSTED. It apparently contemplates reports from time to time.

Mr. MANN. On page 5 of the bill, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is the following:

Upon the completion of the valuation herein provided for the commission shall thereafter in like manner keep itself informed of all extensions and improvements or other changes in the condition and value of the property of all common carriers, and shall ascertain the value thereof, and shall from time to time, as may be required for the proper regulation of such common carriers under the provisions of this act, revise and correct its valuation of property, which shall be reported to Congress at the beginning of each regular session.

This bill as it stands endeavors to confer upon the Interstate Commerce Commission full power in reference to future issues of stocks and bonds, so far as obtaining information is concerned, and reporting it to Congress. The amendment which I have offered directs the commission to include in its investigation and report matters relating, so far as practicable, to the issuance of stocks and bonds of these common-carrier corporations for the purpose of affecting railroad rates and requiring that the issuance of stocks and bonds shall, as a result of the investigation of the Interstate Commerce Commission, be reported to Congress, to the end that in the future we may be able to have information by which we may require that stocks and bonds shall only be issued for actual value, and when issued for actual value received shall be properly invested, to the end of regulating the rates of the railroads.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.
Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman's contention is that his amendment merely extends the character of the investigation? Mr. MANN. That is all.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does it not do more than that? Mr. MANN. It does not.

It does not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the gentleman, although it scope of the investigation, but it confers upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to inquire and investigate into the issuance of stocks and bonds in a certain way.

Mr. MANN. Not at all. It says:

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman will look at the punctuation

Mr. MANN. I have not only looked at the punctuation, but I punctuated it

Mr. FITZGERALD. Apparently very ingenuously.

Mr. MANN. There is nothing ingenuous about it at all. Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no connection between the inquiry as to the proceeds of the issuance of the stocks and bonds and the investigations that are outlined.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman has not read the amendment

Mr. FITZGERALD. I have read it carefully.

Mr. MANN. Very well; the gentleman has read it carefully and lacks appreciation of what it contains. The gentleman can

Mr. FITZGERALD. Sometimes it take more genius than I profess to have to understand some of the amendments drafted and proposed by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New York lacks a great deal of appreciation of propositions sometimes. I can not expect to bring myself to the point where I can write everything so that it will be perfectly plain to the gentleman from New

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is an ambition which, if it could be realized by the gentleman from Illinois, would give him great happiness

Mr. SIMS. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?
Mr. MANN. Certainly.
Mr. SIMS. Does not this amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois require that the commission shall make an investigation as to the proceeds of the issuance of the stocks and

Mr. MANN. Not at all. The investigation and report is to cover, as far as practicable, questions relating to the issuance of stocks and bonds by the corporation and the power of Congress to regulate or affect the same, and particularly the power of Congress to prevent the issuance of stocks and bonds by such corporations without full value being received therefor.

Mr. SIMS. The object of the gentleman's amendment is to authorize the commission to report as to the method to be hereafter pursued in the application of funds growing out of the sale of stocks and bonds.

Mr. MANN. Certainly. The object of the amendment is to have the commission investigate the matter of the issuance of stocks and bonds, with a view of reporting to Congress, so that Congress may hereafter legislate upon the subject.

Mr. SIMS. Does the gentleman consider that as germane to a proposition to ascertain the value—the existing value—of the amount of outstanding stocks and bonds, to investigate what shall be done with the proceeds of stocks and bonds hereafter issued?

Mr. MANN. Certainly I do. Your own bill provides for the report of the stocks and bonds which may be issued between now and the time when the final report is made upon the last railroad, and even then after that, when stocks and bonds are issued the commission will have the authority to investigate that matter and report upon it.

Mr. SIMS. And as to what shall be done with the proceeds, does the gentleman think that is germane?

Mr. MANN. Certainly, Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. As I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, it requires the Interstate Commerce Commission to report upon questions of some sort? Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Is not the whole intent of the original bill that the commission shall report upon facts and not upon questions?

Mr. MANN. A great many questions will arise besides facts under the original bill.

Mr. COOPER. I have not observed it. I have been looking at the bill very carefully, and it is my understanding that what they are required to report on is questions of fact up to the may not have been his purpose, that it not only extends the time of the report, facts of various kinds. But when they are called upon to report as to the power of corporations to issue stocks and bonds they may be getting into questions of law.

Mr. MANN. The commission will meet a thousand and one questions of law before it makes a report under the original bill. They are required to report upon the management and control of stocks and bonds in the past.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois if there is not this distinction between the two propositions; the one contained in the bill and the one proposed by his amendment? The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Olmsted] called the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the paragraph on page 5 as to the commission obtaining information concerning matters treated of in the amendment proposed by the gentleman, but is not that limited by the provisions of this bill entirely to the issuance of stocks and bonds which shall have been made, whereas it is proposed by the gentleman from Illinois to inquire into proposed issues?

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey mean stocks and bonds issued now?
Mr. TOWNSEND. No.
Mr. MANN. On the date of the passage of the law?
Mr. TOWNSEND. No.

Mr. MANN. Or stocks and bonds which may be issued hereafter?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Hereafter, but which shall have been is sued in the future when information concerning them is sought. There is no proposal, as I understand it, in this paragraph on page 5, to which attention has been called, to make inquiry for the sake of informing the commission of proposed issues of securities, but to make inquiry in the future of issues which shall have been made at the time of the inquiry.

Mr. MANN. That is true.

Mr. TOWNSEND. And the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois-

Mr. MANN. That is the reason I offered the amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then there is a distinction between the two propositions.

Mr. MANN. Oh, if my proposition were a duplicate of what is already in the bill, I would not have offered it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But it is not continuing work nor suggesting work of similar kind it is proposed to have done by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. MANN. Here is the proposition: This bill is for the purpose of obtaining information for the purpose of aiding the commission in the control of railroad rates. That is the only interest we have in the matter, and when you say that the commission shall report as to the stocks and bonds already issued, and you give them power to investigate that subject, certainly, if you want to control railroad rates at all, or have any influence on them, you should investigate the proposed issuance of stocks and bonds, because those that are already issued have no such influence upon railroad rates as the manipulation of the issuance of stocks and bonds in the future will have.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not suppose when I asked the gentle-man's permission to interrupt that he was offering a duplicate, as his answer would suggest I thought. My point is this: That there are two entirely different propositions proposed, and one is not germane to the other. One is a proposition to acquire information regarding an accomplished fact, and the other is a proposition to acquire information regarding a proposed action, and one is not germane to the other. I knew they were not duplicate propositions, because I have too much faith in the gentleman's integrity as a legislator to think for a moment that he would offer a duplicate proposition.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's position is that stocks and bonds which do not have any influence over rates ought to be investigated, and those that do have influence over rates ought not to be investigated. My proposition is, when you give the power to the commission to investigate this subject you have the right as a germane amendment to direct the commission to go a step further in the same line—not a different kind of subject at all, but in the same direction. To say when you propose to do something that you can not offer an amendment to go a step further is to say that you can not offer an amendment at all to a bill, leaving it wholly to a committee and not to the House to determine what may be in the propositions to be brought in and voted upon by the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not deny that; but this is not a proposed step in the same direction, but in a different direction.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me in all candor—and I of course do not understand the amendment as well as the gentleman who drew it, having heard it read only once-the object of the bill is making an inventory of existing facts in order to ascertain the physical value of the property of common carriers, and it does not even remotely relate to how proceeds shall be invested in stocks and bonds to be issued, or created by a new issue of same; and this amendment certainly does relate to what is to be done in the future as well as what has been done in the past. I desire to say frankly to the House, not speaking for the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce nor for any member of it except myself, I have always favored legislation by the Congress of the United States to properly control proposed capitalization of corporations doing interstate business, but the object of this bill is only for the valuation of existing property, and only authorizes the investigation as to outstanding stocks and bonds, because, as the Speaker intimated, it is necessary to have all the light on all existing transactions in order to determine the value of existing property. Now, the object of this amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois is to go further, just as the object of the first motion to recommit was to go further and to legislate positively as to what shall be done hereafter with proceeds of sales of stocks and bonds, and, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand it to be germane to require a report and an investigation as to what shall hereafter be done by way of limitation of the issuance of stocks and bonds and to make a recommendation as to legislation is not germane to this bill. Why should we have an investigation of facts and a report from a commission on subjects not germane to the bill any more than the offering of such an amendment in the first instance? Now, this amendment says, if I read it right-I will read all of this paragraph:

Said investigation and report shall also fully cover, so far as practicable, questions pertaining to the issuance of stocks and bonds by common-carrier corporations subject to the provisions of this act and the power of Congress to regulate or affect the same.

Purely a question of law. Congress is better able to determine that than any commission.

And particularly methods to prevent the Issuance of stocks and bonds by such corporations without full value being required therefor, and to require the application of the proceeds from the sale of stocks and bonds to be actually invested for the benefit of the corporation to the end that interstate railroad rates may be based upon reasonable and end that interstate r honest capitalization.

The object of that section of the bill is to prevent future over-The bill unamended, if it should pass uncapitalization. amended, will have the moral effect to prevent overcapitalization, but is not mandatory in language looking to that end.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly. Mr. MANN. The reason I asked the gentleman to yield is because in view of the criticisms that have been made on that part of the amendment which I had inserted in the amendment mainly for the purpose of making sure of the power of the commission in making its investigation, I ask to withdraw that motion which I offered and to offer the following motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his motion to recommit and offers another motion. The Clerk will read the part that is left in.

Insert, page 3, after line 21, the following:

"Said investigation and report shall also fully cover, so far as practicable, questions pertaining to the issuance of stocks and bonds by common-carrier corporations subject to the provisions of this act and the power of Congress to regulate or affect the same, and particularly methods to prevent the issuance of stocks and bonds by such corporations without full value being received therefor."

Mr. CULLOP. Now, Mr. Speaker, I make the same point of order against this that was made against the original motion for which this is a substitute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. overrules the first point of order that this motion to recommit could not be offered after the previous question was ordered. The rule is clear on that question. Rule XXVII, page 388 of the Manual, says:

It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee.

The Chair, for the elucidation of the matter, will state this in regard to how many motions anybody is allowed to make to recommit. Of course a Member can only make one if it is germane, but a motion to recommit is not a motion to recommit at all if it is ruled out on the point of order, and the logic of the rule is that everybody wanted the privilege of making a motion to recommit to be absolute so nobody could take the power away from a Member, and a Member would have the right to offer a motion to recommit which is germane. If that turned out to be obnoxious to the point of order, that would Well, now, the Chair does not undertake to say that a Member can stand up and offer motions to recommit inter-minably that are not germane. That is a matter in the discretion of the Chairman at the time, but where the Chair believes a Member is acting in good faith he will entertain them within reasonable limits. The Chair overrules the second point of order on the proposition submitted now, and the question is on the motion to recommit with the last instructions read.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I report back from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce the bill H. R. 22593, with the following amendments,

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee.

Insert, page 3, after line 21, the following:

"Said investigation and report shall also fully cover, so far as practicable, questions pertaining to the issuance of stocks and bonds by common-carrier corporations, subject to the provisions of this act and the power of Congress to regulate or affect the same, and particularly methods to prevent the issuance of stocks and bonds by such corporations without full value being received therefor."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Sims, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

MOTIONS TO RECOMMIT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to repeat the request which he made day before yesterday, that when gentlemen have complicated motions to recommit they submit them to the Chair in advance, if they can do so, because the Chair's mental apparatus does not work any more rapidly than that of other people, and it is not always possible to catch the meaning of a motion by merely hearing it read.

LINCOLN MEMORIAL (S. DOC. NO. 965).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I beg herewith to submit a report of the Lincoln Memorial Commission, and its recommendation, upon the location, plan, and design for a memorial in the city of Washington, D. C., to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, in accordance with an act providing a commission to secure plans and designs for a monument or memorial to the memory of Abraham Lincoln, approved February 9, 1911.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, December 5, 1912.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for 10 minutes in which to address the House

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for 10 minutes in which to address the House. Is there

Mr. FITZGERALD. For what purpose does the gentleman wish to address the House?

Mr. BURGESS. I desire to make a short statement and to insert an editorial in the RECORD.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would suggest the gentleman take the time on the appropriation bill which is to follow. Mr. Speaker, it will be impossible to give Members time as was done in the long session. We have only 40 days to pass all the bills. I ask that the gentleman take his time in general debate.

Mr. BURGESS. All right.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 26680, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, pending that, may I ask the gentleman for the information of the House if there is any notion as to how much, if any, general debate there will be on the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There has been no request for time on either side of the House, except that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burgess] has indicated that he desires 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 26680, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with Mr. Garner in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 26680) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burgess].

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, during the 12 years I have been a Member of this House I have not spoken on the race problem, although I was born and reared in a county in the district I represent where the population at the time was 80 per cent negroes, and it is one of the districts known as being in the "black belt." But I have refrained from discussing the race question because I am the friend of the negro and I realized no good could come from discussing a problem that all the South is wrestling with, the ultimate solution of which no man knows. But I ask permission to have read into the Record an editorial from the Fort Worth Record, of Texas, written by one of the most brilliant and one of the ablest of southern journalists-Clarence Ousley-and I do this not for the purpose of provoking any discussion, but simply because I think the article so well written that it will appeal to all thoughtful men.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the article referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Fort Worth Record.] DEBASING NATURE AND DESPISING GOD.

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the Fort Worth Record.]

DEBASING NATURE AND DESPISING GOD.

Shocking and sickening as is the Chicago story of a young white girl's infatuation with Jack Johnson and the black animal's brutish insistence upon holding her within the toils of his power, it should not surprise any man who has the slightest ken of racial instinct or the faintest appreciation of the philosophy of social consequence.

The only wonder is that an intelligent people have permitted associations that make the least compromise with fundamental principle.

To put it in a paradox, this development is the natural result of an unnatural contact of whites and blacks tolerated for gain, or for sport, or for convenience. When white men meet negro men in the prize ring, when they ride together in street cars or railread cars, or when they meet upon any common plane, they stand upon a footing of equality for the occasion, and repeating the occasion establishes a status which has no limitation or differentiation in the mind of the heedless white or the covetous and lustful black.

There is no culture of mind or heart or uplift of soul of the individual black man that warrants social equality with the white man. That is a hard saying, but it is the decree of nature and God, and to ignore it is to debase nature and despise God.

May not the black man aspire? Yes, as high as the heavens. May he not expand? Yes, throughout the whole wide universe. But aspiration and expansion are not hindered by confinement within the association of his own race. By and of himself, among his own, he must pursue his own way—and he may not be permitted to pursue any other without consequences revolting to the white man and ultimately destructive to himself, for such instances as this repeated will provoke revulsion and antagonism merciless and far-reaching.

They play with fire who venture to cross the line of racial separation by so much as the slightest step or in the faintest degree. It is not because the individual black man may not b born the purpose of impudence and insult and outrage to be visited upon white women any time and anywhere.

What have we of the South to be concerned about in this unspeakable infamy which the undiscerning North tolerates? May we not be content to preserve our own standards, maintain our social integrity and let others indulge animalism and amalgamation to the utmost of their bestial bent? their bestial bent?

and let others indulge animalism and amalgamation to the utmost of their bestial bent?

No, for we have knowledge they do not know; we have experiences which should teach them to beware, and we are not faithful as our brothers' keepers if we do not cry aloud and warn them of their peril.

Besides, they can not conceal these exploits from the knowledge of our blacks, and our blacks will be tempted to more wicked deeds. Quick and sure vengeance awaits the least encroachment here, but it would be little less than criminal not to endeavor to prevent the occasion for vengeance.

Thousands of black brutes all over the land will be moved by this circumstance to entertain the nameless desire which always lurks in the mind of the low and lustful.

We may not calculate how many white women must suffer the consequence of such example—nor how many black men may be destroyed to hold the others of the race in leash.

Will men never learn that nature can not be mocked without punishment? That the God of heaven is the God of races? That the pigment of the skin, while not a badge of dishonor, is an outward and visible sign of a status decreed from everlasting to everlasting? Association, dalliance, or trespass, by whatever action or custom, is outlawry which invites the wrath of the Most High.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PALMER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I recognize that in the short session of Congress debate on appropriation bills should not be interrupted to any great extent by the discussion of matters which do not relate to those bills; but I crave the indulgence of the House for a few minutes this afternoon to call attention to a matter which has no relation whatever to this bill, but which I think is of sufficient importance to command the attention of the House.

On the 31st day of October, 1912, an American ambassador at a foreign court made an address which contains so many aspersions upon the character and life of a great American who was twice President of the United States, once Secretary of State, and whose name has reached the height of immortality in the world, that I feel we ought not to allow the occasion to pass without some mention of it in this House. Ambassador Reid, at the autumn session of the University College of Wales, delivered a lecture entitled "One Welshman: A Glance at a Great Career," and under that title made comment upon the life, character, and achievements of Thomas Jefferson.

There seems to be just now considerable renewed interest in Thomas Jefferson's life. I have been myself much attracted by some of the recent literature about Jefferson and about his beautiful home in Virginia and its history. I have been at-tracted also by the scholarly and brilliant work of the distin-guished Senator from Mississippi, who has been lecturing upon the life of this great man before the students of Columbia University in New York. And it is a jarring note, especially at a time when the philosophy and the political theories of Thomas Jefferson seem to come in for enlarged support among the American people, to have the American ambassador at the court of the greatest monarchy on earth take pains to go out of his way to call attention to what he himself calls the "odious details" in the conduct of this great man as indicative, in his own language, "of the real character" of Thomas Jefferson.

He starts out by giving to Jefferson due and proper credit for many of the great things which he did, referring to his "head of gold," and then goes on in two-thirds of his address to prove that he had "feet of clay," by calling attention to what he calls the "absurd inconsistencies and extravagances" of his life, his works, and his utterances. He not only flings his jibes to what Lofferson did and said, but speers at the accomplishat what Jefferson did and said, but sneers at the accomplish-ments of the great political party which Jefferson founded, and by misrepresentations and misstatements of the facts seeks to give the impression that they are not worthy followers of that great man.

I admit that this sort of thing, coming from a man of letters who desires to be known as a writer of history, would not be worthy of any criticism here; but I declare that when an American ambassador at a foreign court undertakes thus untruly and improperly to criticize a man who occupies the position in our country's history held by Thomas Jefferson, the occasion is worthy not only of comment but perhaps of censure.

Mr. Reid begins by stating the admission of Jefferson's admirers that "his political career was checkered, his executive course many times open to criticism, his modes of expressing conviction often ill-considered and extravagant and amazingly inconsistent, and his acts as a politician frequently far below the standard of the philosophical writer on government." He refers to him as "possessed with such wild notions that he could not mind his own business" when a member of Washing-ton's Cabinet; and he finally begins his citations of isolated utterances of Jefferson to prove his inconsistency of conduct and extravagance of behavior by this description of the man:

Mr. Jefferson was not a man of genius. We have seen that he was not an orator, not a soldier, not a good Executive, least of all, a well-balanced statesman. But he was a philosophical thinker or dreamer, and yet with a wonderfully practical gift for reading the tendencies of the populace and for putting their wishes into persuasive and stately language. * He was at once a philosopher and a partisan, But his philosophy was sometimes ill-balanced and ill-considered; his partisanship was always adroit and carefully considered, generally successful and sometimes useful.

When analyzed that reasograph gives him wealth sale for

When analyzed that paragraph gives him credit only for sometimes being useful as a party man. The ambassador goes on to say:

I began by asking you to consider a few reasons why some work of his gave as much credit to the Welsh stock as anything done by any other man of the blood. But I did not commend him as a uniformly sound political thinker or as an altogether admirable man. In fact, as a political opponent he was at times ungenerous and underhanded. Even his close friend, James Madison, was constrained to apologize for his frequent extravagance and inconsistency.

A few examples—

Says Ambassador Reid-

may show the urgent need of this allowance, and at the same time bring his real character and its limitations into clearer relief. They will also show the absurd extravagance to which he habitually re-sorted as the surest means of impressing the less intelligent voters.

If the American ambassador could have employed any words which would have more accurately been intended to call this great man a demagogue, I know not the words which he could have chosen. He goes on then in many pages, citing sentences from his writings and isolated instances of conduct and actions on the part of Jefferson, to prove these "absurd extravagances" which he says denote Jefferson's "real character." The accuwhich he says denote Jenerson's real character. The accurracy of these citations may well be judged by these. He says:

And in curious contrast with his political descendants, who now wish to have the decisions of the highest courts reviewed or even reversed at popular elections, he said bluntly: "The people are not qualified to judge questions of law."

It seems to me the only excuse for such an utterance, which charges the Democratic Party with having within its ranks as one of the descendants of Thomas Jefferson the author of the doctrine which the ambassador here describes, must be found in the ambassador's absence from the country during the last few months. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

He goes on to say, further:

He reconciled his personal feeling with holding office almost continuously for 40 years, but when he became President he was vehemently in favor of rotation in office and was the author of the doctrine that "to the victors belong the spoils."

A statement which history will not corroborate. goes on to give his definition of the attitude of the Democratic Party to-day, which nothing except perhaps an isolated sentence taken out of the context in some of Jefferson's writings could possibly justify or excuse. He says:

He wished to confine the great General Government solely to for-eign affairs—to be thus conducted without diplomatic establishment. Every other subject of public concern, excepting solely foreign affairs, he wished left to the independent States. Nine-tenths of the present useful activities of the General Government would thus have been de-stroyed at one stroke.

And he accompanies all this with a sneer at the government of the great city of New York, which he declares has been for many generations in control of the party which is proud to claim Thomas Jefferson as its founder, and which, in the instance cited by Ambassador Reid, he declares without justification the party has wandered far from the course laid down by the founder.

After citing these instances and others that I shall not stop to read or comment upon, he says:

Surely here are enough inconsistencies and extravagances to show the need for Mr. Madison's plea that "allowance be made for them." In most of them he was absolutely sincere. But no sketch of his career or estimate of his character would be honest without some men-tion of others for which such an excuse can not be offered.

And then he, the ambassador of this Government, standing before a foreign audience upon foreign soil, talking about the man who was the first Secretary of the department under which he, the ambassador, serves, goes on to detail the extravagances in Jefferson's character which, he says, show his absolute insincerity, and he winds up this description of the man by reference to his vulgar and ill-bred habit of sneering at conscientious beliefs, his doubt of his sincerity when he carried through Virginia the statute for religious freedom in the colony, summing it all up by reference to him as-

That strange medley of inconsistency, extravagance, enthuslasm, and fervid patriotic devotion.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not go further in this. I admit there is much in this address of Ambassador Reid which is true and which is entirely worthy of the subject. There is much in it which must of necessity have found a place in any sketch of his great career which shows a proper estimate of the man in some of the aspects of his life, character, and great achievements; but there is so much in it which impugns his motives, doubts his honesty of purpose, and condemns his methods that the whole constitutes an aspersion upon the life, character, and conduct of this great man, whose memory we revere down to this day. And I, for one, as an American Representative in Congress, would not let the occasion pass without entering my protest against the impropriety, the misconduct, of an American ambassador at a foreign court who would thus misrepresent before a foreign audience one of the greatest men who ever lived upon American soil. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me?

Mr. PALMER. Certainly. Mr. GILLETT. I have not read the address of Ambassador Reid, but I would like to ask the gentleman if it consists mainly of these criticisms which he has read, or if it does not also fairly represent the great qualities of Mr. Jefferson?

Mr. PALMER. I said that the ambassador did rather briefly give him his due credit for great things accomplished, but he devotes the larger part of his address to what he himself calls the "odious details" which show the "true character" of the man. No man in this House could read the address without being shocked at the thought that the American ambassador would thus describe him. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GILLETT. I listened to what the gentleman read, and I supposed the larger part of his quotations portrayed weaknesses which the most devoted friend of Mr. Jefferson fully recognized that he possessed, and while I think we all of us admire, as I certainly do, his great qualities and great achievements, I certainly supposed the members of the gentleman's party would recognize that a large part of the criticism which he has detailed was founded on history.

Mr. LANGLEY. And these statements of the ambassador are in the main sustained by citations in the various volumes to which he refers.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the full address of Ambassador Reid be printed in the RECORD so that we may see as a whole what impression it carries.

Mr. PALMER. I have no objection whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks that the full address of Ambassador Reid be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. JONES and Mr. SHACKLEFORD objected.

Mr. GILLETT. That shows the spirit of this criticism. Mr. SHACKLEFORD. We do not want to circulate this libel any further.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, in order that Ambassador Reid may be put right in this matter, I ask that there may be printed, with the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the estimate of Thomas Jefferson placed upon him by President elect Woodrow Wilson, as found on page 3, volume 4, of Mr. Wilson's History of the United States, which reads as follows.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, there was no intent on my

Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor.

Mr. PALMER. I have no objection to the gentleman reading the extract.

Mr. GOOD. It reads as follows:

The difference between Mr. Jefferson and Gen. Jackson was not a difference of moral quality so much as a difference in social stock and breeding. Mr. Jefferson, an aristocrat, and yet a philosophical radical, deliberately practiced the arts of the politician and exhibited oftentimes the sort of insincerity which subtle natures yield to without loss of essential integrity. Washington found him a guide who needed watching

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether my time is exhausted or not.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I only want to say that I had no intention of making political capital out of this proposition. Mr. Reid is an official of this Government. He is the ambassador of the American Government at the Court of St. James, and his conduct and his utterances are not the opinion of a historian or a man of letters. They are being presented to foreign people as indicative of the sentiment of the American There is nothing in the gentleman's quotation from the speech of Mr. Rodenberg, which was read here last spring during the presidential campaign as the utterances of President-elect Wilson, which compares for a single moment with the scathing, untrue description of Thomas Jefferson contained in this address by Mr. Reid. [Applause on the Democratic side]

Analyze everything that Woodrow Wilson, as a writer of history, has said about Thomas Jefferson, and any man who is not blinded by partisanship in the present circumstances in this country, when Mr. Wilson has reached a high place in the Democratic Party, would admit that his estimate of Thomas Jefferson was that of a man who believed him to be the greatest philosopher and statesman of his time. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I did not take from Ambassador Reid's address a single sentence out of its context by which it might be judged. I am willing that the entire address shall be printed in the RECORD, and would be glad to have it there. I made no objection when the request was made. The impression that any man would get in reading all that Mr. Wilson has said about Thomas Jefferson would be that he had the highest admiration and respect and veneration for the character and achievements of Jefferson. while the impression any man would get from reading the address of Ambassador Reid must be that he has a sneering contempt for many of the attributes of character of this great man. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GOOD. Can the gentleman from Pennsylvania point to a single sentence in the address of Ambassador Reid where there is such a reflection upon the character and integrity of Thomas Jefferson as is contained in the sentence of Woodrow Wilson where he says that Washington found in him a guide who needed watching?

Mr. PALMER. I have pointed out a dozen sentences where there is more.

Mr. GOOD. What are they?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina to yield me one minute.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have read the address of Ambassador Reid, as has the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Palmer]. My impression from reading the address was that in the main it was laudatory of Thomas Jefferson, and there certainly is nothing in that address which in any way whatever is so condemnatory of the life or character of Thomas Jefferson as the expression in Mr. Woodrow Wilson's printed article.

Mr. BUTLER. What does it all amount to, anyway? You can not disturb Thomas Jefferson in history

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from South Carolina to yield me two minutes,

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Maryland two minutes.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman, I think the two gentlemen who have spoken in regard to this matter have wholly missed the There was a time in the history of this Republic when its ambassadors were not found in the highways of Europe belittling and slandering citizens of this Republic, living or dead, and there was a time even in the history of the other side of the House when, had they done so, their conduct would not have met with its applause. The difference between Mr. Wilson, the historian, and Mr. Reid, the ambassador, is the difference between a private citizen and a representative of this Republic wearing its robes of office and authority, and presumably under the duty of presenting it to foreign countries in a manner to invite respect, and not in its most discreditable guise. Thomas Jefferson himself is safe, even from the attacks of this ambassador. If the President of this Republic did his duty, Ambassador Reid would not be long safe in his office. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman-

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from South Carolina yield me three minutes? Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. After I have made my statement respecting the bill.

Mr. Chairman, in presenting the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill to the committee, I shall detain the committee long enough to call attention to the material facts of the bill. While the bill is under discussion under the fiveminute rule I shall feel it my duty to explain any item in the bill to Members who may desire information. The bill as it comes to the House carries $319,000 less than the bill for the current year. It provides for 310 less salaried employees than the bill for the present year. It provides for 347 less people than the departments, in the estimates, asked Congress for.

Of the 310 employees whose services are no longer needed, there are 175 who were employed in the Census Office completing the work of the last census. The further services of these people are dispensed with because the work upon which they were engaged is now about completed.

There is a reduction of 100 in the force in the War Department. Gen. Wood testified before the committee during the last session of Congress that more "paper" work was being done than was necessary. The bill as it was finally approved provided that vacancies in the War Department should not be filled until the whole number of vacancies should equal 5 per cent of the entire clerical force. Under that provision of law 78 places became vacant and were not filled. The last military appropriation bill consolidated three bureaus in the War Department. The consolidation of those bureaus enabled the department to dispense with the services of 24 people. So that there has been a reduction of 100 clerks in the War Department, but those reductions were made without turning any person out of the Government service. They were made by not filling vacancies as they occurred. But for the fact that it was filling vacancies as they occurred. But for the fact that it was necessary for us in some particulars to increase this bill, we could have made a larger reduction. We slightly increased the force in the Library of Congress. In the Copyright Office the force was not sufficient to keep the work current. That office is self-sustaining. During the last year it paid into the Treasury about $20,000 in excess of the cost of operating it. We therefore gave an increased force in the Copyright Office. also gave an increased force in the card-indexing department. That likewise is self-sustaining.

In the Civil Service Commission we were compelled to increase the force, first, because the efficiency law of the last Congress placed additional burdens upon the Civil Service Commission in the keeping of the efficiency records.

The President has recently promulgated an order placing all the fourth-class postmasters in the classified service. Service Commission claim that the keeping of the efficiency records of the clerks and the attention that will be required in filling all fourth-class post offices of the country will necessitate an additional clerical force. We were liberal in granting these allowances. Speaking for myself, I was particularly anxious that they should have the increased force. The Government on on 4th of March will change from one great political party to the other. [Applause on the Democratic side.] There will be people unscrupulous or ignorant who would create the impression that the incoming administration and its friends are hungry for spoils. I wanted no excuse for the Civil Service Commission to say that we had denied it the force necessary to enforce For these reasons we greatly increased their force. The Post Office Department has been reducing expenses. The country is constantly growing, but the Post Office Department, in spite of that fact, has been able from year to year to reduce its force. This time the department came to the committee asking for no increase on account of the general increase of the country's population and business, but asking for an increase on account of the burdens that will be placed on the department under the postal savings banks and the parcel-post laws. The increased work of that department on account of those two laws necessitated adding 30 clerks, at a cost of about $40,000. We increased, also, the permanent force in the Census Office because during the last session Congress passed an act requiring the Census Bureau to gather tobacco statistics. Congress also passed an act requiring the Census Bureau to gather additional cotton statistics. The work required of that bureau under the two laws mentioned necessitated an increased force, which we have granted.

All through the bill, where we found that the testimony indicated particularly meritorious cases we have increased salaries. Generally we have increased those in the higher grades, in order that there may be promotions all along the line. We have endeavored to provide that promotions in any division shall be made from the clerks employed in the particular division. We found that many clerks, in order to avoid the provisions of the transfer law, were resigning outright and being reemployed in another department. We have tried in this bill to correct that evil.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I have said, as the items in the bill are reached, if any Member desires any information in regard to what we have done and why we have done it, I shall feel it my duty to explain it as best I can.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to get a little information from the gentleman in charge of the bill about this appropriation for the maintenance of the internal-revenue collectors' offices. How many offices are appropriated for in this bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Sixty-three.

Mr. PALMER. Is that the same number that was appropriated for in the last bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is.

Mr. PALMER. And that is four less than was carried before? Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Four less than were carried prior to October 1, 1912.

Mr. PALMER. I assume when the Appropriations Committee cut down the appropriation for the internal-revenue offices the committee had in mind there were four offices which could properly be abandoned for the good of the service.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We had information to the effect that there were five that could be dispensed with.

Mr. PALMER. What districts were they? Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, That information was given to a member of the Committee on Appropriations outside of the committee room, and I do not now remember what districts they were.

Mr. BURLESON. I am the Member referred to, but I do not now recall the location of the districts, save one. I recall that one was in the State of Iowa. I will state to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the districts the committee had in mind that could be abolished were not the districts that were afterwards abolished.

Mr. PALMER. That is what I am getting at.

Which were they? Mr. CARLIN.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. One was in South Carolina, one in Texas, from obvious reasons, one in Pennsylvania, and I do not know where the other was.

Mr. PALMER. The one in Pennsylvania was the district in which I live. [Laughter.] The one in Texas, I think, is in the district in which the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson]

Mr. BURLESON. No; it was the Dallas district that was abolished.

Mr. PALMER. And the other is the district in which the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Johnson] lives. I take it for granted that as far as the South Carolina and Texas districts are concerned, at least, the Appropriations Committee had no idea of having them wiped out.

Mr. MANN. Why should not they if they did not need them? Does the gentleman assume that the Appropriations Committee is unwilling to abolish a district in Texas because a gentleman from Texas is on the committee? I think that is a violent assumption.

Mr. PALMER. I assume the districts in those States are so important that it would be necessary to continue the offices in those districts.

Mr. MANN. How many districts are there in Texas?

Mr. BURLESON. One now.

That is doing pretty well. Mr. MANN.

Mr. BURLESON. How many districts are there in Illinois? Mr. MANN. Illinois collects more revenue than all the other districts combined, and there are very few districts

Mr. BURLESON. The Peoria district pays more into the Treasury than all the other districts in Illinois combined, the gentleman might also add.

Mr. MANN. That is true, and any one of the Illinois districts pays more internal-revenue tax than all of Texas combined.

Mr. PALMER. I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill if he believes this Texas district, and the South Carolina district, and the Pennsylvania district ought to be wiped out?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have no information on that subject. I will state, as far as I am at liberty to state, that a Member of Congress came to the Committee on Appropriations and asked that his name should not be used-

Mr. BURLESON. A Republican Member of Congress.
Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, A Republican Member.
He said he had knowledge that there was an internal-revenue district in his State that was absolutely useless for any purpose except to give somebody a place. That led the committee to inquire of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue if there were any districts that could be dispensed with without injury to the public service. The commissioner furnished to the gentleman from Texas, who waited on him, a list of five districts which I understood he thought could be dispensed with without injury to the public service.

Mr. GILLETT. Why, Mr. Chairman— Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, would there be any impropriety in submitting that communication of the commissioner to the House?

Mr. BURLESON. It was not a communication in writing. The information was received in a personal conference. to state in fairness to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] that at the time the committee was considering the abolishment of a number of these revenue districts it was understood that probably the district in South Carolina would be one of the districts abolished. I want to state, furthermore, that in my judgment the public service will not suffer by reason of the abolishment of the district in Texas. I want to state, furthermore, that I believe that the number of internal-revenue districts now authorized could be still further reduced without any injury to the public service.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, if the committee was right last year in reducing this appropriation because there were five districts that could be dispensed with, and after the appropriation has been reduced other districts are abolished, the only way to accomplish the purpose of the last year's action would be to still further reduce the appropriation, would it not?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No; because the President has the power by Executive order to rearrange these districts and to abolish as many as he sees fit, and we had an idea that very shortly there would be a new Secretary of the Treasury and a new Executive who would abolish the useless districts, and it was not necessary for the Committee on Appropriations to put it in the form of law that it had to be done,

Mr. PALMER. Can the Executive, change the boundaries of these districts? without legislation,

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir. Mr. PALMER. So he can arrange an entirely new system, dividing the country into 63 districts?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is my understanding.

Mr. GILLETT. May I state to the gentleman that I do not know about the private communications of Members of Congress to members of the committee or of the Internal Revenue Commissioner to Members of Congress. I do not think that is a proper kind of evidence to bring on the floor of the House, but I would like to ask the gentleman if the collector of internal revenue did not, in his official statement before the committee, state that he thought it was to the detriment of the public service to decrease the number of the districts?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. He did say in his examination on this bill that the discontinuance of the districts that had been discontinued was a detriment to the service.

Mr. GILLETT. And that in his opinion the number ought not to be diminished?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know whether he said that or not.

Mr. GILLETT. That is my recollection.
Mr. BURLESON. Undoubtedly it is true that there ought to be a rearrangement of these districts, and it is probable that the number which we now have, if a rearrangement should be effected, would be continued, but with the arrangement as it is now some of these districts could be abolished without injury to the public service.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, this is the first indication that we have had of the attitude of the majority toward appropriations, now that the campaign is over. I think in that light it is somewhat suggestive and interesting. We all remember that last year just on the eve of a political campaign the cry on that side of the House was all for economy and reform. The pork barrel was closed up, patronage in this House was cut off, appropriation bills were diminished, and we were told that the Democratic Party was bound for reform.

The committees on expenditures, which have jurisdiction of the different departments, were all put to work, and it was expected that revelations of extravagance and scandals would be brought before us. All of those hopes entirely failed of realization, and all of those committees accomplished nothing, though I presume they affected public opinion; and now, at the beginning of this Congress, we are going to see what the Democratic Party will do along those lines after election. That was all before election, and that was all to make a platform.

This very bill in the last Congress came in so stingy, parsimonious, and vicious in what it did and what it did not do that the Republican members of the committee felt bound to take the very unusual step of submitting a minority report—something which had not been done before, if I remember correctly, since I have been a member of the committee.

Now, we all wonder, after the object was achieved, after they had gone before the people on this platform of economy, now that they have won power, whether they will carry out those platform pledges and the precedents which they tried to start in the last Congress.

In that light I think this bill is suggestive, because in the last Congress in this bill there was not a single increase either of salary or of force except, I believe, one very small increase of a salary which had been diminished by mistake in the pre-Except for that in the last Congress you ceding Congress. could look through all the pages of this printed statement on the legislative bill and you would not find a single increase. either of salary or of force. They not only did that, but they went a step further, and against a hostile Republican administration, as they seemed to have considered it, an administration that had distinguished itself by more genuine efforts for reform than any other administration that has been here in the 20 years that I have seen, an administration which by its efforts and investigations has cut down the expense of the departments here in Washington by hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, against that administration they made a lump-sum reduction. They not only would not allow that administration a single increase of force or of salary, but, unable to say where the administration should diminish its expenditures, unable to go into details, unable to give any intelligent judgment as to where a reduction could be made, they made a lump-sum reduction, and said that during the year whatever loss in force might occur should not be filled.

That was their attitude last year toward the Republican administration, and now what is their attitude this year? Is it the same? Last year, as I said, if you looked through these pages you would not find a single increase. That was for the Republican administration. Now, if you will take up the report accompanying this bill, you will find on more than half of its pages increases of force, increases of salary, and in some cases increases of both force and salary.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Johnson] says that some people are unscrupulous and ignorant enough—I think those were his complimentary adjectives—to feel that the Democratic Party is hungry for spoils. [Laughter.] I admit that I am one of those persons who come within that category.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will my friend from Massachusetts allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am sorry that my friend from Massachusetts suspects the Democratic Party. I will look into the dictionary for another adjective to describe the gentleman. I want to ask the gentleman whether he is complaining because we have made increases either in force or in

Mr. GILLETT. I am not. I am complaining because you treated the administration last year in the way you did and now begin to take a different tack.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Has the administration suffered in any particular by reason of the reductions that were

Mr. GILLETT. Well, we have had only three months since that bill went into effect. You can not tell, but I have no doubt You can not tell, but I have no doubt the administration has suffered.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I know you would have suffered, unless that bill had passed, very greatly.

Mr. GILLETT. I have no doubt the administration has suffered. I have no doubt it would have been better to have given some of these increases then. I agree that many of these increases of force and of salary are proper. I am not sure but that they all are; but, under the circumstances, I do criticize the increases of salary in this bill. I criticize the way in which they are made. I believe many of the salaries to clerks in the departments are now inadequate. I believe they ought to be increased, but I believe the way to increase them is not for our committee to pick out its favorites and increase them by a bill like this

Mr. BURLESON. I should like to ask the gentleman whether he says that has been done in this bill?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not know.

Mr. BURLESON. Does he mean to insinuate that it has been done in this bill?

Mr. GILLETT. I do not mean that they are your personal favorites. I mean that they are favorites, because they are picked out when undoubtedly there are many others in the departments equally deserving.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman indicate or particularize? Will he put his finger on one case where a man has been selected out as a favorite?

Mr. GILLETT. Everyone of them who is selected out is the recipient of favoritism.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman state whose favorite

Mr. GILLETT. I do not mean that he is your favorite or any other man's favorite on the committee. He is the favorite of this legislation, and the exercising of this favoritism will lead to further favoritism, as you well know, because you know that when we have increased the salaries here the bill will go over to the Senate, and they will put on many other additions, and we will have to agree to them.

Mr. BURLESON. Right at this particular point—
Mr. GILLETT. I decline to yield right in the middle of a sentence. I say that our increasing of these salaries will lead the Senate to do the same thing. Those increases will come back here, and we will have to consent to their increases. Now, what we ought to have done is to have reclassified the whole service. There are many places which are inadequately paid. I presume I voted for most of these increases of salary. not remember opposing any of them. I think they are worthy, but if you are starting in on your principle of reform and economy, I think the proper way to do it is not to refuse, as you did last year, to make a single increase either of force or salary and then come in this year to make increases. Instead of that you ought to pass a reclassification of the whole civil service. That is one of the crying needs. There are some of these clerks who are too highly paid. There are some who are paid too little. There is a bill which was considered by the Committee on Appropriations a few years ago, and I think it was favorably reported by that committee, but did not pass the House. There is a bill reported by the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service in the last session for reclassifying the service. Either of those bills contains a foundation which might have been taken up and enacted into law; but instead of adopting the system recommended by the Committee on Appropriations and by the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, you would return to the old-fashioned way which, I am sorry to say, we have been pursuing right along. You have relaxed from your last year's stern and ascetic principle of not making any increases, and now for the Democratic administration you are making increases both of force and salary.

Mr. BURLESON. I want to ascertain the viewpoint of the gentleman. He insinuates that these increases which have been made in this bill are made as the result of favoritism. I want to know if that is the operating cause that moved those in charge of this bill for the last 16 years to grant the increases that have been made in the legislative bill and other appropria-

Mr. GILLETT. I have just criticized it myself and have said it is the wrong principle. It is the same principle that we have

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Suppose we should pass a law reclassifying the service. Who would put the clerks in class 4 and class 3 and class 2 and class 1?

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman is not familiar with the bill that has been before our committee and before the House, which provides for reclassifying them not simply by grades, as they are now, which is a vicious way, but classifying them according to the quality of the work that they do.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Who is to do that?

Mr. GILLETT. The head of the department does it. Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Who came down here before our committee saying: "This man who is drawing $1,600 is worth $1,800"?

Mr. GILLETT. The head of the department, of course.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The same people who would do the reclassifying.

Mr. GILLETT. No: but then they would reclassify according to the character of the work.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is what they testified before the committee, that they are asking for an increase because of the men's work. If there is any favoritism it is shown by the department and not by Congress. I do not know any of these people.

Mr. GILLETT. I will say frankly that I do not suspect these are the personal favorites of any member of the committee, but it is the system of favoritism appointing them in this way. The way they ought to be appointed is the other way. The very austere self-control which gentlemen exercised in the last Congress is very different from the generosity they are exercising here.

Another contrast is in reference to another branch of departmental service which is subject to great improvement. The committee last year recognized that superannuation was one of the evils of the service. It is one of the greatest problems that can be tackled by any committee, and if the Committee on Appropriations would strike out these two evils, would reclassify and would strike out superannuation, they would do something of permanent value.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that the committee did do that, but with the gentleman's assistance the President wrote a veto message with reference to it.

Mr. GILLETT. The committee did do it; but in such a crude and preposterous way that I venture to say they will not dare repeat it when they come into power. I agree that there is no inconsistency in not doing it at this session, because they know it would be vetoed again; but I venture to say now that you will not dare to do it in the next Congress, because you know it is not the right way.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Massachusetts characterizes the method in very harsh language. My recollection is that he made the statement that if we were not to adopt a civil retirement law, in his opinion this was the very next best thing to be done.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman is mistaken in his recollection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was of the opinion that that was what the gentleman from Massachusetts believed about it.

Mr. GILLETT. No. Now, as to this question of superannuation, the committee met it in a crude way in the last Congress, which, as I say, was utterly inadequate and which I do not believe they will press when they have the power and are able to put it into effect. So the criticism I make of the committee is not on this bill. I think this bill is a good bill, a much better bill than that of the last session. The criticism I make is that last session they flung out the banner of economy and reform and put through a bill they praised highly because it did not have in it any increases for the Republican administration, and just as they are going to have an administration of their own they abandon that policy and bring in the same kind of a bill that had been going on before and which they so harshly criticized.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will not we have to operate under that bill from March until July of next year?

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We knew it then as well as we know it now.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course, I had not an idea then that you were going to operate under it for 12 months.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it not a fact that all the increases recommended in this bill are positions in the classified service? Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And so far as any party affairs is concerned, there are none.

Mr. GILLETT. That depends upon what you do to the classified service. That is what we are all waiting to see. The gentleman from South Carolina says that only unscrupulous and ignorant persons think there is any hunger for spoils on that side. If that is true, there are many unscrupulous and ignorant persons.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I am not hungry for spoils, neither are my constituents. I have a great many patriotic and competent citizens who believe they can materially improve the character of the administration by being made a part of it.

Mr. MANN. With a fixed salary.
Mr. FITZGERALD. And I hope to have them given an opportunity to demonstrate what they can do.

Mr. GILLETT. That confirms my suspicion that was so criticized by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That does not mean that the classified service is to be utterly demoralized, although in my own opinion there are some positions in the classified service, filled by some Republicans who were covered there by Executive order, which would be very greatly improved by having a change in the occupants.

Mr. GILLETT. I presume that the gentleman from New York has a certain number and other gentleman have a larger number, so that among you all the whole service could be changed and much improved.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I might add this: If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] will give me a list of the places that he knows would be the easiest for me to obtain for my constituents after his long experience with the administrations of his own party I would feel very grateful to him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] be willing to take a list of the places which the gentleman from Massachusetts has been instrumental in filling and be satisfied with them?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, it is very easy to satisfy me.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is skillfully evading the question. Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not believe that the gentleman from Massachusetts should be put in a position where he might be forced to confess that perhaps he has not been as arduous in some phases of his work as recent events would make him believe he should have been.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman from New York be willing to take the same number of places or the places which have been filled through the instrumentality and personal solicitation of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is right for the gentleman from Illinois to try and force a declaration from the gentleman from Massachusetts upon that point. It might coerce the gentleman into making a statement that is not exactly founded upon facts.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman from Texas be willing to be satisfied with filling the places that have been filled under Republican administrations through my instrumentality?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no. We know the gentleman has never been persona grata for over 10 minutes in any administration. I wish to announce for myself that I do not intend to put any limitations either upon my activities or my desires to serve to the best of my ability the most intelligent constituency in the United States.

Mr. MANN. It is quite evident that none of the gentlemen are willing to confine themselves. All are after the spoils, red-hot, all the time, chasing them down.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, if displacing an incompetent Republican with an efficient Democrat is being after the spoils, then I am after the spoils.

Mr. MANN. And if replacing a competent Republican by an inefficient Democrat is after the spoils the gentleman will still be after the spoils.

Mr. FITZGERALD: Mr. Chairman, that is a situation that can not possibly exist. There are no inefficient Democrats seeking positions, and there are many incompetent Republicans hold-

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that that is the attitude of all the Democratic Members.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I was going to say that that, I think, pretty well justifies me in putting myself in the class reprobated by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. All Democrats who want office are efficient in the eyes of the majority, and any Republican who is in the place they want is inefficient. We have been wondering what would be their attitude, and this bill is the first indication, and apparently their Spartan self-denial of last session is loosening, and I expect their zeal for economy will steadily diminish and their appetite for spoils increase. I want it to be made clear that I am not criticizing this bill, but it is the last year's humbug that I am criticizing, when they pretended they were not going to increase any office or salary, when they paraded themselves as the great apostles of reform and economy, and now just as soon as they have the administration they desert their past professions.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.
Mr. SLAYDEN. Is not that statement perfectly consistent with the moderate increase that is made necessary by the increase in population?

Mr. GILLETT. There was just as much increase last year as there is this year. They did not give a single increase last year; instead they cut the bill down. Last year it was a Republican administration that they were providing for, and this year it is a Democratic administration that they are pro-I will agree that the gentleman is correct, that there ought to be, in the natural course of things, an increase every year.

Mr. SLAYDEN. A moderate increase commensurate with actual demands.

Certainly, there ought to be, and last year Mr. GILLETT. it was not given; and the present administration, above any administration I know of, has disclosed a genuine zeal for economy, and has introduced reforms that right here in Washington have cut off the salary list hundreds of thousands of dollars a year. Yet, despite that fact, last year while business was growing not an increase was made.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman speaks of increases in salary. Will the gentleman, for the information of the committee, state the largest increase of salary that is contained in the pending bill?

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, I do not remember. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that no increase of salary has been made to a greater extent than $250?

Mr. GILLETT. I should not wonder.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And there are not over 12 or 15 increases in the entire bill.

Mr. GILLETT. I think there are more than that, but the amount is not important; it is the principle I am criticizing. Why do not you live up to the principle you laid down last year-a principle that is good enough for a Republican administration? Why do not you follow it when your own administra-tion comes into power? That is my criticism. I am not criti-cizing the bill, but I am simply stating that you are not follow-ing out now the same unintelligent parsimony which you showed last year; and I expect that it was just a prelude to an equally unintelligent prodigality when you will come to appropriate for your own administration.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GHLETT] can not find anything in this bill to criticize, and is compelled to go back and criticize the bill that was passed at the last Congress, I ask for a reading of this bill.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, every intelligent Member of Congress recognizes that there is a crying necessity for a reform in the classified service of the Government. the House who are chargeable with the responsibility of framing the appropriation bills in recognition of that fact during the past 8 or 10 years have made repeated efforts to effect this reform by embodying paragraphs in appropriation bills dealing with this subject. Of course such paragraphs in appropriation bills are subject to the point of order, and if we should manage to get over the point of order we are in danger of running counter to a presidential veto for attempting legislation on an appropriation bill; but, Mr. Chairman, there is a committee of the House of high standing

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman allow a question? Mr. BURLESON. Not now. I will yield to the gentleman in a minute. There is a committee of the House of great influence and high standing chargeable with the duty under our rules of dealing with this subject matter, upon which the grave responsibility is imposed of reporting to this House remedial legislation looking to the correction of this great evil, not only of reorganizing the classified service but also of looking to the elimination of admitted superannuation which exists in all the departments of the Government. That committee was for many years presided over by a very distinguished Republican. will not charge that the distinguished gentleman has been guilty of neglect of duty, I will not charge that he has idled on the job, but the chairman of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service in the Sixty-first Congress, in the Sixtieth Congress, in the Fifty-ninth Congress, at any time that he desired to correct this great evil that has been pointed out by the gentleman from Massachusetts, could have assembled that great committee, formulated his proposition of reform in the shape of a bill, and reported it to this House for consideration. Now, Mr. Chairman, it was not the fault of the minority, the Democrats, in the Sixty-first, the Sixtieth, and the Fifty-ninth Congresses that this action was not taken. It was a fault, if I may say so, which rested more with the chairman of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service than with any other; and I must say that it comes with poor grace from the gentleman from Massachusetts, who held the chairmanship on the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service for so long, to come here now and point out that a feeble effort is being made by the majority at this time to correct some of these manifest abuses that now exist in our Civil Service. If the gentleman had been diligent when he was at the head of the committee which he presided over with such grace and such dignity for so long a time, if he had been diligent in the discharge of his duty, there would not now be substantial basis for the criticism he directs against those who have had the preparation of this bill,

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to the gentleman for his suggestion, because he unfortunately is ignorant of the fact, as is quite apt to be the case with that side of the House. He says if I had done my duty as chairman of that committee there would have been such a report. Now, as a matter of fact there was. That committee was called together and that committee worked with great diligence through two Congresses, and it reported a bill which was the result of a vast amount of work upon both these subjects, which I am now criticizing the Committee on Appropriations for neglecting.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman's side controlled the House, why did not you put it through?

Mr. GILLETT. I did not control the House; I did the best I could. I did get a report out of the committee in favor of a bill to cure this superannuation and a bill for a reclassification. Those bills the present Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, although I have urged it upon the committee, has paid no attention to; but the Committee on Appropriations, which last year had a rule which made everything in order on a bill, could have undoubtedly with equal ease this year secured just such a rule. They had before them, or might have if they were not all as ignorant as the gentleman from Texas that such bills had been reported—they might have those bills which were re-ported before them, might have brought them in here and used them as a basis for the bill they made and with the consent of the Committee on Rules brought them up.

It is a reform that is as crying a need for the administration of this Government as anything of which I know—those two points, the reclassification of the service and the cure of superannuation—and yet the majority on that side of the House has done nothing toward it except that preposterous and crude proposition which was made in the last Congress, and which I will venture to predict that now when they have the three branches of the Government they will not try to put through the next Congress, but will abandon it.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman berates this side of the House for failing to do in 6 months what the gentleman failed to do in 14 years.

Mr. GILLETT. You might have started it. You had the results of our work before you which you might have taken as a basis.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Is not the superannuation plan a pension bill?

Mr. GILLETT. A contributory pension bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, some features of the gentleman's statement are hardly in accordance with the general gentleness of discourse for which he is noted. As I happened to enter the House the gentleman was endeavoring to point out the fact that the Committee on Appropriations had recommended no increases of compensation during the last session, and that in the pending bill some increases had been made. He seemed to assume that the committee had refused in the last session to recommend any increases because a Republican administration would be the beneficiary of such increases, while their conduct at this time was prompted by the fact that the Democratic administration would be the beneficiary of these in-The Committee on Appropriations during the last sesereases. sion of Congress, in view of the fact that all branches of the Government had been in complete control of the Republicans for a long period, realizing that the demand existed throughout the country for a halt in the extravagant program that had been followed for years in appropriating and expending public money, laid down a rule that it would not recommend any increases of compensation in any bill reported from that committee, and that unless imperative reasons were shown it would not recommend the creation of any new positions. lection is that the Committee on Appropriations made but four recommendations for increases in the bills coming from that committee-one to correct an unintentional reduction of the compensation of a laborer, made by the preceding Congress; two to increase the compensation of laundry women in a tuberculosis hospital in the District of Columbia; and one other that I do not recall. The purpose was to halt the custom that had been in existence of granting indiscriminately favors to those with the largest amount of influence and the most powerful connections. It was attempted to get the estimates on a fair basis in order to be in a position to proceed to do justice in such instances as the future might disclose changes to be necessary. What the committee has done in the present bill is the best answer to the charge that the Democratic committee has attempted to make recommendations that would be for the benefit of a Democratic administration after the knowledge had come to the country that the Democrats were to control the Government after the 4th of next March.

The estimates submitted by this administration for amounts to be carried in the legislative appropriation bill are $2,298, 492.12 in excess of the amount actually appropriated for the current fiscal year, and the committee recommends a bill carrying $317,627.88 less than the amount enacted in the law for the current year. So that the committee has recommended a bill of two million and about six hundred thousand dollars less than the present administration estimates will be required after the 1st of July to carry on the departmental service. Ample justification was given to a Democratic House very greatly to enlarge the public service in Washington if it had a desire to take any mere petty political advantage of the situation. But, Mr. Chairman, the committee is confronted by the fact that the estimates submitted by the administration for the ensuing fiscal year are $113,415,455.14 more than the revenues for 1914 estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury, as required by This does not take into contemplation the estimates for deficiencies that may for any reason, proper or improper, require additional appropriations during this session; nor does it take into account whatever appropriations may be made for miscellaneous items outside of appropriation bills.

Even if the appropriations, estimated, in round numbers, at $30,000,000, for the Panama Canal, reimbursable out of the issuance of bonds, be eliminated there will still be a deficit of some $$3,000,000 contrasted with the estimated revenues forecast by the Secretary of the Treasury. In his report to Congress in accordance with the law, in order to wipe out this deficit or make it as low as possible, the Secretary of the Treasury eliminates the $60,000,000 required under the terms of the sinking-fund act for the redemption of the public debt. Eliminating the amount required for sinking-fund purposes, and also eliminating the $30,000,000 required for Panama Canal construction purposes, reimbursable out of the bonds authorized to be issued, there will still be a deficit of over $22,000,000. without taking into consideration deficiencies or miscellaneous items and without considering any authorizations of any character for new river and harbor projects or new public buildings.

It seems to me that, instead of criticizing the Democratic House for making the comparatively few recommendations for increases of compensation of persons in the classified service in the legislative bill, gentlemen on that side of the House might better devote themselves to some discussion or explanation of the very remarkable financing of public operations in which this administration seems to be engaged. I take it that if Congress were to accept the estimates of the various executive departments and appropriate in accordance with them this administration would have the satisfaction of knowing that a Democratic Congress would be required to find at least $83,000,000 additional to the revenues now available in order to meet the obligations of the Government.

I hope Members of the House will bear these facts in mind during this coming winter, and that in the consideration of legislation designed to fix permanently large annual charges upon the revenues of the Government some attention will be paid to the fact that it is not necessary that Congress shall devote its time to the means by which the public revenues shall be expended, but that it will be necessary to give considerable time and thought to ascertaining sources from which additional public revenues may be obtained. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gillett] seems to have provoked some personal criticism of himself by suggestions which he made, which apparently were not understood on the Democratic side of the House. did not understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to criticize the items of increase of salaries in this bill at all. merely called attention to the fact that in the last session, when it was uncertain as to who would have control of the Government the next time, the Democrats had taken the position that they would not make any increase of salary, and that at this time they have made some increases to which, I think, he does not object.

The distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. Burleson], who hopes to be in the Cabinet of the next President-and agree with him in that respect [applause]—suggested that it was the fault of the gentleman from Massachusetts, as the chairman of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, that changes have not been made.

I served on that committee for many years with the gentleman from Massachusetts as chairman, and I can testify that there were many rocks placed in the road of his automobile in the line and direction which he sought to run it. I threw some of them myself. [Laughter.] He has worked diligently in this House for many years for the purpose of effecting reforms in the administrative branch of the Government, and no one ought to criticize him for again calling attention to what he believes are necessary reforms, and for criticizing the other side of the House for not bringing in those reforms.

I do not object, Mr. Chairman, to the Committee on Appropriations having made recommendations of increases of salary. think last year there ought to have been some increases. have no doubt this year there ought to be some increases. not believe that the Committee on Appropriations in making recommendations this year have been influenced by the fact that they were personally interested in the offices where the salaries were increased, or that their party was personally in-terested in those offices. After a while we will reach the real distinction between Democrats seeking election and Democrats after election, when we are called upon to vote for an extravagant and unnecessary public-building bill and an extrava-gant river and harbor bill, when the boys really get in their work on the pork-barrel bills which they were afraid to pass at the last session of Congress, but which they determined to have at this session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows: For mileage of Senators, $51,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding after line 4, page 2, the following:
"Provided, That hereafter Members of Congress. Delegates from Territorles, the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, and the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands shall be paid only their actual traveling expenses while traveling from their homes to Washington City and return on the usual and ordinary route of travel from their legal residence: Provided, That said sums of money shall be paid out upon the certificate of the Members of Congress. Delegates from Territories, the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, and the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands, and not otherwise."

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that amendment is not germane to the portion of the bill which has just been read. This portion of the bill deals with the appropriation for the Members and officers of the United States Senate. The amendment suggested by the gentleman covers a great many things not at all relating to the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is germane to the subject under consideration. The part of the bill to which the amendment proposes to apply is—

For mileage of Senators, $51,000.

The subject of inquiry now under consideration is the question of mileage, and anything which relates to that subject is, in my judgment, germane. Under clause 2 of Rule XXI, known as the old Holman rule, it certainly becomes germane. Anything is in order which tends to reduce the public expenditures and to bring economy in the administration of the affairs of this country. I insist that it is germane because it relates particularly and peculiarly to the subject under inquiry.

The subject under inquiry is that of the mileage of Senators. While it is true that the amendment which I propose here is somewhat broader than the language set out in this paragraph, relating exclusively to the mileage of Senators, and the amendment relates not only to the mileage of Senators but to the mileage of Representatives, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners, I do not believe that under the rules and practices of the House its germaneness is destroyed. The vital question, as far as germaneness is concerned, is the question, Does the amendment relate to the subject under inquiry? If it does, it becomes germane. I do not believe the point of order is well

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] desire to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; I do not.
The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that this comes within the Holman rule and is germane, for the reason that it applies to Members of Congress and is a limitation on the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. If the Chairman will permit, the portion of the bill under consideration is headed:

Legislative-Senate.

It is a familiar rule that an item which may be germane to a bill may still not be germane to a particular portion of the bill. This amendment is offered in connection with the appropriation for the mileage of Senators, but is not confined to the mileage It includes the question of mileage for the Memof Senators. bers of the House. The appropriation for mileage of Members of the House is carried in an entirely different portion of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Illinois a question in that connection.

This paragraph simply appropriates for the mileage of Senators, while the amendment undertakes to designate the amount of money that may be received either by a Senator or by a Member of the House?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. If this amendment is adopted here, would it not apply equally to Members of the House, although the appropriation for their mileage is made at a different point in the bill'

Mr. MANN. It would apply if it were offered at that point in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Even if this amendment is not offered at that point, this being a limitation on the appropriation made elsewhere for the mileage of Members of the House, it seems to the Chair that it would apply to that appropriation wherever made.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no appropriation in this paragraph for mileage for Members of the House, and an amendment providing for mileage for Members of the House, Delegates and Commissioners would not be in order at this point, because it would not be germane. At this point provision is made to pay the mileage of Senators. Any amendment to be in order at this point must be germane. An amendment proposing to reduce the stationery allowance of Members of the House would not be in order here. No more is an amendment to control the amount of mileage to be paid a Member.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York contend that a limitation on the amount of mileage received by Senators would not be in order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is not this question. The question is much more comprehensive than that; it embraces Members of the Senate and Members of the House, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners. An amendment affecting them is not germane to a provision confined exclusively to Members of the Senate.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, personally, I doubt whether the amendment is permissible under the provisions of the Holman rule. But I am inclined to think that both the gentleman from New York and myself are mistaken. An amendment if it was offered is germane to this portion of the bill affecting the mileage of Senators, and if the item was offered as to the mileage of Senators, I think an amendment to that effect as to the mileage of the Members of the House would be in order, and if so,

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule unless the gentleman from Indiana wishes to be heard.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I have anything further to say except that I think it comes clearly under article 2, Rule XXI, what is known as the Holman rule, and, as I said a moment ago, I think it is germane. What is the subject under inquiry? It is the question of mileage. True, the paragraph relates to the mileage of Senators, but as the Chairman knows, Senators are Members of Congress exactly as are Members of the House, and because my amendment brings in two more classes of persons who are Members of this same body, to wit, the Resident Commissioner of Porto Rico and the Commissioners of the Philippine Islands, yet I insist that that does not destroy the germaneness of the amendment which I

The Chair, of course, is conversant with the rule to which I have referred. It reads, in part:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except as such as being germane to the subject matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of the amounts of money covered by the bill.

And so forth.

Capital.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment I have proposed to the bill comes squarely within that part of the rule. It is germane because the subject of inquiry is that of the mileage of a part of the Members of the Congress of the United States, because my amendment uses language which covers two or three other persons, yet the subject to which my amendment already applies is that of mileage, and I insist is germane.

The CHAIRMAN. This amendment proposes to cut down or limit the mileage allowed to Senators, Members of Congress, Resident Commissioners, and Delegates. If it applied only to Senators it would undoubtedly be germane to this paragraph, but it is a broader amendment than that and applies to all Members of Congress. Now if an amendment, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, was offered to limit the mileage of Senators had been submitted, an amendment to that amendment to include Members of the lower House of this body would have been in order. So it seems to the Chair that since the amendment embraces both of the subjects that would have been in order it is germane, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to take much of the time of the House in discussing this question, because it has been discussed on the floor of the House time and time again. I do not know that I can add anything to what has been said on this subject by men abler than I am to present it. But, Mr. Chairman, I do believe that this amendment should carry and that it should be made permanent law. I think the Appropriations Committee last winter and summer did splendid work in reducing the appropriations, and I think they should be commended for it, and I have no doubt that their splendid work in reducing the appropriations was reechoed throughout the country during the campaign and materially aided the Democratic Party in achieving the splendid victory in the November election.

The appropriations last year were reduced something like $31,000,000 below what any previous Congress had made them. I have believed for some time that it was the odds and ends of Congress in making appropriations that the people have a meritorious right to protest against. The people have no right to object, nor do I believe they do object, against meritorious appropriations, made to legitimately run the Government. It will not be contended by any Member of this House for a moment that it costs him 20 cents per mile each way to travel from his home to the city of Washington and return by the usual and ordinary routes of travel between his residence and the

In fact, it can not possibly cost him 20 cents per mile. Almost all railroads in the country sell tickets for 2 cents per mile, and this, with sleeping-car berths and meals en route, does not amount to 5 cents per mile. There is not a Member of the House, though he live at the remotest corner or section of the United States, who can not travel from his home to Washington City on 5 cents a mile or less.

It is not so much a question of saving this amount of money, though this is an item to be considered, as it is the principle involved in the case. When the Democratic Party got control of this House a little over a year ago it began with its pruning knife. It lopped off a tremendous lot of useless jobs here and there, and which were conceded to be useless, because, after cutting out these useless jobs, the organization of the House moved right on, showing that the jobs disposed of had been useless, so far as efficiency of the organization of the House is concerned.

I believe that the cutting out of these useless jobs saved the Government approximately $180,000 per year in the way of salaries. Another practice has grown up here to which I could not subscribe, and that was allowing the employees of the House a month's extra salary. This was cut out by the Democratic caucus and saved the country approximately $65,000. I believe the country agreed with the Democratic Party, when in caucus assembled, that it did right in abolishing the large number of useless jobs and cutting out the extra month's pay for the employees of the House.

What kind of position have we got ourselves into by this kind of legislation? Let me appeal to you, my Democratic friends, who propose to stand for economy, to look this question squarely in the face. Are we doing justice, are we doing right, when we say to the little employee who travels from the Pacific coast, at a cost to him of from $65 to $100, making a trip here to fill a position the salary of which ranges from $1,200 to $1,500 per year or less, we will deny him his extra month's salary, which was given to him for the purpose of compensating him for his mileage, and at the same time refuse to repeal our 20 cents per mile and allow ourselves to be paid our actual traveling expense? Is this justice? Is it right to refuse to allow the employees of the House their month's salary in lieu of mileage and at the same time refuse to repeal the law allowing us 20 cents per mile each way for going and returning, and in lieu of that allow ourselves actual traveling expenses when this is more than we are giving to the employees of the House?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman that I am thoroughly and heartily in sympathy with the purpose of his amendment, and I have taken occasion to say so several times upon this floor. I want to ask the gentleman, with reference to the amendment as it is drawn, if it is not, as a matter of fact, possible under that amendment, as it was read from the Clerk's desk, for Members of the House to go back and forth from their homes and the city of Washington go back and forth from their homes and the city of Washington any number of times during the session and collect actual traveling expenses for each trip?

Mr. COX of Indiana. I do not believe so. The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? There was no ob-

Mr. COX of Indiana. The language used by me in the amendment read from the desk follows very closely the language of the old statute, which allows Members to collect 20 cents per mile each way, going and returning by the usual routes of travel.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think, in order that there may be no question about it, that he better provide expressly upon the face of the amendment that it should be paid only once during each session?

Mr. COX of Indiana. If the gentleman has any question about it, I would be very glad to accept such an amendment.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am just suggesting that to the

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the amendment I have offered will permit a Member of Congress to charge for different trips. In any event, I take it that no Member of Congress would undertake to charge for more than one trip. I regard Members of Congress as being high-priced men, and I would not believe for a moment that any Member, even though the amendment which I have offered might permit him to do so, would charge for extra trips to his home. I do not think he would do it, because of the moral obloquy he would undoubtedly bring upon himself if he attempted to do so.

Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Certainly. Mr. KINDRED. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I lost the drift of what the gentleman said on this phase of the subject. How many trips does the gentleman's amendment anticipate?

Mr. COX of Indiana. One here and one home. Mr. Chair man, a year ago last summer I looked into the question of mileage with some considerable degree of care. It is much broader than the mere question of mileage to Members of Congress. I give it as my sincere judgment that this country could save approximately a million dollars a year by looking into the mileage proposition. The officers of the Army while traveling on duty are allowed 7 cents a mile while coming and going to and from their posts of duty. A short time ago I asked the War Department to furnish me with vouchers or copies of vouchers for travel pay of officers, the appropriation of which was something like $500,000, and on reading these vouchers I found some exceedingly interesting reading. instance, each year a tremendous amount of money is paid out to officers of the Army at the rate of 7 cents per mile while traveling from one point to another for the sole purpose of taking test rides. If this was remedied and the officers of the Army put on actual expense basis, it would save the people a tremendous sum of money each year.

The statute allowing Members of Congress 20 cents per mile was passed in 1799, long before the era of railroads in this country and at a time when travel was made on foot, on horseback, and conveyance, and at a time when, no doubt, it cost the Members of Congress at least 20 cents per mile each way to make the journeys from their homes to the capital and return. For instance, Members living in New England and in Georgia, where they had to travel 600 or 700 miles in order to reach the capital, and over poor roads which no doubt existed at that time, and being several days on their journey, no doubt but what it cost them at least 20 cents per mile to make their journey; but to-day when the remotest sections of our country, the United States, can easily be reached by rail in four or five days' travel, with fare reduced on all trunk-line railroads to 2 cents per mile, there is no reason why the old statute passed in 1799 should not be either repealed outright or amended so as to meet improved conditions of travel of to-day.

At the time when the old statute was enacted the salary of Members of Congress was $7 per day, and the salary has been increased from time to time, until to-day it is $7,500 per year. To repeal the old statute or to amend it by paying actual traveling expense is in line of progress with the interests of the day. I know of no business house in this country that pays its employees mileage, but all of them pay their employees actual traveling expenses, and these expenses are paid out on vouchers furnished by the employees.

Mr. Chairman, we can not in good faith remedy the mileage evil as I think it exists in other branches of the Government to-day so long as we fail to remedy our own mileage. The law should either be repealed outright or should be amended so as to pay each Member his actual traveling expenses. This is fair, just, and equitable and is in line with progressive business interests of the country.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] is talking about a reform making a large saving. I am not taking issue with him on that point, but why should not the gentleman go further? I think when a man is elected to this House and paid a salary for his services the Government ought to be entitled to his entire time. We are asked here daily to excuse Members from attendance upon the sessions of the House on account of important business. Under the rules of the House, when a Member is absent without leave

Mr. COX of Indiana. Is the gentleman addressing that to me? Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Indiana was talking on the subject, and I want to invite the gentleman's attention to this point: Under the rules of the House, perhaps the law—I am not sure about that—when a Member is absent without leave he forfeits his salary, and yet we every day excuse men from at-tendance on the House on account of important business. If the gentleman will figure upon that he will find that perhaps he can save the Treasury a great deal by deducting the salary from Members who are absent on important business by refusing to permit them to leave this House to attend to important private business. I admit that when a man's family, or a member of same, is ill, or something of that sort, that he should be permitted to leave and remain away during such illness; but when Members leave to attend to business that pays them better than their salary, why should not they forfeit the salary for the time they have been away attending preferably to important private business? I do not desire the gentleman to understand me as making a speech in opposition to his amendment; but since the gentleman has started on a line of economy, why not pursue it in this direction and not have the whip of this House wear himself out to get a quorum here at times when it is very important to have one because gentlemen are excused by this House on account of important business. It seems to me while the gentleman is advocating reforms-and I think he is perfectly sincere-that he might urge reforms all along the line and refuse any Member of this House leave to be absent simply because he has important business, and thereby he will save many more thousands of dollars than he is now trying to save to the Treasury and at the same time expedite the legislation of this House very materially; and yet when we hear read from the desk that Mr. A or Mr. B asks leave of absence for 10 days on account of important business I do not hear the gentleman from Indiana or anybody else object.

Mr. BUTLER. How do you save the Treasury when he is here?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this question of mileage has been discussed in the House during my entire 14 years of service. From time to time various Members have suggested that the amount of mileage allowed to Members be reduced. I have very little interest in the matter; that is why I have at times participated in the discussion. The amount of money paid to me each session of Congress under the law is $92, so that it makes little difference whether we abolish the mileage reduce the rate, or fix some other basis upon which it shall be paid. The Committee on Appropriations reports the amount necessary to pay the amount of mileage under the existing law. It did not take up or discuss or consider the advisability of changing the present allowance. During the present Congress at each of the two previous sessions the matter was presented, debated, and decided in the House, and upon each occasion the House by a substantial majority determined that it would not change the rate of mileage.

In view of those circumstances, the committee presented the bill carrying the amount necessary to pay mileage in accordance with existing law. I do not care at this time to discuss at length the necessity, the advisability, or the propriety of changing the present rate. Members from a long distance who are compelled to close their homes and move their families in many instances part of their household goods-and establish themselves in Washington for a period running from four to eight or nine months, insist that the expense incident to such change or transfer of residence for themselves and their families is not more than met by the allowance under this statute. Arguments have been made that the purpose was not only to cover the personal traveling expenses of the Member himself, but to compensate him for all the expenditures necessitated by the transfer of his family and his home to the capital during the period he is required to remain here. All the reasons for and against the present rate and proposed change of rate are familiar to the Members of the House. I think we can easily determine the question without very much discussion.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I will detain the House for but a moment. I do not know that the amendment is so drawn that it would limit the Members to only one trip, but the proponent of the amendment states to me that that is his purpose and his intention. My objection to the present system of paying mileage is this: The gentlemen who live within a few miles of the Capital get a very small or practically no com-pensation at all. A man living at the distance from the Capital that I do gets something like $400 mileage. Those out West get over $1,000 mileage.

Now, the original discussion in reference to mileage paid in the First Congress hung upon this proposition, that the compensation of all Members of Congress should be the same. Therefore, in settling the question as to the location of the Capital, it was arranged so that those people who lived close to the Capital, who would have to pay but little money to get here, and those who lived a long distance from the Capital, who would have to pay a great deal more to reach the Capital, should get the same amount of salary. Under the old rules of traveling by stagecoach the amount paid originally was to pay actual traveling expenses for one round trip. Now, this mileage proposition presents an inequality of compensation which is not justified. I would prefer, rather than to have items for all sorts of expenses paid, to have a mileage basis such that it would be fixed by law, say 5 cents a mile for each way. That would certainly cover the expenses of a man and his wife, because you only pay now about 2 cents a mile for traveling expenses. Nor do I think it absolutely necessary that the expenses of the entire household should be borne by the Federal Government in getting to the Capital. I shall vote for the amendment which s offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox], but I hope he will so word the amendment that it can be beyond question that only one mileage shall be allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, there never will be any entirely satisfactory solution of the question of the payment of expenses for Members coming to Washington from their homes, because there is no way, of which I know, at least, of absolutely equalizing the matter. It would be a very easy matter to provide for the payment of expenses of the Member of Congress himself, and if it is the desire of Congress to have men come here from home and leave their families behind, that is a very good way to proceed. I would much rather have a Congress composed of Members with their families here, and men living with their families in Washington than have the families of Members at home and Members carousing here in Washington, because that is almost the inevitable effect. There is not a legislature in this country at any State capital where members go to the legislature for a few days in the week by themselves and go home at the end of the week, where they transact business with the same degree of propriety and sobriety as is done in Washington, where Members come and bring their families with them.

Now, there is no equitable way that I know of fully determining the method of expenditure for bringing a man's family here. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Sisson] suggests that 5 cents a mile each way will bring a man and his wife here. I do not know where it will do that. Possibly it will from Chicago, but I do not know. I know of no place in the country generally where you can travel at that rate. But a man and his wife are not the only members of many families. It is desirable that men who are elected to Congress have the ability to bring their children here, who ought to be under the control of the father and the mother. It is immaterial to me whether this amendment is agreed to or whether they pay mileage at all; but I know Members in this House whose mileage does not cover the expenditures which they make to bring their families to Washington. I believe that it is to the interest of the Government that the families of Members do come, as far as it is possible to bring them.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox]. Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some question about the amendment. I ask unanimous consent to insert in my amendment the following words: "going to and "going to and returning from each session, for one trip only. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to amend his amendment in certain particulars named by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. CANNON. What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be reported again.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "residences" insert "in going to and returning from each session, for one trip only."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" appeared to have it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. A division, Mr. Chairman. The House divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 37.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and three Members are present—a quorum. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Vice President: Secretary to the Vice President, $4.000; messenger, $1,440; telegraph operator, $1,500; telegraph page, $600; in all, $7,540.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire what are the duties of the telegraph operator to the Vice President and of the telegraph page. We abolished the telegraph instruments in the House apparently without any detriment to anyone except those who held the places. But why does the Vice President need a telegraph operator and a telegraph page-both?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will say to the gentle-man that the telegraph office at the Senate end of the Capitol is not exclusively for the use of the Vice President, nor is the page exclusively for his use. It is simply a convenience provided for the use of the Senate.

Mr. MANN. That applies to the telegraph operator provided for by the Senate?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; to the telegraph operator provided for by the Senate. The Vice President appoints the messenger.

Mr. PALMER. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that the appropriation for the maintenance of this telegraph wire that formerly ran between the Capitol and the departments has been

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Only as to the House of Representatives.

Mr. PALMER. Do they still maintain a telegraph line from the Capitol around to the departments?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I understand that they do.

Mr. PALMER. It ought to be cut out.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it ought to be cut out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Secretary: Secretary of the Senate, including compensation as disbursing officer of salaries of Senators and of the contingent fund of the Senate, $6,500; hire of horse and wagon for the Secretary's office, $420; Assistant Secretary, Henry M. Rose, $5,000; chief clerk, $3,250; financial clerk, $3,000 and $1,250 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent; minute and journal clerk, principal clerk, reading clerk, and enrolling clerk, at $3,000 each; executive clerk, and assistant financial clerk, at $2,750 each; librarian, file clerk, chief bookkeeper, assistant journal clerk, two clerks, printing clerk, and clerk compiling a history of revenue bills, at $2,500 each; first assistant librarian, $2,400; keeper of stationery, $2,400; compiler of Navy Yearbook and Senate report on river and harbor bill, $2,220; indexer for Senate public documents and two clerks, at $2,200 each; two clerks, at $2,100 each; assistant librarian, $1,600; skilled laborer, $1,200; clerk, $1,800; clerk, $1,600; assistant keeper of stationery, $2,000; clerk, $1,800; clerk, $1,600; assistant keeper of stationery, $2,000; assistant in stationery room, $1,200; messenger, $1,440; assistant messenger, $1,200; three laborers, at $840 each; three laborers, at $720 each; laborer in stationery room, $720; in all, $94,040.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order against the following in the bill, on lines 16 and 17: "And $1,250 while the office is held by the present incumbent." I desire to reserve a point of order against that part of it. would like to ask the author of the bill or the gentleman in charge of the bill a question about that. Is the salary of this officer, the financial clerk, fixed by law at $3,000 a year?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. No.
Mr. CULLOP. Why is it that it is proposed in this bill to say that this incumbent shall have an increase of $1,250 while he holds the office?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This appropriation has been carried in the bill for many years. It was put in by the Senate, and under the rules of comity that obtain between the House and the Senate we have no means of inquiring into the propriety of those expenditures that they make for their convenience and comfort.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is a different reason. The occupant of this place has not only occupied it for many years, but he is a peculiarly expert man. The Senate has done with reference to this officer what the House has done with reference to the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations. Everybody recognizes his peculiar fitness. They did not fix the compensation above a certain amount, but they felt that because of long years of faithful and efficient service this particular officer, while occupying the place, should be paid this additional sum, and that when he went out of the office his successor would be paid what it had been customary to pay prior to the time it was thought proper to give him this pro-

Mr. CULLOP. With all due deference to that explanation, think it would be proper, if the salary is to be raised, to raise it in the regular way. Everybody knows that if this is carried in this manner in the appropriation bill it means that this will

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no.

Mr. CULLOP. That it will be the salary of the successor of this man. I do not think that is a proper way to raise the salaries of officers. If he is worth $1,250 a year more than the salary, his salary ought to be increased by the amount of $1,250 a year, and we ought not to carry it along in this way, in my judgment, because it means the fixing of the permanent salary at $4,250 a year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is absolutely mistaken. Mr. Cleaves, who was connected with the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate for about 36 years, received during the latter years of his service $1,000 additional to the usual compensation. Provision was made that during his incumbency that additional sum should be paid to him. When he died and his successor was appointed, that additional $1,000 was dropped out of the appropriation bill. The purpose was to make it possible to fix adequate compensation for the men who, regardless of the change of political control of these two Houses, are retained, and perform faithful and peculiarly efficient service, by giving them additional compensation. When they go out of office, their successors are given the compensation fixed for the

The disbursing officer of the Senate has been receiving this compensation for many years, and it would be manifestly unfair to him at this time to attempt to reduce his compensation $1,250. Mr. CULLOP. How long has this gentleman held this posi-

Mr. FITZGERALD. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations says he has been there about 40 years.

Mr. CULLOP. How long has this item been carried in the bill in this way at the increased salary? Mr. FITZGERALD. Six or eight years.

Mr. CULLOP. I think it ought to be dropped, and I move to amend by striking out, in lines 16 and 17, the words "and $1,250 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cullor] withdraws his point of order and offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, lines 16 and 17, by striking out, after the figures "$3,000," the words "and $1,250 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve a point of order against this paragraph. I was on my feet for the purpose of doing so when the point of order was reserved by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order against the item.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman going to make the point or not? This is the salary that this man has been receiving. If the gentleman intends to make the point of order, let him make it

Mr. FOWLER. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.
Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to submit to the Chair that it is not subject to the point of order. This man is receiving this particular sum for the current year, and under the rulings of the Chair where the compensation of an officer is not fixed by statute his compensation is the amount which he receives in the current appropriation act. This particular compensation, expressed in this particular form, is the compensation fixed by the current law

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand whether this salary is fixed by statute.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not. It is only fixed by the current appropriation law.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, that was the reason why I made my motion to amend instead of making the point of order, because the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] had answered me that the salary was not fixed by law.

The CHAIRMAN. If this compensation is not statutory, the point is not well taken. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Fowler] has any statute provision fixing this salary, the Chair will hear it.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether there is a statute fixing this salary or not. I presumed that there was, as the salary had been fixed at $3,000 and the appropriation for this has been carried for many years past at that amount. I have not taken the pains to look up this salary as to whether it is fixed by law or not. This bill came in and was printed last night, and this morning was the first opportunity had for the purpose of making an examination of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The precedents are to the effect that where the salary is not fixed by statute the past and current appropriations make it law, and therefore the Chair overrules the point of order. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana to strike out certain language.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last I want to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill in relation to these clerks. I observe here that it has provided for clerks in the Senate to the amount of $370,940, while for the clerks of the House the amount is $162,230. I realize that this has been the practice for some time, but I want to inquire if the committee has ever made any investigation in reference to this matter of the great difference in the amount between the two Houses—the amount appropriated for the Senate clerks and messengers and janitors and those of the House. For instance, in the Post Office and Post Roads they have a clerk at $2,500, three assistants at $1,440 each, and a messenger at $1,440; while in the House Post Office and Post Roads Committee, the committee that prepares the bill and gets it ready, they only have a clerk at $2,500 and an assistant clerk at $1,400 and a janitor at $1,000. There seems to be a great difference in these two items.

Mr. BUTLER. Senators have more post offices than Members of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. The question with me is whether the committee has ever investigated this matter to ascertain if there was any real necessity for this large number of clerks or is it simply because the Senate has asked for them?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Committee on Appropriations of the House has no means of ascertaining the value of the work of clerks to Senate committees. I will say that the conference committee on the last legislative bill held out for many days and weeks against what the Senate was asking for, but it is simply impossible to get this bill through without giving them the clerical help they think they need.

Mr. FOSTER. So they simply make the claim that they need this great number of clerks.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We can not contradict their statement or prove that it is not true.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a ques tion. I have not had time to compare the present bill with the last bill, but I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill when did the clerk to the Committee on Woman Suffrage creep into the appropriation bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know, but they have such a committee there and it has a chairman.

Mr. COX of Indiana. This is the first time that I ever saw it carried in an appropriation bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has been in the bill right along.
Mr. COX of Indiana. For how many years?
Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not remember, but long enough.
The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper: Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper, $6,500; horse and wagon for his use, $420, or so much thereof as may be necessary; Assistant Sergeant at Arms, $2,500; Assistant Doorkeeper, $2,592; Acting Assistant Doorkeeper, $2,592; Assistant Doorkeeper, $2,592; 4 messengers, acting as assistant doorkeepers, $1,800 each; 37 messengers, at $1,440 each; 2 messengers on the floor of the Senate, at $2,000 each; messenger at card door, $1,600; clerk on Journal work for Congressional Record, to be selected by the official reporters, $2,000; storekeeper, $2,220; upholsterer and locksmith, $1,440; cabinetmaker, $1,200; 3 carpenters, at $1,080 each; janitor, $1,200; 4 skilled laborers, at $1,000 each; skilled laborer, $900; laborer in charge of private passage, $840; 3 female attendants in charge of ladies' retiring room, at $720 each; chief telephone operator, $1,200; 2 telephone operators, at $900 each; night telephone operator, $720; telephone operators, at $900 each; night telephone operator, $720; telephone page, $720; superintendent of press gallery, $1,800; assistant superintendent of press gallery, $1,400; laborer, $840; 27 laborers, at $720 each; 16 pages for the Senate Chamber, at the rate of $2.50 per day each during the session, $8,440; in all, $136,244.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice an item is carried here for pages for the session at two and a half dollars per day. The computation is for 211 days. I notice that the bill provides that wherever the words "during the session" occur it shall mean 211 days from December 1 to June 30.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. These estimates were submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury.

I understand that the arithmetical computation Mr. MANN. was made by the Secretary of the Treasury, but probably not personally. It amounts to 212 days, as anybody can easily see, and I wondered whether it was desired to have it accurate.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It will be corrected. This is a Senate matter.

Mr. MANN. It is immaterial to me whether they appropriate a sufficient amount or not; I do not know whether it ever is expended or not.

The Clerk read as follows:

For mileage of Representatives and Delegates and expenses of Resident Commissioners, $175,000.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out the period at the end of line 7, page 12, and insert a colon and add:

"Provided, That hereafter Members of Congress, Delegates from Territories, and Resident Commissioners from Porto Rico and the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands shall be paid only their actual traveling expenses while traveling from their residences by the usual route of travel to Washington City and return once for each session of Congress, and which sums of money shall be paid out on the certificate of the Member of Congress, the Delegates from Territories, Resident Commissioners from Porto Rico, and Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands and not otherwise."

The CHALEMAN. The question is an agreeing to the amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to detain the committee but a moment. In response to what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims] said a moment ago, when the other amendment was under discussion before the House—and regret he is not now in the Chamber-there may be evils along the line that he suggested, and if there be any let him go to work and correct them. A part of his speech, I take it, was not addressed to me personally. I think every Member of this House knows that last year I could not be here.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman ought to know that the gentleman from Tennessee did not refer to him. In the absence of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Sims], permit me to suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that his statement is entirely unnecessary, and he is too sensitive. The gentleman from Tennessee carefully stated that he referred to absence on account of important business, and the gentleman from Tennessee explained to me that he did not wish the gentleman from Indiana to think his remarks were personal to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I take it for granted that they were not personal.

Mr. MANN. And I think the Members of the House under-

Mr. COX of Indiana. I want to take this occasion here to say that I have never, during the six years I have served in this House, asked to be excused on account of important business. Only one business has ever kept me away from this House, and I do not care anything about discussing that.

I desire to reply to what my friend from Illinois, who said a moment ago when the other amendment was up, about our not being able to bring our families here if either of these amendments should obtain, without paying their expenses out of our own pocket. The people in our districts do not vote for the members of our families, but they voted for us, and while I am in thorough accord with the gentleman from Illinois in that every Member of Congress, if it be within his power, should bring his family here, yet I do not believe that the family should be brought here at the expense of the people of this country.

I desire to enlarge a little on the course that we have pursued in this House. I do not understand how a Member of Congress can justify himself in voting against this amendment when he stood in this caucus and voted against appropriating one dollar to pay the little employees of this House an extra month's salary, because, forsooth, they have never been allowed mileage. I always understood that during the time that the Republican Party had control of this House the month's salary was allowed to the employees of the House to compensate them because of the fact they were not allowed mileage and in a measure to equalize and justify the mileage which the Members of Congress appropriated to themselves. I am not quarreling about that. In my candid judgment the position assumed by that side of the House was much more equitable and just than the position which this side of the House is assuming to-day. I believe that the country thoroughly approved the course which our party adopted in cutting out that extra month's salary allowed to the employees. I think that the country believes that the employee who wanted the job and knew exactly what the pay was before he took it was perfectly willing to pay his traveling expenses here to assume the job with the burden it carried. I think the country is in accord with us upon the theory that we did right in cutting it out. We give to ourselves 20 cents a mile. Is it right, is it just, is it equitable, are we dealing with our own employees upon a just basis? I appeal to the Members upon this side of the House. I believe, as I said a while ago, that the entire traveling allowance for all Government employees should be put upon an actual cost basis, or else wipe it all out. It is not alone to us that this applies, but it should apply to various other branches of the Government, and if we on this side of the House are in good faith trying to work out economies along this line, we can save the country approximately $1,000,000 a year; but can we do it? Can we afford to take from the Army officers of this country their 7 cents a mile unless we take out ours? Can we afford to put the Army officers of this country upon an actual travel pay unless we put ourselves upon that basis?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it

On a division (demanded by Mr. Cox of Indiana) there were-ayes 18, noes 40.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred Members are present, and there is a quorum in the committee.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment: After the words "one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars" insert.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That not in excess of 10 cents a mile by nearest route be allowed for mileage in any event for one trip to or from Washington for each Member during a session of Congress.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Chairman, it is evident from the vote of the committee just had on the two amendments offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] that the temper of the committee is not such as to reduce the mileage of Members and Senators to the actual expenses of travel. I supported both amendments offered by the gentleman from Indiana and now offer this amendment as a fair, reasonable compromise and concession in the matter if it should be the disposition of the committee to reduce the present 20-cent mileage. It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that 10 cents a mile each way, cutting half in two the present mileage, is fair, and will allow a Member who may desire to bring his wife and an additional member of his family actual traveling expenses, and at the same time extracts from the existing law that phase that the public can not fully comprehend, which is, Why is it under the name of mileage 20 cents a mile each way should be allowed a Member of Congress for railroad fare, when 2 cents is the usual rate? I favor this amendment for the sake of the policy that it involves rather than the amount of money it saves. No great sum, viewed from the standpoint of appropriations for the support of the Government, will be saved if this amendment is adopted, or if the amendments of the gentleman from Indiana were adopted, but when we deal with what is nominally an allowance for our expenses in coming to and from Washington it seems to me that we might by adopting this amendment occupy a ground that would be better comprehended by the public and appropriate a sum adequate for our expenses where our families are not unusually large. I trust that the committee may give to this amendment favorable consideration. Viewing the entire mileage proposition in its present light and recognizing that session after session this question of 20 cents a mile each way for a Member of Congress from his home arises, and it will continue to arise, we may well adopt 10 cents for traveling expenses instead of the 20 cents.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. FOWLER. I ask for an extension of his time for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to know why the gentleman did not include Senators in his amendment as well as Members of the

Mr. RODDENBERY. The Senate provision has already been passed and that of Representatives just reached. If the House should place this limitation now upon the mileage of Members, as a matter of course the limitation could be placed by recurrence to the Senate provision. I have no objection to its being placed in at this time, if such amendment be offered. I propose this amendment with no personal element involved. When I come on to Washington with my crowd I bring a wife and four other passengers who pay full fare, and in the course of a year or two will have another one paying full fare. As a general policy, however, it seems to me wise and right to at least cut the present allowance for travel from 20 cents a mile to 10 cents. Therefore the pending amendment is addressed to the judgment of Members.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes had it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. Roddenbery) there wereayes 16, noes 51.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That hereafter not more than 5 cents a mile shall be paid to Members of Congress, Delegates, and Resident Commissioners of Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands, for one trip in traveling from their homes to Washington City and return, traveling by the usual and ordinary route of travel.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox].

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 48. So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD on this subject. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I simply would like to ask the gentleman whether in extending his remarks in the Record it is his intention to represent the Members of Congress outside of those who agree with him as a kind of crook, trying to grab money out of the Treasury without being entitled to it; whether he expects to show in his remarks that his associates in Congress are far beneath him on the question of honesty and honor?

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I am astonished at the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not more astonished at me than I have been at him this afternoon.

Mr. COX of Indiana. He has certainly never found anything inserted in the RECORD yet which I have put in by unanimous consent with which he could find any criticism whatever.

Mr. MANN. I frankly say that I never have. Mr. COX of Indiana. And I frankly say that I would not, under leave to print, print that which I would not say on the floor of this House in the presence of every man here.

Mr. MANN. I have no objection to the gentleman stating facts as long as he does not impugn the motives of Members of Congress, and there is a great temptation to do it, I have noticed, from gentlemen who have made this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record on this subject. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Clerk: Clerk of the House of Representatives, including compensation as disbursing officer of the contingent fund, $6,500; hire of horse and wagon for use of the Clerk's office, $900, or so much thereof as may be necessary; Chief Clerk, $4,500; Journal clerk, and two reading clerks, at $4,000 cach; disbursing clerk, $3,400; tally clerk, $3,300; file clerk, $3,250; enrolling clerk, $3,000; chief bill clerk, $3,300; assistant to Chief Clerk, and assistant enrolling clerk, at $2,500 each; stasistant disbursing clerk, $2,400; stationery clerk, $2,200; librarian, $2,100; assistant file clerk, $1,900; two assistant librarians, and one clerk, at $1,800 each; three clerks, at $1,680 each; bookkeeper, and assistant in disbursing office, at $1,600 each; four assistants to chief bill clerk, at $1,500 each; stenographer to Clerk, $1,400; locksmith, who shall be skilled in his trade, $1,300; messenger in Chief Clerk's office, and assistant in stationery room, at $1,200 each; messenger in file room, messenger in disbursing office, and assistant in thouse library, at $1,100 each; stenographer to chief bill clerk, $1,000; three telephone operators, at $900 each; three telephone session operators, at $75 per month each from December 1, 1913, to June 30, 1914; telephone operator, $900; for services of a substitute telephone operator when required, at $2.50 per fay, $200; two laborers in the bathroom, at $900 each; two laborers, and page in enrolling room, at $720 each; allowance to Chief Clerk for stenographic and typewriter services, $1,000; in all, $92,825.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to this paragraph. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee wherein the $575 is for which is proposed in this paragraph more than was appropriated for the same purpose in the bill during the last session.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. This bill provided for some people who were paid for the session only, and the bill that was passed last year provided for the short term of Congress, from December to March, and this bill provides for the long session.

Mr. FOWLER. Does it come in the item of three telephone session operators, at $75 a month each, from December 1, 1913, to June 30, 1914? I compared it carefully with the law passed at last session, and I could not find where the discrepancy came in unless it comes in with the item I have referred to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We have not changed any rate of salary, and have not provided for anybody who is not provided for by law.

Mr. FOWLER. The bill last year provided for $92,250. Now this provides for $92,825. I have compared it carefully, and I have been unable to detect wherein the amounts for the several items in this bill differ from those in the law of last session.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman can understand very well that the session employees who are paid from December to March would not get as much as the session employees who are paid from the 1st of December to the following July

Mr. FOWLER. They are only for the telephone operators who are so employed?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is all. Mr. FOWLER. And it must appear in that item?

Mr. MANN. That is what it is. That is the amount of money. Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 5 on page 12, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAR-ETT] asks unanimous consent to return to line 5, page 12, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What is the amendment, Mr. Chairman? I reserve the right to object. I want to know what it is.

Mr. GARRETT. I said it was for the purpose of offering an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 5, add:

"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in the payment of any salary to any Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner for any time prior to the filing of his certificate of election with the Clerk of the House of Representatives."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I can not consent to go back in the bill.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment, while I explain exactly what it is? The amendment may not be clear.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from South Carolina reserve his objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I reserve it.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the amendment is this: I understand that it is now the law, where a vacancy occurs, by death or otherwise, from a district and that vacancy is filled by an election held some time subsequent, no matter how long, that when the Member so elected to fill the vacancy takes his seat as a Member of the House he draws the salary from the date of the death of his predecessor. Now, Mr. Chairman, that is the law, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no such law.

Mr. GARRETT. Has it not been the practice? Mr. FITZGERALD. The practice has been that when a Member is elected to fill a vacancy the compensation has accumulated. Nobody has ever discovered any law authorizing it, and in some instances Members have declined to draw the money.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman from Tennessee explain what would happen under the gentleman's provision if some one is seated by the House? He does not file any certificate of election. Would he not be entitled to any pay?

Mr. GARRETT. Oh, of course the gentleman knows my amendment does not contemplate that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's amendment covers it, whether it contemplates it or not. I have just read the gentleman's amendment. It not only covers that, but it would also cover any time until the certificate of election is filed.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course I did not have that in mind. Mr. MANN. That is the reason why I called the gentleman's attention to it.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest that the gentleman from Tennessee be permitted to make his statement about it.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, if it be, then, the practice and not the law, then the law and not the practice should prevail. It has at least been a custom long continued in the House, and no reflection, of course, is intended by me on any Member who has taken the salary, because it is the custom. But, Mr. Chairman, there is no reason for, there is no equity in, the payment, by custom or by law, of a salary that accumulates before a man ever takes his seat in this House or before he is even elected.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, would not the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Supposing the Member, as was the case in the last Congress, was unseated in the House and the contestant was sworn in. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to have the contestant receive the pay only from the time he was sworn in?

Mr. GARRETT. No; I think in equity the contestant ought to draw the salary.

Mr. MANN. What difference is there between them? The contestee has been serving, and has been receiving the pay. Why should the contestant be paid if he was not serving, was not here, had nothing to do, and rendered no service?

Mr. GARRETT. That, of course, was not the fault of the contestant. There is an equity there. I think the gentleman recognizes a decided difference in the equity between the case I have presented and the case he presents. Does the gentleman from South Carolina object to returning to that point in the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the discussion that is going on between the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] shows that it is a matter that ought to be referred to some committee having jurisdiction. I do not want to be discourteous, but I can not consent to go back in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina objects. The Clerk will read.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, line 16, after the word "cach," strike out the semi-colon and insert the following: "Provided, That the bathroom shall remain open during the sessions of Congress until 7 o'clock at night."

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that that is

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We have passed the paragraph.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That makes no difference. It is legislation anyway, and subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that this amendment is legislation.

Mr. LAFFERTY. If the gentleman will reserve his point of

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, no; it is a matter that ought not to be in this bill at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clerks, messengers, and janitors to the following committees: Accounts—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,800, janitor $1,000; Agriculture—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,800, janitor $1,000; Appropriations—clerk $4,000, and $1,000 additional while the office is held by the present incumbent, assistant clerk and stenographer $2,500, assistant clerk $1,900, janitor $1,000; Banking and Currency—clerk $2,000, assistant clerk $1,200, janitor $720; Census—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Claims—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,200, janitor $720; Coinage, Weights, and Measures—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; District of Columbia—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,800, janitor $720; Elections No. 1—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Elections No. 3—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Indian Affairs—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,800, janitor $720; Indian Affairs—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,800, janitor $720; Indian Affairs—clerk $2,500, assistant clerk $1,500, janitor $720; Indian Affairs—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Interstate and Foreign Commerce—clerk $2,500, additional clerk $2,000, janitor $1,000; Irrigation of Arid Lands—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Indian Affairs—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Indian $720; Indian Affairs—clerk $2,000, janitor $720; Indian $72

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do so for the purpose of calling the attention of Members of the House to the amendment I offered a while ago, which was ruled out on a point of order.

The Government has expended thousands of dollars to provide a bathroom in the House Office Building. The bathtubs, towels, and everything have been provided at Government ex-This bill carries an appropriation of $1,800 to employ two colored gentlemen over there to look after the establishment, but they close up at 6 o'clock sharp every evening. If any Member of this House desires to go over there after adjournment this evening to take a bath, he will be unable to do so. There is no reason why a mandatory provision should not be put in this bill requiring that the bathroom shall remain open till 7 o'clock p. m.

Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. LAFFERTY. Yes. Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman from Oregon think these two colored gentlemen who work all day should work all night as well?

Mr. LAFFERTY. I contend that no man should work more than eight hours a day at any occupation, but there are two of these colored gentlemen, and there is no reason why one of them should not work part of the day and the other one the other part.

Mr. FITZGERALD. They are both busy giving baths to Members during the daytime.

Mr. LAFFERTY. One of these gentlemen is a masseur and the other is a corn doctor, and they ply their occupations during the daytime, receiving tips from each individual whom they wait upon, and incidentally they perform the services for which they receive $900 a year each. For that reason I say they should be required to devote their services to the Government of the United States.

I would not have voted in the first place to put a bathroom in the House Office Building for the use of Members of the House of Representatives, but as long as it is there, I say these gentlemen, who are serving the Government, should be required to stay there at least until the hour the House usually adjourns. But I do not go that far in my amendment. I only require that they wait there until 7 o'clock.

Mr. MANN. There are plenty of places in hotels and elsewhere where bathrooms are open all night.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is a commission, a superintendent, and a custodian in charge of that building. Any complaint which the gentleman may have as to the hours of labor of the various gentlemenly employees in the building could properly be presented to them. I do not think it makes much difference in the gentleman's attitude to assert that he would not have voted to put a bathroom in the building, but that as long as it was put in before he came to Congress he is perfectly willing to avail himself of the facilities afforded, not only in the day time, which seems to be sufficient to satisfy everybody else, but even in the unseemly hours of the night.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, some few years ago I stopped at a large and fashionable hotel in Richmond, Va., where in each bedroom there was posted on the wall a notice giving the rates charged for the use of the room and cautioning guests to put their valuables in the safe, and below that there was this:

N. B .- Massage treatment on the office floor.

I have no doubt that in the gentleman's hotel he can get massage either on the office floor or elsewhere, and can also take a bath; or it would perhaps obviate the difficulty if he would obtain permission of the House to absent himself while the House is in session and take a bath over here in the daytime. It seems to me it is unnecessary to make these colored men work more than 8 or 10 hours a day to accommodate Members who want to take a bath at night.

Mr. LAFFERTY. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is going out of Congress, and I do not think he has taken a bath very often while he has been here.

Mr. OLMSTED. I have never taken one at the expense of the public, here or elsewhere.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For nine clerks to committees, at $6 each per day during the session, $11,340.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 16, line 9, strike out $11,340 and insert in lieu thereof $11,448.

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Doorkeeper: Doorkeeper, $5,000; hire of horses and wagons and repairs of same, $1,200, or so much thereof as may be necessary; special employee, John T. Chancey, $1,800; special employee, $1,500; superintendent of reporters' gallery, $1,400; janitor, $1,500; 16 messengers at $1,180 each; 14 messengers on the soldiers' roll, at $1,200 each; 15 laborers, at $720 each; laborer in the water-closet, $720; laborer, $680; 2 laborers, known as cloakroom men, at $840 each; 8 laborers, known as cloakroom men, at $840 each; 8 laborers, known as cloakroom men, at $600; superintendent of folding room, $2,500; foreman, $1,800; 3 clerks, at $1,600 each; messenger, $1,200; janitor, $720; laborer, $720; 32 folders, at $900 each; 2 drivers, at $840 each; 2 chief pages, at $1,200 each; 2 messengers in charge of telephones (one for the minority), at $1,200 each; 2d frivers, at $840 each; 2 chief pages, at $1,200 each; 2 messengers in charge of telephones (one for the minority), at $1,200 each; 2d pages, press-gallery page, and 10 pages for duty at the entrances to the Hall of the House, at $2,500 per day each, $23,150; superintendent of document room, $2,900; assistant superintendent, $2,100; clerk, $1,700; assistant clerk, $1,600; assistants—7 at $1,280 each, one at $1,100; janitor, $920; messenger to press room, $1,000; in all, $158,250.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on line 10, page 17, two messengers in charge of telephones. The last bill contained but one.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There is no increase in the force.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There have always been two messengers.

Mr. FOWLER. The appropriation for this same item was $13,800 in last year's bill. Now it is $23,150. What is the necessity for the increase?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is due to the fact that we are now appropriating for the long session of Congress, while in the last bill we appropriated for the short session.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it all due to that?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It is all due to that. have not provided for a single person in the House force that has not been provided for by law. We have created no new offices and have increased no salary. Any differences that may appear in the paragraphs are caused by people being transferred from one paragraph to another, or from one bill to another, and from the fact that this is appropriating for the long session instead of the short. There is no change in the law as to the number of offices or rate of compensation.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, with that explanation, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 17, in line 14, strike out "$23,150" and insert "$24,380," In line 18, strike out "$158,250" and insert in lieu thereof "$159,480."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerk to the conference minority of the House of Representatives, $2,000; assistant clerk, $1,200; janitor, $1,000; in all, $4,200. Said clerk, assistant clerk, and janitor to be appointed by the chairman of the conference minority.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For messenger in the minority caucus room, $1,200; and for messenger in the majority caucus room, $1,200.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, these two places are carried in the deficiency bill of last year, and it was desired that all of the employees of the House should be provided for in this bill, and so they are brought forward from another appropriation bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I inquire if the House did not pass a resolution providing for their continuation to June, 1913?

Mr. MANN. There was a resolution passed first by the House, and then it was put in the deficiency bill in conformity with the resolution.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I am familiar with the matter. In the last session the request was made of the Committee on Appropriations to carry these two messengers as they had been provided at other times. No resolution had been adopted by the House upon the report of the Committee on Ac-The Committee on Appropriations thought that was the authority needed to give the Committee on Appropriations authority to provide for the messengers in the legislative bill. Subsequently the Committee on Accounts reported a resolution providing for these messengers, and when the deficiency bill was before the House provision was made for them in accordance with the resolution.

Mr. BARTLETT. My recollection from the Record is that the resolution in the deficiency bill carried them to the 1st of July, 1913, and the statement was made, as I recall, that that was the intention only to provide for them to that time. This provides for them from the 1st of July, 1913, to the 1st of July, This 1914.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Under repeated rulings, once an employee has been authorized by resolution of the Committee on Accounts it is in order to carry him on the legislative bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. I want to say to the gentleman that I have made no point of order against this.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I understand; I am explaining the reason for this action. At the last session the committee declined to carry them because there had been no resolution. They were originally put in the bill by the Senate.

Mr. BARTLETT. That is correct.

Mr. FITZGERALD. When the Committee on Appropriations made up the bill for the current year, as there had been no resolution adopted by the House, the committee refused to carry these messengers. Subsequently the Committee on Accounts took the matter up and the House adopted the resolution and they were carried in the deficiency bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think this appropriation should be made, but it seems to me there ought to be a provision made as to the method of the appointment of these messengers, Would there be any objection to providing in the bill directly that they shall be appointed by the respective whips of the two These messergers, while they are called messengers to the caucus rooms, have been and are intended to be, so I understand, messengers for the two whips of the two sides of the The whips need the men to help do the work in getting Members here and in keeping Members advised as to what is going on in the House. It seems to me the whips ought to make these appointments.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. We understand that these employees are to aid the whips of the respective sides of the House. I supposed they would make the appointments. I have no objection to an amendment that will so provide.

Mr. MANN. In the resolution which was first passed in the deficiency appropriation bill, the men were specifically named. That is all right as far as it goes, because they were named by the two whips of the two sides of the House, but the whips will be different in the next Congress, possibly-certainly, on this side. The whip on this side of the House is elected by the caucus, and I suppose that is true of the gentleman's side of the

Mr. BARTLETT. Yes.

Mr. MANN. So that when they are elected, it seems to me, they ought to have the naming of the men who are to do the work under them. I have prepared an amendment putting it all in one item:

To continue the employment of messengers in the majority and minority caucus rooms, to be appointed by the minority and majority whips, respectively, at $1,200 each; in all, $2,400.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have no objection to that, and I will withdraw the amendment that I have and offer that one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina offers the following amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 3, page 19, insert:
"To continue the employment of messengers in the majority and minority caucus rooms, to be appointed by the majority and minority whips, respectively, at $1,200 each; in all, $2,400.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order gainst that. There is a method of appointing employees in against that. this House, which was adopted at the beginning of the Sixtysecond Congress and is in force now, whereby the employees of the House are selected, and a committee for that purpose is now in existence.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman misunderstands. This is not a change of the present practice. These two mes sengers are authorized and provided for and have practically been appointed by the two whips, as designated here.

Mr. FOWLER. That may be true now, and may have been so in the past

Mr. FITZGERALD. They were at the time of the arrangement of which the gentleman speaks. Mr. FOWLER. I do not so understand it. I do not understand that there was any exception made whatever. If you lay down the bars in the case of these two messengers, you may just as well lay down the bars in every other sense of the word and let it all go back to the Speaker of the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken. There is only one place that might be affected. The minority employees were never selected by any committee of the majority. One of these is for the minority caucus room and the other is for the majority caucus room. At the time the Democratic caucus adopted the rule appointing a patronage committee this was not one of the places that was distributed as patronage in that way. The occupant was selected by the Democratic whip.

Mr. FOWLER. Is there any reason why these employees should be selected different from other employees?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes; there is.

Mr. FOWLER. And was there any exception made at the time of our caucus rule? Mr. FITZGERALD. T

There is a reason for it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague permit an interruption for a moment?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. This would not affect the selection of this employee by the Democratic caucus or by the committee on patronage appointed by the Democratic caucus. This is only a method, so far as the House is concerned. The patronage committee of the Democratic caucus is not a committee recognized by the House itself. For instance, we provide in this bill for offices under the Doorkeeper. The Doorkeeper makes the appointments as far as the House is concerned. The Postmaster makes his appointments so far as the House is concerned, as does the Clerk of the House and the Sergeant at Arms; but the Democratic patronage committee, as far as those officials are concerned, selects for them the officials, and that committee can do the same thing about this. This provision would not affect that at all if the caucus desires it to be included in the appointments to be made by the patronage committee.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman is mistaken about this.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not so understand it. If we make an exception in one case, you then lay down the bars and make an exception all along the line.

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman permit?
Mr. FOWLER. Certainly.
Mr. GARRETT. I call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the rules of the House provide that these various officials under the Sergeant at Arms, the Clerk, the Doorkeeper, the Postmaster, shall be appointed by those respective officers, and theoretically they are so appointed. The method by which they are chosen now is an unofficial method, with no regular or appointing force as far as the law is concerned or as far as the rules of the House are concerned.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Unless the appointment of these officials is vested in some one, if a vacancy occur no one has authority to place his successor on the pay roll, so as to get any money, unless the Committee on Accounts reports a resolution.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, if these two messengers are to be appointed in a different way from that which was adopted by the majority of the House at the beginning of this Congress, then I repeat that you might just as well do away with the committee which was appointed to distribute the patronage in this

Mr. MANN. I can assure my colleague there is no such intention on my part, and I do not think the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina would affect the patronage committee at all.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not complaining at anyone for offering such a resolution. I am only complaining because of the fact that in my opinion such a precedent as contemplated by this amendment might become an entering wedge to destroy our method of selecting the patronage by a committee instead of leaving it to the Speaker.

Mr. MANN. Unless I am misinformed about it, the chairmen of some of the committees who had patronage thought the committee did not share in the other patronage in the House. Now, the bill specifically provides that the chairman shall appoint certain clerks and janitors. It is very easy for the Democratic caucus to provide that these messengers, if appointed, shall be charged to the Democratic whip as part of the patronage of the Democratic side of the House.

Mr. FOWLER. Then, if that is true, might not all the patronage of the House be taken away from the committee on patronage by virtue of bills passed by the House?

Mr. MANN. I do not think so. I do not think it has anything to do with that. The reason I put in this provision is that without it there is no authority for anybody to appoint these messengers. Heretofore we named them specifically, but nobody wants to name now the messengers for the whips, be-cause no one knows who the whips will be until the new caucus Without that there is no provision for anybody to meets. appoint them.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not provide for the place and leave the appointing of these messengers to the future Congress, the Sixty-third?

Mr. MANN. Well, that requires the preparation of an additional resolution, and so forth, brought before the House, and is a minutia matter. The Democratic caucus can control the question when you settle in the next House, as you will have to, the question of patronage, and consider this as part of the patronage of the House as they consider every other place, and taking into consideration all the other places, they take that into consideration.

Mr. FOWLER. I concede that the House might continue these two servants in the House, but I do not concede that we ought to pass a law here prohibiting the majority of the House from adopting a method of selecting employees of the House as was fixed at the beginning of the Sixty-second Congress.

Mr. MANN. My colleague will recall, of course, that was done by the Democratic caucus; that is, in the caucus you arranged and appointed a patronage committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, what became of my point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not recall the gentleman made one.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to withdraw the point of order to relieve the situation.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Referring to the matter concerning which I offered or proposed to offer an amendment a few moments ago, I wish to say just a few words. I stated when I proposed the amendment that I was under the impression that the law provides that where a vacancy occurred that the person elected to fill that vacancy drew the salary of a Member from the time that the salary of his predecessor ceased. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] was under the impression that it was not a provision of law, but was simply a custom, and, not being sure of my own ground at the time, I readily accepted the statement of the gentleman from New York. But I have since examined it, and, as a matter of interest here, I will say that section 51 of the Revised Statutes makes this provision:

Whenever a vacancy occurs in either House of Congress, by death or otherwise of any Member or Delegate elected or appointed thereto, after the commencement of Congress to which he has been elected or appointed, the person elected or appointed to fill it shall be compensated and paid from the time that the compensation of his predecessor ceased.

So it seems unquestionably, Mr. Chairman, that there is a statute providing for it. But the statute is wrong in principle. It is not based on any equity or any policy of right, and I hope to prepare an amendment-

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What is the date of the original enactment?

Mr. GARRETT. The date of the enactment is July 16, 1862. Now, there has been a case upon which there was a report in the Fifty-ninth Congress, what is known as the Pollard case, in which the Committee on the Judiciary dealt with the ques-That committee held that Representative Pollard was not entitled to the salary; but that occurred in this way: Mr. Burkett, who was a Member of the Fifty-eighth Congress, reelected to the Fifty-ninth Congress, but before the expiration of the Fifty-eighth Congress he was elected to the Senate, and prior to March 4, 1905, when his term in the Fifty-eighth Congress expired, he resigned, the resignation to take effect on the 4th of March.

Mr. Pollard was elected at a special election to succeed him, and when he became a Member of the House in the Fifty-ninth Congress, some months later, the Sergeant at Arms paid to him-and he was, I suppose, of the opinion that under the law he was entitled to receive it-some $1,800. Becoming convinced later that he was not entitled to receive it, he sought to repay it, and a bill was introduced to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to accept it. The matter was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, and upon investigation they reported that under the peculiar circumstances of that case no vacancy really occurred in the Fifty-ninth Congress by reason of the resignation of Mr. Burkett, and that consequently this statute did not apply. That is one case of which I know that has been passed on by a committee of the House. I repeat that this statute is not right.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman from Tennessee will recall that the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to accept the money and pay it into the Treasury, made a report that he was entitled to it.

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; I think the gentleman is right about that. But to return, there is not equity in that statute. I hope before this bill is finally passed upon to prepare an amendment and prevail upon my friend from South Carolina [Mr. Johnson] to return to the paragraph. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. MANN. There was nothing before the House before, but hope the gentleman from South Carolina will now bring before the committee a motion to rise.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, in view of the lateness of the hour, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Garner, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 26680the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill-and had come to no resolution thereon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, reference heretofore made of House Documents Nos. 1029, 1040, 1042, and Senate Document Nos. 959 was vacated, and the said documents referred to the committee on Appropriations.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. WORKS. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill, if this is the proper occasion.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will permit me to make a statement

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I desire to say that the amendments reported by the committee have now been acted upon by the Senate and the bill is open to amendments which may be offered not coming from the committee. If the Senator from California will permit me, in this connection I wish to state the position of the committee with reference to such amendments as may now be offered in the open Senate.

There are certain claims, such, for instance, as claims for overtime in the navy yards, that are practically all of one character. The legal questions connected with them have been absolutely settled by the court, and the only question is the number of hours of overtime and the rate of wages. If a case which comes within that class that has not been reported should be offered here, it would be so simple that there would be no questions of facts to discuss in relation to it, and I do not think that the committee would be averse to accepting an amendment that might include an additional claim of that character.

The same is true with reference to what are known as the longevity claims. They are all exactly the same and have been settled by the decisions. An amendment that should propose the insertion of an additional claim of that kind could involve no questions of fact, and I do not think it would open up a discussion.

But outside of those particular cases the offering of amendments without the committee having had an opportunity to investigate the claims or the offering of amendments which the committee has investigated and for reasons satisfactory to it have declined to put into the bill will necessarily meet with the opposition of the committee.

Mr. OVERMAN. May I ask the Senator a question? Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly. Mr. OVERMAN. I appreciate what the Senator says; am on the committee with him; but I desire to ask what his policy will be as to those claims where the court findings have come in since the committee acted which are on a par with claims we have already included in the bill. Suppose that since the bill was prepared court findings should have come in on the same kind and class of claims?

Mr. CRAWFORD. As I have just stated, should they be claims in relation to overtime in the navy yards or longevity—
Mr. OVERMAN. I understood what the Senator said as to those, but there are church claims. We have included certain kinds of church claims. According to a certain rule they have been included. Suppose a case comes in here to-day from the Court of Claims that is exactly on all fours with the church claims which are included in the bill, why should such claims be objected to if they are on all fours with every church claim in the bill?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The committee have declined to put in the bill a great many claims that are for the use and occupation of churches, and they have declined to put in the bill some claims for the destruction of churches where that destruction was an act of war.

Each of these cases necessarily rests upon a particular state! facts. Where the committee have had no opportunity as a of facts. committee to investigate the findings of the court and analyze them or pass upon them, I do not think it would be a good way to legislate claims into the bill, to act upon those amendments here for the first time in the Senate, without their having gone to the committee at all. I should feel that it would be my duty to insist that they should be considered by the committee,

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator knows, as I know, under what rule the committee acted, and I agreed to it for the time being, hoping to get some legislation. But suppose the chairman of the committee, after reading the court findings, concludes that these church claims fall within the class under the rule we adopted, will not the Senator agree to accept them?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator from North Carolina is imposing almost too much work upon the chairman of the committee at a time when this long bill, with several thousand them for the purpose of ascertaining whether they fall on this side or that side of the rule which the committee adopted.

Mr. OVERMAN. I know the Senator so well that I know he can read five lines of a court finding and determine within a minute whether or not it falls within the rule we adopted.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say to the Senator I do not think it would be quite fair to the full committee for the chairman to take that responsibility.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not see why he should not take that responsibility with reference to those claims as well as any other claims.

Mr. BAILEY. Let the Senate take the responsibility.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I am perfectly willing that that should be done. Of course I could not have any objection to that, but the Senator was asking the chairman to accept the amendments.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course the Senator would have a good deal to say about it, because the Senate would naturally and properly attach great weight to what the chairman of the committee would say. I can understand how the chairman would not feel authorized, speaking as chairman of the committee, to say that he would consent to that, but I can also understand that the chairman of the committee would not feel obliged to make any special resistance against an amendment of that kind.

I rose, however, for the purpose of suggesting this kind of a case to the Senator. Suppose it be a case where there is no question about the facts, and the findings of the Court of Claims filed since the bill was reported decide that a certain person is entitled to payment. To make it plain by illustration, the bill carries pay for certain claims for longevity pay. Now, suppose that a case identical with those provided for should have been reported since the bill was prepared. Surely there could be no possible reason for excluding that claim.

Mr. CRAWFORD. If the Senator will permit me, I have already stated with reference to overtime claims in the navy yards and longevity claims that they are so simple and the rule is so well settled that with those two classes, and those only, I feel that there would be little risk-in fact, none-in admitting those claims if they have been found by the Court of Claims.

Mr. BAILEY. I heard the Senator's statement about the overtime claims, but I did not hear it about the longevity claims. Mr. CRAWFORD. It included the longevity claims.

Mr. BAILEY. That covers an amendment that I have to pre-

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator can see, I think, with reference to the question whether or not a church was occupied, with the great variety of facts and findings that are passed upon, that that would be a very different case from a longevity claim or a claim for overtime at a navy yard.

Mr. BAILEY. Where the facts might be material, I agree to that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is just the distinction.

Now, Mr. President, the bill, so far as the amendments proposed by the Senate committee are concerned, has been acted upon and it is open to amendment; but I sincerely hope that general amendments will not be offered to the bill on the floor of the Senate where they have not been acted upon by the committee.

I want to say to the Senate that the bill is a most difficult kind of a bill to deal with. It embraces a vast number of claims. We were a good many months going over the different items, and the door must be closed some time against the consideration of claims that are to go into this particular bill. If we open that door to the consideration of a vast number of amendments of all kinds and characters, I shall almost despair of the bill being passed at all, because of the great mass of details that will involve discussion in the Senate.

Mr. WORKS rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 268, after the word "cents," in line 8, it is proposed to insert:

To John Glanzmann, of Carson City, Ormsby County, in said State, $3,206.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I will ask to have inserted in the Record a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of John Glanzmann. I will ask the Secretary to read the findings of fact, and I should like also to have the entire communication inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so ordered, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

FINDINGS OF FACT.

FINDINGS OF FACT.

I. The claimant, John Glanzmann, is a citizen of the United States, residing at Carson City, Ormsby County, State of Nevada, and from August 1, 1892, until May 8, 1993, he was employed as a watchman-laborer in the United States customhouse and post-office building at Carson City, Nev., at a salary of $720 per annum. During the time he was so employed he worked 12 hours each day, not including Sundays and legal holidays.

II. In fixing the compensation and the number of assistant custodians, engineers, janitors, firemen, watchmen, and laborers necessary for the care and maintenance of public buildings belonging to the United States the Government officials charged with that duty took into consideration the locality in which they lived and the cost of living, the size of the building, the character and size of the plant the engineer would have to take charge of, and the mechanical equipment of the building, and fixed the yearly salary for such employees at what the work was worth without regard to the number of hours they might be required to labor.

III. The number of hours worked by claimant in excess of eight hours a day during the period from August 1, 1892, as set forth in Finding I, is 13,184; and his services for said hours, computed upon the basis of the salary he was receiving during said period, namely, 8720 per annum, would amount to $3,296.

IV. It does not appear that said claim was ever presented to any officer or department of the Government prior to its presentation to Congress and reference to this court as aforesaid.

The letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 522, Sixty-second Congress, second session.] JOHN GLANZMANN.

LETTER FROM THE ASSISTANT CLERK OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS, TRANS MITTING A COPY OF THE PINDINGS OF THE COURT IN THE CASE OF JOHN GLANZMANN AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

COURT OF CLAIMS, CLERK'S OFFICE, Washington, April 5, 1912.

Hon. James S. Sherman,

President of the Senate.

Sir: Pursuant to the order of the court, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the aforesaid cause, which case was referred to this court by resolution of the United States Senate under the act of March 3, 1887, known as the Tucker Act.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

JOEN RANDOLPH,

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

[Court of Claims of the United States. Congressional, No. 13805, sub-No. 5. John Glanzmann v. The United States.] STATEMENT OF CASE.

This is a claim for compensation of watchman-laborer employed under the Treasury Department for time alleged to have been worked in excess of eight hours per day.

On March 2, 1909, the Semate of the United States, by resolution, referred to the court, under the act of March 3, 1887, known as the Tucker Act, a bill in the following words:

"[S. 6903, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

"[S. 6903, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

"A bill for the relief of John L Conroy and others.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John L Conroy, of St Paul, Minn., and the other persons whose names appear on the memorial of John L Conroy and others, such amount as may by findings of fact by the Court of Claims under section 14 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1887, known as the Tucker Act, be awarded them, respectively, for work in excess of eight hours in each calendar day while employed in the care of public buildings of the United States at St. Paul, Minn., and elsewhere."

The claimant appeared and filed his petition in this court on June 17, 1908, in which he makes substantially the following allegations:

That he is a citizen of the United States and resides at Carson City, Nev.

That your petitioner is one of the persons named in the memorial referred to in said bill, and has a claim against the United States for compensation for time worked by him in excess of eight hours per day while employed at the United States public building at Carson City, Nev., as watchman-laborer.

That the act of August 1, 1892, prescribes in mandatory terms for the benefit of all laborers and mechanics employed by the Government eight hours of labor in any one calendar day as the limit for a day's work.

That your petitioner has been required, notwithstanding this pro-eight hours of labor in any one calendar day as the limit for a day's work.

That your petitioner has been required, notwithstanding this provision of law, to work 12 hours per day since the date of his employment, namely, August I, 1890, to May 8, 1993.

That the greater part of the force of laborers and mechanics employed in the care of buildings under the Treasury Department is worked on an eight-hour schedule, and that the rates of pay for all employees are fixed by the department uniformly in accordance with the character and grade of the employment without regard to the number of hours per day they will be required to work.

That the extra work rendered by your petitioner was necessary for the protection and care of the Government building and machinery, and was not work which the claimant could have been required to have performed had he refused.

That the amount of this claim for extra pay for this work is much less than the Government would have been required to expend to employ an additional laborer or mechanic to comply with the eight-hour law.

That the Treasury Department has paid some of the employees in the same branch of the service, performing exactly the same kind of work, additional compensation for the services rendered in excess of eight hours per day.

That by requiring your petitioner to work in excess of eight hours per day the General Government has taken from him the equivalent of property without compensation, and under circumstances which almost uniformly in other branches of the public service, either by regulation or order of the head of the department or by action of Congress, has been compensated by granting extra pay either at the rate of regular pay or at an increased rate for such extra time.

That the amount which would be sufficient to compensate your petitioner for the extra work so performed by him at the rate of his regular compensation is the sum of $3,296.

The case was brought to a hearing on the 6th day of December, 1909. Fred B. Rhodes, Esq., appeared for the claimant, and the Attorney General, by George M. Anderson, Esq., his assistant, and under his direction, appeared for the protection and defense of the interests of the United States.

The court, upon the evidence adduced, and after considering the arguments and briefs of counsel on both sides, makes the following FINDINGS OF FACT.

FINDINGS OF FACT.

I. The claimant, John Glanzmann, is a citizen of the United States, residing at Carson City, Ormsby County, State of Nevada, and from August 1, 1892, until May 8, 1903, he was employed as a watchman-laborer in the United States Customhouse and Post Office Building at Carson City, Nev., at a salary of $720 per annum. During the time he was so employed he worked 12 hours each day, not including Sundays and legal holidays.

II. In fixing the compensation and the number of assistant custodians, engineers, janitors, firemen, watchmen, and laborers necessary for the care and maintenance of public buildings belonging to the United States the Government officials charged with that duty took into consideration the locality in which they lived and the cost of living, the size of the building, the character and size of the plant the engineer would have to take charge of, and the mechanical equipment of the building, and fixed the yearly salary for such employees at what the work was worth without regard to the number of hours they might be required to labor.

III. The number of hours worked by claimant in excess of eight hours a day during the period from August 1, 1892, as set forth in Finding I, is 13,184; and his services for said hours, computed upon the basis of the salary he was receiving during said period, namely, $720 per annum, would amount to $3,296.

IV. It does not appear that said claim was ever presented to any officer or department of the Government prior to its presentation to Congress and reference to this court as aforesaid.

JOHN RANDOLPH, Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would ask the Senator from South Dakota whether he has any objection to this amendment?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nevada, if allowed, will establish a precedent under which the custodians and watchmen employed in Government buildings throughout the United States will be allowed overtime pay where they were on duty more than eight hours a day. There are a large number of claims of that kind. If we allow one of them, we should allow all. The committee declined to put any of that class of claims into the bill. The reason they did so was because of this finding, which is a finding that runs through every claim of that character and is made by the court in each and every case, where the court say:

by the court in each and every case, where the court say.

In fixing the compensation and the number of assistant custodians, engineers, janitors, firemen, watchmen, and laborers necessary for the care and maintenance of public buildings belonging to the United States the Government officials charged with that duty took into consideration the locality in which they lived and the cost of living, the size of the building, the character and size of the plant the engineer would have to take charge of, and the mechanical equipment of the building, and fixed the yearly salary for such employees at what the work was worth without regard to the number of hours they might be required to labor.

It is very apparent that it would be practically impossible to observe an eight-hour law with reference to this class of employees-custodians and watchmen-and the understanding, according to this finding, at the time they were employed was that their yearly salary was fixed at a rate which was adequate, considering the size and character of the building, the cost of living, the locality where they lived, and so forth; that all those matters were taken into consideration in fixing their yearly compensation, without regard to the number of hours they might be required to labor. In other words, the Court of Claims finds that these men have received ample compensation for their work, whether they work more than eight hours a day or not, and that in fixing their yearly compensation all those matters were taken into consideration.

The Senator knows that, so far as his personal claim is concerned, it was submitted to me and it was submitted to the committee some time ago; but to allow this claim would make it necessary to go back through this bill and put into it several thousand claims of custodians, watchmen, and men of that class, in face of the fact that the Court of Claims finds that the consideration per annum for their services was fixed for the purpose of making it adequate and taking into consideration that they would work more than eight hours a day. So the committee could not, in fairness to the other claimants and to this finding of the court, consent to the amendment.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would ask the Senator from South Dakota whether janitors and custodians of buildings are now required to work more than eight hours a day in the public

Mr. CRAWFORD. They are whenever the exigencies of the service appear to require it. Whether or not it is done as a general rule, I am not advised.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator will observe that this is a general rule, that the Court of Claims find that during this entire period this man worked 12 hours a day instead of 8 hours

Mr. CRAWFORD. And I think it is quite universal in the case of custodians that they work more than eight hours a day.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator is not informed as to the practice?

Mr. CRAWFORD. They are simply custodians; and it is impossible, under the conditions, to observe a hard and fast eight-hour rule with reference to them; and their compensation, the court finds, is fixed, having in view the fact that they are to work more than eight hours a day.

Mr. NEWLANDS. In view of the Senator's statement that the committee has had this class of claims under consideration and did not deem it advisable to present them in this bill, I can, perhaps, hardly hope for the favorable consideration of this amendment now. I will, however, ask the Senator whether this matter was fully argued before the committee by counsel for these various claimants?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the Committee on Claims, since I have been a member of it, has not given, and, so for as I know its history, it never has undertaken to give the counsel who represent claimants hearings before the committee. I think, if the Senator from Nevada was a member of the committee, he would soon realize how utterly impossible it would be to do a thing of that kind.

The archives of that committee are crowded with claims of all sorts and kinds, together with voluminous briefs and long The offices on the streets of Washington are crowded with attorneys whose chief occupation appears to be to hunt up and promote the collection of such claims, and they are on the trail, I will say to the Senator, more than eight hours a day. In the corridors of the Senate Office Building and elsewhere they not only seek interviews with the chairman, but they seek interviews with the members of the committee; and when they can not approach them they undertake to influence their clerks. If we were to undertake to open the hearings of that committee to argument by counsel upon these questions we never would be able to make a report of any kind. We have not granted such hearings, and I understand it has never been the practice of the committee to allow them. look over the briefs submitted to us; we look over the findings; we give careful consideration to the claims. We gave very careful consideration to this class of claims and came to the conclusion that in the face of that finding they should not be placed in this bill.

Mr. MASSEY. Mr. President, so far as the particular claim is concerned covered by the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. NEWLANDS], I desire to say that I know personally, and have known for many years personally, the claimant, and I do not believe he would be insisting in this body or before any body representing the Government of the United States upon the payment of a claim if it were not just.

I desire also at this time to state that, in determining the question of justice as between claimants and the Government of the United States, a matter of establishing or breaking a precedent, so far as I am individually concerned, will have but very little weight. I believe it is the duty of the Senate to break precedents whenever a just claim is presented against the Government of the United States, and that it is the duty of the Senate to establish precedents whenever it is necessary to establish just claims against the Government of the United States.

Out in our State we have not been asking much and we have gotten less, but we do insist that this is a just claim so far as the Government of the United States is concerned, and that this great Government of ours can not afford to treat this claimant, based upon precedent, otherwise than justly in the allowance of his claim.

I believe, Mr. President, that I am a member of the Committee on Claims, I want frankly to confess that I have never had an opportunity of meeting with that committee, and I know nothing of its burdens or the character of its labors. I believe, however, the committee have been actuated by a desire to segregate from the very many claims that are presented against the Government those which are fair and just and to award to just claimants that which is justly due them; but being personally acquainted with the man and the conditions under which this labor was performed, conditions different from those existing in every other State in the Union, I believe the Senate of the United States can not afford to reject the request for that consideration at the hands of Senators to which the claim is entitled. I join my colleague in asking that the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I observe that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] desired to be heard upon this matter, but I do not now see him upon the floor. I will state, Mr. President, that in view of the chairman's statement that the committee considered a large number of claims of this class, aggregating several thousand, and concluded to insert none of them in this bill, I do not feel like pressing the amendment to a vote, and I will withdraw it temporarily, with a view to consulting with any collection and I will be the consulting with the consulting w sulting with my colleague and with other Members of the Senate who have presented similar claims.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). The amendment is temporarily withdrawn.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President—
Mr. CRAWFORD. May I be allowed to make a statement to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.
Mr. CRAWFORD. I find from the report that there are 88 claimants whose claims are very similar to this, and the aggregate amount involved is $97,752.20. There are 88 claims of custodians, and in every one the court has found that in fixing their yearly compensation the Government took into consideration the character of their employment and the necessity of their working for a longer period than eight hours a day and fixed the compensation with that fact in view. We treated them all alike and left them out of the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. May I ask the Senator from Idaho whether he wishes to say anything upon this subject?

Mr. BORAH. I did not understand the Senator. Mr. NEWLANDS. I understood the Senator was claiming the attention of the Chair a few moments ago with a view of saying something regarding this bill.

Mr. BORAH. It was not in connection with this matter.
Mr. NEWLANDS. I will not withdraw the amendment, but will simply withhold it temporarily, in order to consult with my colleague in regard to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada

withholds the amendment.

Mr. GALLINGER. I submit a proposed amendment, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire submits an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I was entitled to the floor and yielded to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. Newlands], but I did not intend to open the door for all Senators to offer amendments. I have an amendment, and, if the Senator will allow me a moment, I think we can dispose of the amendment I am about to offer.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from California was entitled to the floor-I had no knowledge of that fact-I will allow my amendment to rest on the table for a moment.

Mr. WORKS. I offer the amendment which I send to the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The Secretary. On page 259, after line 25, it is proposed to insert:

To Edgar L. Swaine, administrator of the estate of Peter T. Swaine, deceased, of Los Angeles, $2,175.09.

To Oliver D. Greene, administrator of the estate of Oliver D. Greene, deceased, of Berkeley, $2,433.78.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, these are two of the longevity claims that have been adjudicated by the Court of Claims since the bill was reported. As I understand, under the statement of the chairman of the committee, these are amendments which should be allowed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has the Senator the reports from the Court of Claims on his desk?

Mr. WORKS. I have

Mr. CRAWFORD. Will the Senator hand them to me?

Mr. WORKS. Certainly.
Mr. CRAWFORD. If I find, as I have no doubt I shall, that the cases come within the rule, I will offer no objection.

Mr. LODGE. Let the findings be read.
Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask that they be read.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

FINDINGS OF FACT.

I. The claimant, Edgar L. Swaine, is a citizen of the United States, residing at Los Angeles, Cal., and is the administrator of the estate of Peter T. Swaine, deceased, who, during his lifetime, was an officer in the United States Army, having been appointed as a cadet at the United States Military Academy September 1, 1847. He graduated therefrom and was appointed second lieutenant July 1, 1852; first lieutenant, August 8, 1855; captain, May 14, 1861; major, December 29, 1865; lieutenant colonel, October 24, 1874.

II. Said decedent was paid his first longevity ration from July 1, 1857, and one additional ration for each five years subsequent thereto. Under the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Watson (130 U. S., 80) said decedent would be entitled to additional allowances, as reported by the Auditor for the War Department, amounting to $2,200.29, from which would be deducted overpayments amounting to $25.20, leaving a balance of $2,175.09.

III. The claim was presented to the accounting officers of the Treasury and was disallowed December 27, 1890.

Except as above stated the claim was never presented to any officer or department of the Government prior to its presentation to Congress and reference to the court as hereinbefore set forth.

CONCLUSION.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact the court concludes that the claim herein, not having been filed for prosecution before any court within six years from the time it accrued, is barred.

The claim is an equitable one against the United States in so far as they received the benefit of the services of said decedent while a cadet at the Military Academy, which service the Supreme Court decided in the case of United States v. Watson (130 U. S., 80) was service in the ARCHIBALD HOPKINS, Chief Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. CRAWFORD. All these claims are exactly of that character. One of the auditors of the War Department rejected a number of these claims on the ground that the officers were not entitled to recover for the period during which the young men were cadets at West Point. The question was carried to the United States Supreme Court, and it held that they were entitled for that period.

Now the claims are presented under that decision, and the auditor allows them, with the exception of those which had been presented to the prior auditor and rejected by him. They refuse to allow them, on the ground that it is not their policy to reverse the decision of one of the prior officers. That is the technical point which is involved.

If we allow any of them, this is just as good as the rest. That is all there is to it.

Mr. WORKS. Let me ask the Senator from South Dakota whether the claims which have already been allowed and included in the bill are of similar kind. Mr. CRAWFORD. They are. I say, if we allow any of them these are the same as the rest. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WORKS. I ask that the findings of fact in the other case may be included in the Record. Only one of them was read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The findings of fact in the Greene case are as follows:

FINDINGS OF FACT.

I. Claimant's decedent was an officer in the United States Army, having been appointed a cadet at the United States Military Academy July 1, 1849. He graduated therefrom and was appointed second lieutenant, Third Artillery, July 1, 1854; promoted to be first lieutenant April 25, 1861, and captain and assistant adjutant general August 3, 1861; major and assistant adjutant general, July 17, 1862; lieutenant colonel and assistant adjutant general July 9, 1892.

II. In settlement of said decedent's account by the accounting officers of the Treasury, he has been paid first longevity ration from July 1, 1859, and one additional ration for each five years subsequent thereto, and in a settlement made November 17, 1890, said officers refused to count his service as a cadet at the Military Academy in computing his longevity pay and allowances for service prior to February 24, 1881.

III. Under the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Watson (130 U. S., 80) claimant would be entitled to additional allowances as follows, as reported by the Auditor for the War Department.

First longevity ration, July 1, 1854, to June 30, 1859	$474, 70
Second logevity ration, July 1, 1859, to June 30, 1864	548. 10

Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Signature of the house of hepresentatives.

Signature of the following of the court, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the aforesaid cause, which case was referred to this court by the Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives, under the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman Act.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

JOHN RANDOLPH, Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

[Court of Claims of the United States. Congressional, No. 15557. Frank H. Phipps v. The United States.]

STATEMENT OF CASE.

Frank H. Phipps v. The United States.]

STATEMENT OF CASE.

This case was referred to the court by the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on December 9, 1911, under the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Bowman Act.

The case was brought to a hearing on its merits on the 13th day of May, 1912.

Richard R. McMahon, Esq., appeared for the claimant, and the Attorney General, by George M. Anderson, Esq., his assistant and under his direction, appeared for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States.

The claimant in his petition makes the following allegations:
That he is a citizen of the United States, residing in the city of Springfield, State of Massachusetts.

That he entered the United States Military Academy as a cadet July 1, 1859; was appointed first lieutenant of ordnance, June 11, 1863; promoted captain, June 23, 1874; major, December 4, 1882; lieutenant colonel, July 7, 1898; colonel, February 17, 1903; and was retired with the rank of brigadier general, Angust 9, 1907.

That during the period of the petitioner's service as a commissioned officer in the Army of the United States the following statutory provisions respecting longevity pay were in force:

"That every commissioned officer of the line or staff, exclusive of general officers, shall be entitled to receive one additional ration per diem for every five years he may have served or shall serve in the Army of the United States." (Act of July 5, 1838, sec. 15; 5 Stat. L., p. 258.)

"There shall be allowed and paid to each commissioned officer below the rank of brigadier general, including chaplains and others having assimilated rank or pay, 10 per cent of their current yearly pay for each term of five years' service." (Act of July 15, 1870; now sec. 1262, R. S.)

"The the actual time of service in the Army and Navy, or both, shall be allowed all officers in computing their pay." (Act of Feb. 24, 1881; 21 Stat. L. p. 346.)

assimilated rank of pay, 10 per cent of their current yearly pay for each term of five years' service." (Act of July 15, 1870; now sec. 1262, R. S.)

" * * * the actual time of service in the Army and Navy, or both, shall be allowed all officers in computing their pay." (Act of Feb. 24, 1881; 21 Stat. L., p. 346.)

That under a decision of the Second Comptroller of the Treasury made July 24, 1838, the accounting officers of the Treasury, in the settlement of the petitioner's accounts, did not count his service at the Military Academy in computing his longevity pay and allowances for service prior to February 24, 1881.

That upon the construction of the act of July 5, 1838, by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of United States v. Watson (130 U. S., 80), the petitioner made application to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury for a settlement of his longevity pay and allowances in accordance with said decision, and, under the then prevailing ruling that service as a cadet could not be counted in computing longevity pay and allowances for service prior to February 24, 1881, petitioner's application was rejected December 15, 1890.

That upon the revocation of that ruling by the Comptroller of the Treasury on May 18, 1908, the petitioner again made application to the accounting officers of the Treasury for settlement of the longevity pay and allowances due him for service prior to February 24, 1881, but the Auditor for the War Department, May 2, 1910, refused to consider the petitioner's claim, because it had been previously disallowed by the settlement of 1890.

That by this action of the accounting officers in refusing to allow petitioner credit for his service at the Military Academy prior to February 24, 1881, there has been withheld from the petitioner the sum of $2,361.92, the amount he would have received had he been dealt with according to law.

That this claim has not been paid, assigned, or transferred, in whole or in part, and that petitioner has all his life been loyal to the G

FINDINGS OF FACT.

I. The claimant herein, Frank H. Phipps, is an officer in the United States Army, having entered the United States Military Academy July I, 1859. He graduated therefrom and was appointed first lieutenant of ordnance June 11, 1863; was promoted to be captain June 23, 1874; major, December 4, 1882; lieutenant colonel, July 7, 1898; colonel, February 17, 1903; and was retired August 9, 1907.

II. Claimant was paid his first longevity ration from June 11, 1868, and 10 per cent increase each five years subsequent thereto, and by settlements with the accounting officers he was paid longevity increase under the Tyler and Morton decisions, but said officers refused to allow longevity pay under the Watson decision.

III. Under the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Watson (130 U. S., 80) said claimant's first longevity period should begin July 1, 1864, and there would be due him, as reported by the Auditor for the War Department, the additional sum of $2.314.17.

[House Document No. 790, Sixty-second Congress, second session.] CLIFFORD H. FROST, TRUSTEE.

LETTER FROM THE ASSISTANT CLERK OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS, TRANS-MITTING A COPY OF THE FINDINGS FILED BY THE COURT IN THE CASE OF CLIFFORD H. FROST AND FRANK B. M'ALLISTER, TRUSTEES, UNDER THE WILL OF THE ESTATE OF ZEALOUS B. TOWER, DECEASED, AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

COURT OF CLAIMS, CLERK'S OFFICE, Washington, May 31, 1912.

Hon. Champ Clark,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Sir: Pursuant to the order of the court, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the findings filed by the court in the aforesaid cause, which case was referred to this court by the Committee on War Claims, House of Representatives, under the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Rowman Act Bowman Act. I am, very respectfully, yours,

JOHN RANDOLPH,
Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

[In the Court of Claims. Congressional, No. 14503. Clifford H. Frost and Frank B. McAllister, trustees, under the will of the estate of Zealous Bates Tower, deceased, v. The United States.]

STATEMENT OF CASE.

The claim in the above-entitled case for longevity pay alleged to be due on the service of said Zealous Bates Tower in the Army of the United States was transmitted to this court by order of the Committee on War Claims of the House of Representatives on February 26, 1910.

The case was brought to a hearing on its merits on the 8th day of May, 1912.

Fred C. Coldern appeared for the claimant, and the Attorney General, by George M. Anderson, Esq., his assistant and under his direction, appeared for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States.

by George M. Anderson, Esq., his assistant and under his direction, appeared for the defense and protection of the interests of the United States.

The claimants, Clifford H. Frost and Frank Barr McAllister, in their petition, make the following allegations:

That they are trustees, under his will, of the estate of said Zealous Bates Tower.

That the said Zealous Bates Tower entered the military service of the United States as a cadet in the United States Military Academy July 1, 1837, from which date he served as an officer of the United States Army until placed on the retired list January 10, 1883, as a colonel, and served thereafter on the retired list until his death, March 20, 1900.

That under the act of July 5, 1838, he became entitled to an additional ration for each five years' service, and under the act of July 15, 1870, he became entitled to 10 per cent increase of pay for each five years of service, but in computing such allowance of longevity rations and pay, computation was made on the basis that his service began at the date he was appointed second lieutenant, after graduating from the Military Academy, instead of the date of entering said Military Academy.

That under the decisions in the case of United States v. Tyler (105 U. S., 244). United States v. Morton (112 U. S., 1), and United States v. Waston (130 U. S., 80), longevity rations and pay should have been computed on the basis that his service began when he entered the Military Academy, and his estate is therefore entitled to the following amounts, being the difference between the amounts actually paid him and the amounts to which he was entitled for said periods:

First longevity ration, July 1, 1842, to June 30, 1846, in-

First longevity ration, July 1, 1842, to June 30, 1846, in-$292, 20

longevity ration, July 1, 1852, to June 30, 1856, in-292, 20

438, 30 fth longevity ration, Jan. 15, 1866, to June 30, 1866, in-clusive _____ 59, 70 Sixth longevity ration, July 1, 1867, to July 14, 1870, in-

333.00 Total_____Less internal-revenue tax_____ 1, 707. 60 37. 79

That claim for said difference of pay was filed with the Auditor for the War Department and disallowed by that officer on the ground that under the rulings in force in that office when his pay was computed, no allowance was made for service as cadet in the United States Military Academy, and by said adjudication said office had now lost jurisdiction and could not reopen the account.

That said claim is correct and just; that it has not been paid, assigned in whole or in part; and that said decedent was loyal to the Government of the United States throughout the Civil War.

The court upon the evidence, and after considering the briefs and arguments of counsel on both sides, makes the following

FINDINGS OF FACT.

I. The claimants Clifford H. Frost and Frank Barr McAllister are citizens of the United States, residing in Boston, State of Massachusetts, and are trustees under the will of the estate of Zealous Bates Tower, deceased, who was during his lifetime an officer in the United States Army, having entered the United States Military Academy as a cadet July 1, 1837. He graduated therefrom and was apopinted second lieutenant of Engineers July 1, 1841; was promoted to be first lieutenant april 24, 1847; captain July 1, 1855; major August 6, 1861; brigadier general of Volunteers November 23, 1861, to January 15, 1866; was appointed lieutenant colonel of Engineers November 11, 1865; colonel January 13, 1874; was retired January 10, 1883; and died March 20, 1900.

II. Said decedent was paid his longevity increase ration for each five years' service from July 1, 1846, and his claim for longevity pay and allowances under the Watson decision was disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury.

III. Under the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Watson (130 U. S., 80) there would be due said decedent additional longevity allowances, as reported by the Auditor for the War Department, amounting to the sum of $1,669.51.

JOHN RANDOLPH, Assistant Clerk Court of Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the amendment I offered may now be read.

The Secretary. On page 203, after line 18, it is proposed to insert:

Edward B. Prime, $339.45.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, this is a case for overtime work in the navy yard, and the findings of the court were made four days after the report of the committee. It is absolutely based upon fact and ought to be allowed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wish to say this in regard to Navy overtime: They are the claims of laborers in navy yards.

Mr. GALLINGER. This man was a mechanic. Mr. CRAWFORD. The Secretary of the Navy issued a circular, which went to all the employees, in which he fixed the hours of employment within certain hours-an eight hours' He specifically stated that in cases where the men worked beyond the term of eight hours they would be allowed for the extra time at the same rate. They went on and performed the service on the strength of this order issued by the Secretary of the Navy.

They had their claims adjudicated. There can be no question about them. The timekeeper kept the number of hours they worked; the wage they were receiving was a matter of record; and the whole thing is a mere matter of computation as to what the overtime amounted to. That has been found by the Court of Claims

The court found that these men worked so many extra hours; that they were receiving such and such a wage, and the proportionate amount for the extra time was so much, and the claims of the bill are claims of that kind which have been reported to the committee after it made its report.

These claims now offered are exactly of the same character, with the same sort of finding, but they have come in since the committee made its report.

I see no reason why, if we allow any of them, these regularly reported since the bill was reported should not be inserted in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to. Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, to be inserted after line 2 on page 267.

The Secretary. On page 267, after line 2, insert:

TEXAS.

To the Union Trust Co., of the District of Columbia, administrator de bonis non of the estate of Thomas Murray Tolman, deceased, $2,126.24.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the amendment involves a case in all respects similar to the one which the Senator from California has just explained to the Senate, and, without detaining the Senate, I will simply ask that the finding of the Court of Claims be incorporated in the RECORD.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it a longevity claim? Mr. BAILEY. It is a longevity claim. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the finding of facts will be inserted in the Record, as requested by the Senator from Texas.

The findings of fact are as follows:

FINDINGS OF FACT

I. The claimant herein, the Union Trust Co. of the District of Columbia, is the administrator de bonis non of the estate of Thomas Murray Tolman, deceased, who during his lifetime was an officer in the United States Army, having entered the United States Military Academy as a cadet on July 1, 1861. He graduated therefrom and was appointed a second lieutenant, Sixth United States Cavalry, June 23, 1865; was promoted to first lieutenant January 25, 1866, captain November 18, 1867, and died December 14, 1883.

He was paid his first longevity increase from June 23, 1870, and an additional 10 per cent for each five years subsequent thereto, but the accounting officers of the Treasury in computing his longevity pay and allowances refused to count his service as a cadet at the Military Academy.

II. Under the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Watson (130 U. S., 80) said decedent would be entitled to additional allowances on account of longevity, as reported by the Auditor for the War Department, amounting to $2,142.56, from which would be deducted $16.32 overpaid said decedent, leaving a balance of $2,126.24. BY THE COURT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Texas,

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the bill relating to certain longevity claims. I think they are on exactly the same basis as those included in the bill, all of them having findings of the Court of Claims.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Senator, I suppose, wants them under the head of the New York claims?

Mr. ROOT. Yes.

The Secretary. On page 266, after line 5, in the New York items, it is proposed to insert:

To Diantha G. Littlejohn, administratrix of the estate of John Egan, deceased, of Brooklyn, $2,276.91.

To Ida C. Hughes and Ellen C. McNally, daughters and sole heirs at law of Christopher H. McNally, deceased, of New York City, $2,559.21.

To Hamilton Trust Co., of Brooklyn, N. Y., executor of Loomis Lyman Langdon, deceased, late of the United States Army, $1,793.59.

To Isabella H. Silvey, widow and administratrix of William Silvey, late of the United States Army, $1,549,30.

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York want the findings of facts in connection with these cases printed in the RECORD?

Mr. ROOT. I think they should be.

The findings of facts are as follows:

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I offer the amendment I send to the desk. It is a longevity claim exactly on a par with those already accepted. I ask that the findings of the Court of Claims may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I will say that the amendment was handed to me by the Senator from Connecticut, and I am satisfied it is exactly the same as the others referred to.

To Lizzie F. Remington, of Windsor, executrix of Philip Halsey Remington, deceased, late of the United States Army, $2,297.81.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The findings of fact will be printed in the RECORD as requested by the Senator from Connecticut.

The findings of fact are as follows:

The findings of fact are as follows;

I. Claimant's decedent, Philip Halsey Remington, was an officer in the United States Army, having entered the United States Military Academy as a cadet on July 1, 1857. He graduated therefrom and was appointed a second lieutenant, Eighth United States Infantry, June 24, 1861; was promoted to be first lieutenant August 23, 1861; captain July 28, 1866, and retired as such February 20, 1891.

In settlement of said decedent's account by the accounting officers of the Treasury in 1890 he was paid his first longevity ration from June 24, 1866, and one additional ration for each five years subsequent thereto, and said officers refused to count his service as a cadet at the Military Academy in computing longevity pay and allowances for service prior to February 24, 1881.

II. Under the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of United States v. Watson (130 U. S., 80) and the case of United States v. Tyler (105 U. S., 244) said decedent's first longevity ration should begin July 1, 1862, and the difference between the amounts he has received and the amounts to which he would be entitled under said decisions, as reported by the Auditor for the War Department, amounts to $2,297.81, no part of which has been paid.

BY THE COURT.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Secretary. On page 267, at the end of line 16, after the words "this act," it is proposed to insert:

And section 3480 of the Revised Statutes, so far as applicable to these claims, is hereby repealed.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I did not catch the force of the amendment. I wish the Secretary would read it again. I should like an opportunity to examine it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. How much time does the Senator from South Dakota want? This bill will probably be passed to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. SMITH of Arizona, and others. Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I am perfectly willing to have it go over if the bill is not to be disposed of to-day.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask that the amendment be printed and go over.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. It has already been printed and referred to the committee, but I will consent to that course.

I will state here now that the Judiciary Committee of the Senate has twice reported unanimously for the repeal of this statute. It is a statute which prevents the heirs of certain officers who belonged to the Regular Army and went South when the contest between the two sections arose from being paid some small sums of money that are due.

In the case of Stonewall Jackson there would be $292 coming to his heirs; in the case of Robert E. Lee, $1,400; in the case of Joseph Wheeler, $219. That is the class of claims involved, and they amount to about $100,000. I will ask the Senator from South Dakota to look into it, if he desires to do so,

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should like to have the amendment

FISCAL, JUDICIAL, MILITARY, AND INSULAR AFFAIRS (H. DOC. No. 1067).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

On the 3d of December I sent a message to the Congress, which was confined to our foreign relations. The Secretary of State makes no report to the President or to Congress, and a review of the history of the transactions of the State Department in one year must therefore be included by the President in his annual message or Congress will not be fully informed of them. A full discussion of all the transactions of the Government, with view to informing the Congress of the important events of the year and recommending new legislation, requires more space than one message of reasonable length affords. I have therefore adopted the course of sending three or four messages during the first 10 days of the session, so as to include reference to the more important matters that should be brought to the attention of the Congress.

BUSINESS CONDITIONS.

The condition of the country with reference to business could hardly be better. While the four years of the administration now drawing to a close have not developed great speculative expansion or a wide field of new investment, the recovery and progress made from the depressing conditions following the panic of 1907 have been steady and the improvement has been clear and easily traced in the statistics. The business of the country is now on a solid basis. Credits are not unduly extended, and every phase of the situation seems in a state of preparedness for a period of unexampled prosperity. Manufacturing concerns are running at their full capacity and the demand for labor was never so constant and growing. The foreign trade of the country for this year will exceed $4,000,000,000, while the balance in our favor-that of the excess of exports over imports-will exceed $500,000,000. More than half our exports are manufactures or partly manufactured material, while our exports of farm products do not show the same increase because of domestic consumption. It is a year of bumper crops; the total money value of farm products will exceed $9,500,000,000. It is a year when the bushel or unit price of agricultural products has gradually fallen, and yet the total value of the entire crop is greater by over $1,000,000,000 than we have known in our history.

CONDITION OF THE TREASURY.

The condition of the Treasury is very satisfactory. The total interest-bearing debt is $963,777,770, of which $134,631,980 constitute the Panama Canal loan. The noninterest-bearing debt is $378,301,284.90, including $346,681,016 of greenbacks. We have in the Treasury $150,000,000 in gold coin as a reserve against the outstanding greenbacks, and in addition resolves against the outstanding greenbacks; and in addition we have a cash balance in the Treasury as a general fund of $167,152,478.99, or an increase of $26,975,552 over the general fund last year.

RECEIPTS AND EXPENDITURES,

For three years the expenditures of the Government have decreased under the influence of an effort to economize. year presents an apparent exception. The estimate by the Secretary of the Treasury of the ordinary receipts, exclusive of postal revenues, for the year ending June 30, 1914, indicates that they will amount to $710,000,000. The sum of the estimates of the expenditures for that same year, exclusive of Panama Canal disbursements and postal disbursements pay-able from postal revenues, is $732,000,000, indicating a deficit of $22,000,000. For the year ending June 30, 1913, similarly estimated receipts were $667,000,000, while the total corresponding estimate of expenditures for that year, submitted through the Secretary of the Treasury to Congress, amounted to $656,000,000. This shows an increase of $76,000,000 in the estimates for 1914 over the total estimates of 1913. This is due to an increase of $25,000,000 in the estimate for rivers and harbors for the next year on projects and surveys authorized by Congress; to an increase under the new pension bill of $32,-500,000; and to an increase in the estimates for expenses of the Navy Department of $24,000,000. The estimate for the Navy Department for the year 1913 included two battleships. gress made provision for only one battleship, and therefore the Navy Department has deemed it necessary and proper to make an estimate which includes the first year's expenditure for three battleships in addition to the amount required for work on the uncompleted ships now under construction. In addition to the natural increase in the expenditures for the uncompleted ships, and the additional battleship estimated for, the other increases are due to the pay required for 4,000 or more additional enlisted men in the Navy; and to this must be added the additional cost of construction imposed by the change in the 8-hour law which makes it applicable to ships built in private shipvards.

With the exceptions of these three items, the estimates show a reduction this year below the total estimates for 1913 of more than $5,000,000.

The estimates for Panama Canal construction for 1914 are $17,000,000 less than for 1913.

OUR BANKING AND CURRENCY SYSTEM.

A time when panics seem far removed is the best time for us to prepare our financial system to withstand a storm. most crying need this country has is a proper banking and cur-The existing one is inadequate, and everyone rency system. who has studied the question admits it.

It is the business of the National Government to provide a medium, automatically contracting and expanding in volume, to meet the needs of trade. Our present system lacks the indispensable quality of elasticity.

The only part of our monetary medium that has elasticity is The peculiar provisions of the law the bank-note currency. requiring national banks to maintain reserves to meet the call of the depositors operates to increase the money stringency when it arises rather than to expand the supply of currency and It operates upon each bank and furnishes a motive relieve it. for the withdrawal of currency from the channels of trade by, each bank to save itself, and offers no inducement whatever for the use of the reserve to expand the supply of currency to meet the exceptional demand.

After the panic of 1907 Congress realized that the present system was not adapted to the country's needs and that under it panics were possible that might properly be avoided by legislative provision. Accordingly a monetary commission was appointed which made a report in February, 1912. The system which they recommended involved a National Reserve Association, which was, in certain of its faculties and functions, a bank, and which was given through its governing authorities the power, by issuing circulating notes for approved commercial paper, by fixing discounts, and by other methods of transfer of currency, to expand the supply of the monetary medium where it was most needed to prevent the export or hoarding of gold and generally to exercise such supervision over the supply of money in every part of the country as to prevent a stringency and a panic. The stock in this association was to be distributed to the banks of the whole United States, State and National, in a mixed proportion to bank units and to capital stock paid The control of the association was vested in a board of directors to be elected by representatives of the banks, except certain ex officio directors, three Cabinet officers, and the Comptroller of the Currency. The President was to appoint the governor of the association from three persons to be selected by the directors, while the two deputy governors were to be elected by the board of directors. The details of the plan were worked out with great care and ability, and the plan in general seems to me to furnish the basis for a proper solution of our present difficulties. I feel that the Government might very properly be given a greater voice in the executive committee of the board of directors without danger of injecting politics into its man-agement, but I think the federation system of banks is a good one, provided proper precautions are taken to prevent banks of large capital from absorbing power through ownership of stock in other banks. The objections to a central bank it seems to me are obviated if the onwership of the reserve association is distributed among all the banks of a country in which banking The earnings of the reserve association are limited in percentage to a reasonable and fixed amount, and the profits over and above this are to be turned into the Government Treasury. It is quite probable that still greater security against control by money centers may be worked into the plan.

Certain it is, however, that the objections which were made in the past history of this country to a central bank as furnishing a monopoly of financial power to private individuals, would not apply to an association whose ownership and control is so widely distributed and is divided between all the banks of the country, State and National, on the one hand, and the Chief Executive through three department heads and his Comptroller of the Currency, on the other. The ancient hostility to a national bank, with its branches, in which is concentrated the privilege of doing a banking business and carrying on the financial transactions of the Government, has prevented the establishment of such a bank since it was abolished in the Jackson Administration. Our present national banking law has obviated objections growing out of the same cause by providing a free banking system in which any set of stockholders can establish a national bank if they comply with the conditions of law. It seems to me that the National Reserve Association meets the same objection in a similar way; that is, by giving to each bank, State and National, in accordance with its size, a certain share in the stock of the reserve association, nontransferable and only to be held by the bank while it perform its functions as a partner in the reserve association.

The report of the commission recommends provisions for the imposition of a graduated tax on the expanded currency of such a character as to furnish a motive for reducing the issue of notes whenever their presence in the money market is not required by the exigencies of trade. In other words, the whole system has been worked out with the greatest care. Theoretically it presents a plan that ought to command support. Practically it may require modification in various of its provisions in order to make the security against abuses by combinations among the banks impossible. But in the face of the crying necessity that there is for improvement in our present system, I urgently invite the attention of Congress to the proposed plan and the report of the commission, with the hope that an earnest consideration may suggest amendments and changes within the general plan which will lead to its adoption for the benefit of the country. There is no class in the community more interested in a safe and sane banking and currency system, one which will prevent panics and automatically furnish in each trade center the currency needed in the carrying on of the business at that center, than the wage earner. There is no class in the community whose experience better qualifies them to make suggestions as to the sufficiency of a currency and banking system than the bankers and business men. Ought we, therefore, to ignore their recommendations and reject their financial judgment as to the proper method of reforming our financial system merely because of the suspicion which exists against them in the minds of many of our fellow citizens? it not the duty of Congress to take up the plan suggested, examine it from all standpoints, give impartial consideration to the testimony of those whose experience ought to fit them to give the best advice on the subject, and then to adopt some plan which will secure the benefits desired?

A banking and currency system seems far away from the wage earner and the farmer, but the fact is that they are vitally interested in a safe system of currency which shall graduate its volume to the amount needed and which shall prevent times of artificial stringency that frighten capital, stop employment, prevent the meeting of the pay roll, destroy local markets, and produce penury and want.

THE TARIFF.

I have regarded it as my duty in former messages to the Congress to urge the revision of the tariff upon principles of protection. It was my judgment that the customs duties ought to be revised downward, but that the reduction ought not to be below a rate which would represent the difference in the cost of production between the article in question at home and abroad, and for this and other reasons I vetoed several bills which were presented to me in the last session of this Congress. Now that a new Congress has been elected on a platform of a tariff for revenue only rather than a protective tariff, and is to revise the tariff on that basis, it is needless for me to occupy the time of this Congress with arguments or recommendations in favor of a protective tariff.

Before passing from the tariff law, however, known as the Payne tariff law of August 5, 1909, I desire to call attention to section 38 of that act, assessing a special excise tax on corpora-It contains a provision requiring the levy of an additional 50 per cent to the annual tax in cases of neglect to verify the prescribed return or to file it before the time required by This additional charge of 50 per cent operates in some cases as a harsh penalty for what may have been a mere inadvertence or unintentional oversight, and the law should be so amended as to mitigate the severity of the charge in such instances. Provision should also be made for the refund of additional taxes heretofore collected because of such infractions in those cases where the penalty imposed has been so disproportionate to the offense as equitably to demand relief. BUDGET.

The estimates for the next fiscal year have been assembled by the Secretary of the Treasury and by him transmitted to Congress. I purpose at a later day to submit to Congress a form of budget prepared for me and recommended by the President's Commission on Economy and Efficiency, with a view of suggesting the useful and informing character of a properly framed budget.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

The War Department combines within its jurisdiction functions which in other countries usually occupy three depart-It not only has the management of the Army and the coast defenses, but its jurisdiction extends to the government of the Philippines and of Porto Rico and the control of the receivership of the customs revenues of the Dominican Republic; it also includes the recommendation of all plans for the improvement of harbors and waterways and their execution when adopted; and, by virtue of an Executive order, the supervision of the construction of the Panama Canal.

ARMY REORGANIZATION.

Our small Army now consists of 83,809 men, excluding the 5,000 Philippine Scouts. Leaving out of consideration the Coast Artillery force, whose position is fixed in our various seacoast defenses, and the present garrisons of our various insular possessions, we have to-day within the continental United States a mobile Army of only about 35,000 men. This little force must be still further drawn upon to supply the new garrisons for the great naval base which is being established at Pearl Harbor, in the Hawaiian Islands, and to protect the locks now rapidly approching completion at Panama. The forces remaining in the United States are now scattered in nearly 50 posts, situated for a variety of historical reasons in 24 States. These posts contain only fractions of regiments, averaging less than 700 men In time of peace it has been our historical policy to administer these units separately by a geographical organiza-tion. In other words, our Army in time of peace has never been a united organization but merely scattered groups of companies, battalions, and regiments, and the first task in time of war has been to create out of these scattered units an Army fit for effective teamwork and cooperation.

To the task of meeting these patent defects, the War Department has been addressing itself during the past year. For many years we had no officer or division whose business it was to study these problems and plan remedies for these defects. With the establishment of the General Staff nine years ago a body was created for this purpose. It has, necessarily, required time to overcome, even in its own personnel, the habits of mind engendered by a century of lack of method, but of late years its work has become systematic and effective, and it has recently been addressing itself vigorously to these problems.

A comprehensive plan of Army reorganization was prepared by the War College Division of the General Staff. This plan was thoroughly discussed last summer at a series of open conferences held by the Secretary of War and attended by representatives from all branches of the Army and from Congress. In printed form it has been distributed to Members of Congress and throughout the Army and the National Guard, and widely through institutions of learning and elsewhere in the United States. In it, for the first time, we have a tentative chart for future progress,

Under the influence of this study definite and effective steps have been taken toward Army reorganization so far as such reorganization lies within the Executive power. Hitherto there has been no difference of policy in the treatment of the organization of our foreign garrisons from those of troops within the United States. The difference of situation is vital, and the foreign garrison should be prepared to defend itself at an instant's notice against a foe who may command the sea. Unlike the troops in the United States, it can not count upon reenforcements or recruitment. It is an outpost, upon which will fall the brunt of the first attack in case of war. The historical policy of the United States of carrying its regiments during time of peace at half strength has no application to our foreign garrisons. During the past year this defect has been remedied as to the Philippines garrison. The former garrison of 12 reduced regiments has been replaced by a garrison of 6 regiments at full strength, giving fully the same number of riflemen at an estimated economy in cost of maintenance of over $1,000,000 per year. This garrison is to be permanent. Its regimental units, instead of being transferred periodically back and forth from the United States, will remain in the islands. The officers and men composing these units will, however, serve a regular tropical detail as usual, thus involving no greater hardship upon the personnel and greatly increasing the effectiveness of the garrison. A similar policy is proposed for the Hawaiian and Panama garrisons as fast as the barracks for them are completed. I strongly urge upon Congress that the necessary appropriations for this purpose should be promptly made. It is, in my opinion, of first importance that these national contracts that these national outposts, upon which a successful home defense will, primarily, depend, should be finished and placed in effective condition at the earliest possible day.

THE HOME ARMY.

Simultaneously with the foregoing steps the War Department has been proceeding with the reorganization of the Army The formerly disassociated units are being united into a tactical organization of three divisions, each consisting of two or three brigades of Infantry and, so far as practicable, a proper proportion of divisional Cavalry and Artillery. Of course the extent to which this reform can be carried by the Executive is practically limited to a paper organization. The Executive is practically limited to a paper organization. scattered units can be brought under a proper organization, but they will remain physically scattered until Congress supplies the necessary funds for grouping them in more concentrated posts. Until that is done the present difficulty of drilling our scattered groups together, and thus training them for the proper team play, can not be removed. But we shall, at least, have an Army which will know its own organization and will be inspected by its proper commanders, and to which, as a unit, emergency orders can be issued in time of war or other emergency. Moreover, the organization, which in many respects is necessarily a skeleton, will furnish a guide for future development. The separate regiments and companies will know the brigades and divisions to which they belong. They will be maneuvered together whenever maneuvers are established by Congress, and the gaps in their organization will show the pattern into which can be filled new troops as the Nation grows and a larger Army is provided.

REGULAR ARMY RESERVE.

One of the most impotant reforms accomplished during the past year has been the legislation enacted in the Army appropriation bill of last summer, providing for a Regular Army reserve. Hitherto our national policy has assumed that at the outbreak of war our regiments would be immediately raised to full strength. But our laws have provided no means by which this could be accomplished, or by which the losses of the regiments when once sent to the front could be repaired.

In this respect we have neglected the lessons learned by other nations. The new law provides that the soldier, after serving four years with colors, shall pass into a reserve for three years. At his option he may go into the reserve at the end of three years, remaining there for four years. While in the reserve he can be called to active duty only in case of war or other national emergency, and when so called and only in such case will receive a stated amount of pay for all of the period in which he has been a member of the reserve. The legislation is imperfect, in my opinion, in certain particulars, but it is a most important step in the right direction, and I carnestly hope that it will be carefully studied and perfected by Congress.

THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Under existing law the National Guard constitutes, after the Regular Army, the first line of national defense. Its organization, discipline, training, and equipment, under recent legislation, have been assimilated, as far as possible, to those of the Regular Army, and its practical efficiency, under the effect of this training, has very greatly increased. Our citizen soldiers under present conditions have reached a stage of development beyond which they can not reasonably be asked to go without further direct assistance in the form of pay from the Federal Government. On the other hand, such pay from the rederal Government. On the other hand, such pay from the National Treasury would not be justified unless it produced a proper equivalent in additional efficiency on the part of the National Guard. The Organized Militia to-day can not be ordered outside of the limits of the United States, and thus can not lawfully be used for general military purposes. The officers and men are ambitious and eager to make themselves thus available and to become an efficient national reserve of citizen soldiery. They are the only force of trained men, other than the Regular Army, upon which we can rely. The so-called militia pay bill, in the form agreed on between the authorities of the War Department and the representatives of the National Guard, in my opinion adequately meets these conditions and offers a proper return for the pay which it is proposed to give to the National Guard. I believe that its enactment into law would be a very long step toward providing this Nation with a first line of citizen soldiery, upon which its main reliance must depend in case of any national emergency. Plans for the organization of the National Guard into tactical divisions, on the same lines as those adopted for the Regular Army, are being formulated by the War College Division of the General Staff.

NATIONAL VOLUNTEERS.

The National Guard consists of only about 110,000 men. In any serious war in the past it has always been necessary, and in such a war in the future it doubtless will be necessary, for the Nation to depend, in addition to the Regular Army and the National Guard, upon a large force of volunteers. present no adequate provision of law for the raising of such a force. There is now pending in Congress, however, a bill which makes such provision, and which I believe is admirably adapted to meet the exigencies which would be presented in case of war. The passage of the bill would not entail a dollar's expense upon the Government at this time or in the future until war comes. But if war comes the methods therein directed are in accordance with the best military judgment as to what they ought to be, and the act would prevent the necessity for a discussion of any legislation and the delays incident to its consideration and adoption. I earnestly urge its passage.

CONSOLIDATION OF THE SUPPLY CORPS.

The Army appropriation act of 1912 also carried legislation for the consolidation of the Quartermaster's Department, the Subsistence Department, and the Pay Corps into a single supply department, to be known as the Quartermaster's Corps. It also provided for the organization of a special force of enlisted men, to be known as the Service Corps, gradually to replace many of the civilian employees engaged in the manual labor necessary in every army. I believe that both of these enactments will improve the administration of our military establishment. The consolidation of the supply corps has already been effected, and the organization of the Service Corps is being put into effect.

All of the foregoing reforms are in the direction of economy and efficiency. Except for the slight increase necessary to garrison our outposts in Hawaii and Panama, they do not call for a larger Army, but they do tend to produce a much more efficient one. The only substantial new appropriations required are those which, as I have pointed out, are necessary to complete the fortifications and barracks at our naval bases and outposts beyond the sea.

PORTO RICO.

Porto Rico continues to show notable progress, both commercially and in the spread of education. Its external commerce has increased 17 per cent over the preceding year, bringing the total value up to $92,631,886, or more than five times the value of the commerce of the island in 1901. During the year 160,657 pupils were enrolled in the public schools, as against 145,525 for the preceding year, and as compared with 26,000 for the first year of American administration. Special efforts are under way for the promotion of vocational and industrial training, the need of which is particularly pressing in the island. When the bubonic plague broke out last June, the quick and efficient response of the people of Porto Rico to the demands of modern sanitation was strikingly shown by the thorough campaign which was instituted against the plague and the hearty public opinion which supported the Government's efforts to check its progress and to prevent its recurrence.

The failure thus far to grant American citizenship continues to be the only ground of dissatisfaction. The bill conferring such citizenship has passed the House of Representatives and is now awaiting the action of the Senate. I am heartily in favor of the passage of this bill. I believe that the demand for citizenship is just, and that it is amply earned by sustained loyalty on the part of the inhabitants of the island. But it should be remembered that the demand must be, and in the minds of most Porto Ricans is, entirely disassociated from any thought of statehood. I believe that no substantial approved public opinion in the United States or in Porto Rico contemplates statehood for the island as the ultimate form of relation between us. I believe that the aim to be striven for is the fullest possible allowance of legal and fiscal self-government, with American citizenship as the bond between us; in other words, a relation analogous to the present relation between Great Britain and such self-governing colonies as Canada and Australia. This would conduce to the fullest and most selfsustaining development of Porto Rico, while at the same time it would grant her the economic and political benefits of being under the American flag.

PHILIPPINES.

A bill is pending in Congress which revolutionizes the carefully worked out scheme of government under which the Philippine Islands are now governed and which proposes to render them virtually autonomous at once and absolutely independent in eight years. Such a proposal can only be founded on the assumption that we have now discharged our trusteeship to the Filipino people and our responsibility for them to the world, and that they are now prepared for self-government as well as national sovereignty. A thorough and unbiased knowledge of the facts clearly shows that these assumptions are absolutely without justification. As to this, I believe that there is no substantial difference of opinion among any of those who have had the responsibility of facing Philippine problems in the administration of the islands, and I believe that no one to whom the future of this people is a responsible concern can countenance a policy fraught with the direct consequences to those on whose behalf it is ostensibly urged.

In the Philippine Islands we have embarked upon an experiment unprecedented in dealing with dependent peoples. We are developing there conditions exclusively for their own welfare. We found an archipelago containing 24 tribes and races, speaking a great variety of languages, and with a population over 80 per cent of which could neither read nor write. Through the unifying forces of a common education, of commercial and economic development, and of gradual participation in local self-government we are endeavoring to evolve a homogeneous people fit to determine, when the time arrives, their own destiny. We are seeking to arouse a national spirit and not, as under the older colonial theory, to suppress such a spirit. The character of the work we have been doing is keenly recognized in the Orient, and our success thus far followed with not a little envy by those who, initiating the same policy, find themselves hampered by conditions grown up in earlier days and under different theories of administration. But our work is far from done. Our duty to the Filipinos is far from discharged. Over half a million Filipino students are now in the Philippine schools helping to mold the men of the future into a homogeneous people, but there still remain more than a million Filipino children of school age yet to be reached. Freed from American control the integrating forces of a common education and a common language will cease and the educational system now well started will slip back into inefficiency and disorder.

An enormous increase in the commercial development of the islands has been made since they were virtually granted full access to our markets three years ago, with every prospect of increasing development and diversified industries. Freed from American control, such development is bound to decline. Every observer speaks of the great progress in public works for the benefit of the Filipinos, of harbor improvements, of roads and railways, of irrigation and artesian wells, public buildings, and better means of communication. But large parts of the islands are still unreached, still even unexplored, roads and railways are needed in many parts, irrigation systems are still to be installed, and wells to be driven. Whole villages and towns are still without means of communication other than almost impassable roads and trails. Even the great progress in sanitation, which has successfully suppressed smallpox, the bubonic plague, and Asiatic cholera, has found the cause of and a cure for beriberi, has segregated the lepers, has helped to make Manila the most healthful city in the Orient, and to free life throughout the whole archipelago from its former dread diseases, is nevertheless incomplete in many essentials of permanence in sanitary policy. Even more remains to be accomplished. If freed from American control, sanitary progress is bound to be arrested and all that has been achieved likely to be lost.

Concurrent with the economic, social, and industrial develop-ment of the islands has been the development of the political capacity of the people. By their progressive participation in government the Filipinos are being steadily and hopefully trained for self-government. Under Spanish control they shared in no way in the government. Under American control they have shared largely and increasingly. Within the last dozen years they have gradually been given complete autonomy in the municipalities, the right to elect two-thirds of the provincial governing boards and the lower house of the insular legislature. They have four native members out of nine members of the commission, or upper house. The chief justice and two justices of the supreme court, about one-half of the higher judicial positions, and all of the justices of the peace are natives. In the classified civil service the proportion of Filipinos increased from 51 per cent in 1904 to 67 per cent in 1911. Thus to-day all the municipal employees, over 90 per cent of the provincial employees, and 60 per cent of the officials and employees of the central government are Filipinos. The ideal which has been kept in mind in our political guidance of the islands has been real popular self-government and not mere paper independence. I am happy to say that the Filipinos have done well enough in the places they have filled and in the discharge of the political power with which they have been intrusted to warrant the belief that they can be educated and trained to complete self-government. But the present satisfactory results are due to constant support and supervision at every step by Americans.

If the task we have undertaken is higher than that assumed by other nations, its accomplishment must demand even more patience. We must not forget that we found the Filipinos wholly untrained in government. Up to our advent all other experience sought to repress rather than encourage political power. It takes a long time and much experience to ingrain political habits of steadiness and efficiency. Popular self-government ultimately must rest upon common habits of thought and upon a reasonably developed public opinion. No such foundations for self-government, let alone independence, are now present in the Philippine Islands. Disregarding even their racial heterogeneity and the lack of ability to think as a nation, it is sufficient to point out that under liberal franchise privileges only about 3 per cent of the Filipinos vote and only 5 per cent of the people are said to read the public press. To confer independence upon the Filipinos now is, therefore, to subject the great mass of their people to the dominance of an oligarchical and, probably, exploiting minority. Such a course will be as cruel to those people as it would be shameful to us.

Our true course is to pursue steadily and courageously the path we have thus far followed; to guide the Filipinos into self-sustaining pursuits; to continue the cultivation of sound political habits through education and political practice; to encourage the diversification of industries, and to realize the advantages of their industrial education by conservatively approved cooperative methods, at once checking the dangers of concentrated wealth and building up a sturdy, independent citizenship. We should do all this with a disinterested endeavor to secure for the Filipinos economic independence and to fit them for complete self-government, with the power to decide eventually, according to their own largest good, whether such self-government shall be accompanied by independence. A present declaration even of future independence would retard progress by the dissension and disorder it would arouse. On our part it would be a disingenuous attempt, under the guise of conferring a benefit on them, to relieve ourselves from the heavy and difficult burden which thus far we have been bravely and consistently sustaining. It would be a disguised policy of scuttle. It would make the helpless Filipino the football of oriental politics, under the protection of a guaranty of their independence, which we would be powerless to enforce.

REGULATION OF WATER POWER.

There are pending before Congress a large number of bills proposing to grant privileges of erecting dams for the purpose of creating water power in our navigable rivers. The pend-ency of these bills has brought out an important defect in the existing general dam act. That act does not, in my opinion, grant sufficient power to the Federal Government in dealing with the construction of such dams to exact protective conditions in the interest of navigation. It does not permit the Federal Government, as a condition of its permit, to require that a part of the value thus created shall be applied to the further general improvement and protection of the stream. T believe this to be one of the most important matters of internal improvement now confronting the Government. Most of the navigable rivers of this country are comparatively long and shallow. In order that they may be made fully useful for navigation there has come into vogue a method of improvement known as canalization, or the slack-water method, which consists in building a series of dams and locks, each of which will create a long pool of deep navigable water. At each of these dams there is usually created also water power of commercial value. If the water power thus created can be made available for the further improvement of navigation in the stream, it is manifest that the improvement will be much more quickly effected on the one hand and, on the other, that the burden on the general tax-payers of the country will be very much reduced. Private interests seeking permits to build water-power dams in navigable streams usually urge that they thus improve navigation, and that if they do not impair navigation they should be allowed to take for themselves the entire profits of the waterpower development. Whatever they may do by way of relieving the Government of the expense of improving navigation should be given due consideration, but it must be apparent that there may be a profit beyond a reasonably liberal return upon the private investment which is a potential asset of the Government in carrying out a comprehensive policy of waterway development. It is no objection to the retention and use of such an asset by the Government that a comprehensive waterway policy will include the protection and development of the other public uses of water, which can not and should not be ignored in making and executing plans for the protection and development of navigation. It is also equally clear that inasmuch as the water power thus created is or may be an incident of a general scheme of waterway improvement within the constitutional jurisdiction of the Federal Government, the regulation of such water power lies also within that jurisdiction. In my opinion, constructive statesmanship requires that legislation should be enacted which will permit the development of navigation in these great rivers to go hand in hand with the utilization of this by-product of water power, created in the course of the same improvement, and that the general dam act should be so amended as to make this possible. I deem it highly important that the Nation should adopt a consistent and harmonious treatment of these water-power projects, which will preserve for this purpose their value to the Government, whose right it is to grant the permit. Any other policy is equivalent to throwing away a most valuable national asset.

THE PANAMA CANAL,

During the past year the work of construction upon the canal has progressed most satisfactorily. About 87 per cent of the excavation work has been completed, and more than 93 per cent of the concrete for all the locks is in place. In view of the great interest which has been manifested as to some slides in the Culebra Cut, I am glad to say that the report of Col. Goethals should allay any apprehension on this point. It is gratifying to note that none of the slides which occurred during this year would have interfered with the passage of the ships had the canal, in fact, been in operation, and when the slope pressures will have been finally adjusted and the growth of vegetation will minimize erosion in the banks of the cut, the slide problem will be practically solved and an ample stability assured for the Culebra Cut.

Although the official date of the opening has been set for January 1, 1915, the canal will, in fact, from present indications, be opened for shipping during the latter half of 1913. No fixed date can as yet be set, but shipping interests will be advised as soon as assurances can be given that vessels can pass through without unnecessary delay.

Recognizing the administrative problem in the management of the canal, Congress in the act of August 24, 1912, has made admirable provisions for executive responsibility in the control of the canal and the government of the Canal Zone. The problem of most efficient organization is receiving careful consideration, so that a scheme of organization and control best adapted to the conditions of the canal may be formulated and put in to the conditions of the canal may be formulated and put in operation as expeditiously as possible. Acting under the authority conferred on me by Congress, I have, by Executive proclamation, promulgated the following schedule of tolls for ships passing through the canal, based upon the thorough report of Emory R. Johnson, special commissioner on traffic and tolls:

1. On merchant vessels carrying passengers or cargo, $1.20 per net vessel ton—each 100 cubic feet—of actual carning capacity.

2. On vessels in ballast without passengers or cargo, 40 per cent less than the rate of tolls for vessels with passengers or cargo, 3. Upon naval vessels, other than transports, colliers, hospital ships, and supply ships, 50 cents per displacement ton.

4. Upon Army and Navy transports, colliers, hospital ships, and supply ships, $1.20 per net ton, the vessels to be measured by the same rules as are employed in determining the net tonnage of merchant vessels.

Rules for the determination of the tonnage upon which toll charges are based are now in course of preparation and will be promulgated in due season.

PANAMA CANAL TREATY.

The proclamation which I have issued in respect to the Panama Canal tolls is in accord with the Panama Canal act passed by this Congress August 24, 1912. We have been advised that the British Government has prepared a protest against the act and its enforcement in so far as it relieves from the payment of tolls American ships engaged in the American coastwise trade on the ground that it violates British rights under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty concerning the Panama Canal. When the protest is presented, it will be promptly considered and an effort made to reach a satisfactory adjustment of any differences there may be between the two Governments.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

The promulgation of an efficient workmen's compensation act, adapted to the particular conditions of the zone, is awaiting adequate appropriation by Congress for the payment of claims arising thereunder. I urge that speedy provision be made in order that we may install upon the zone a system of settling claims for injuries in best accord with modern humane, social, and industrial theories.

PROMOTION FOR COL. GOETHALS.

As the completion of the canal grows nearer, and as the wonderful executive work of Col. Goethals becomes more conspicuous in the eyes of the country and of the world, it seems to me wise and proper to make provision by law for such reward to him as may be commensurate with the service that he has rendered to his country. I suggest that this reward take the form of an appointment of Col. Goethals as a major general in the Army of the United States, and that the law authorizing such appointment be accompanied with a provision permitting his designation as Chief of Engineers upon the retirement of the present incumbent of that office.

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The Navy of the United States is in a greater state of efficiency and is more powerful than it has ever been before, but in the emulation which exists between different countries in respect to the increase of naval and military armaments this condition is not a permanent one. In view of the many improvements and increases by foreign Governments the slightest halt on our part in respect to new construction throws us back and reduces us from a naval power of the first rank and places us among the nations of the second rank. In the past 15 years the Navy has expanded rapidly and yet far less rapidly than our country. From now on reduced expenditures in the Navy means reduced military strength. The world's history has shown the importance of sea power both for adequate defense and for the support of important and definite policies.

I had the pleasure of attending this autumn a mobilization of the Atlantic Fleet, and was glad to observe and note the preparedness of the fleet for instant action. The review brought before the President and the Secretary of the Navy a greater and more powerful collection of vessels than had ever been gathered in American waters. The condition of the fleet and of the offi-cers and enlisted men and of the equipment of the vessels entitled those in authority to the greatest credit.

I again commend to Congress the giving of legislative sanction to the appointment of the naval aids to the Secretary of the Navy. These aids and the council of aids appointed by the Secretary of the Navy to assist him in the conduct of his department have proven to be of the highest utility. They have furnished an executive committee of the most skilled naval experts, who have coordinated the action of the various bureaus in the Navy, and by their advice have enabled the Secretary to give an administration at the same time economical and most efficient. Never before has the United States had a Navy that compared in efficiency with its present one, but never before have the requirements with respect to naval warfare been higher and more exacting than now. A year ago Congress refused to appropriate for more than one battleship. In this I think a great mistake of policy was made, and I urgently recommend that this Congress make up for the mistake of the last session by appropriations authorizing the construction of three battleships, in addition to destroyers, fuel ships, and the other auxiliary vessels as shown in the building program of the general board. We are confronted by a condition in respect to the navies of the world which requires us, if we would maintain our Navy as an insurance of peace, to augment our naval force by at least two battleships a year and by battle cruisers, gunboats, torpedo destroyers, and submarine boats in a proper proportion. We have no desire for war. We would go as far as any nation in the world to avoid war, but we are Our population, our wealth, our definite polia world power. cies, our responsibilities in the Pacific and the Atlantic, our defense of the Panama Canal, together with our enormous world trade and our missionary outposts on the frontiers of civilization, require us to recognize our position as one of the foremost in the family of nations, and to clothe ourselves with sufficient naval power to give force to our reasonable demands, and to give weight to our influence in those directions of progress that a powerful Christian nation should advocate.

I observe that the Secretary of the Navy devotes some space to a change in the disciplinary system in vogue in that branch of the service. I think there is nothing quite so unsatisfactory to either the Army or the Navy as the severe puhishments necessarily inflicted by court-martial for desertions and purely military offenses, and I am glad to hear that the British have solved this important and difficult matter in a satisfactory way. I commend to the consideration of Congress the details of the new disciplinary system, and recommend that laws be passed putting the same into force both in the Army and the Navy.

I invite the attention of Congress to that part of the report of the Secretary of the Navy in which he recommends the formation of a naval reserve by the organization of the ex-sailors of the Navy.

I repeat my recommendation made last year that proper provision should be made for the rank of the commander in chief of the squadrons and fleets of the Navy. The inconvenience attending the necessary precedence that most foreign admirals have over our own whenever they meet in official functions ought to be avoided. It impairs the prestige of our Navy and is a defect that can be very easily removed.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

This department has been very active in the enforcement of the law. It has been better organized and with a larger force than ever before in the history of the Government. The prosecutions which have been successfully concluded and which are now pending testify to the effectiveness of the departmental

The prosecution of trusts under the Sherman antitrust law has gone on without restraint or diminution, and decrees similar to those entered in the Standard Oil and the Tobacco cases have been entered in other suits, like the suits against the Powder Trust and the Bathtub Trust. I am very strongly convinced that a steady, consistent course in this regard, with a continuing of Supreme Court decisions upon new phases of the trust question not already finally decided is going to offer a solution of this much-discussed and troublesome issue in a quiet, calm, and judicial way, without any radical legislation changing the governmental policy in regard to combinations now denounced by the Sherman antitrust law. I have already recommended as an aid in this matter legislation which would declare unlawful certain well-known phases of unfair competition in interstate trade, and I have also advocated voluntary national incorporation for the larger industrial enterprises, with provision for a closer supervision by the Bureau of Corporations, or a board appointed for the purpose, so as to make more certain compliance with the antitrust law on the one hand and to give greater security to the stockholders against possible prosecutions on the other. I believe, however, that the orderly course of litigation in the courts and the regular prosecution of trusts charged with the violation of the antitrust law is producing among business men a clearer and clearer perception of the line of distinction between business that is to be encouraged and business that is to be condemned, and that in this quiet way the question of trusts can be settled and competition retained as an economic force to secure reasonableness in prices and freedom and independence in trade.

REFORM OF COURT PROCEDURE.

I am glad to bring to the attention of Congress the fact that the Supreme Court has radically altered the equity rules governing the procedure on the equity side of all Federal courts, and though, as these changes have not been yet put in practice so as to enable us to state from actual results what the reform will accomplish, they are of such a character that we can reasonably prophesy that they will greatly reduce the time and cost of litigation in such courts. The court has adopted many of the shorter methods of the present English procedure, and while it may take a little while for the profession to accustom itself to these methods, it is certain greatly to facilitate litigation. The action of the Supreme Court has been so drastic and so full of appreciation of the necessity for a great reform in court procedure that I have no hesitation in following up this action with a recommendation which I foreshadowed in my message of three years ago, that the sections of the statute governing the procedure in the Federal courts on the commonlaw side should be so amended as to give to the Supreme Court the same right to make rules of procedure in common law as they have, since the beginning of the court, exercised in equity. I do not doubt that a full consideration of the subject enable the court while giving effect to the substantial differences in right and remedy between the system of common law and the system of equity so to unite the two procedures into the form of one civil action and to shorten the procedure in such civil action as to furnish a model to all the State courts exercising concurrent jurisdiction with the Federal courts of first instance.

Under the statute now in force the common-law procedure in each Federal court is made to conform to the procedure in the State in which the court is held. In these days, when we should be making progress in court procedure, such a conformity statute makes the Federal method too dependent upon the action of State legislatures. I can but think it a great opportunity for Congress to intrust to the highest tribunal in this country, evidently imbued with a strong spirit in favor of a reform of procedure, the power to frame a model code of procedure, which, while preserving all that is valuable and necessary of the rights and remedies at common law and in equity, shall lessen the burden of the poor litigant to a minimum in the expedition and cheapness with which his cause can be fought or defended through Federal courts to final judgment.

WORKMAN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

The workman's compensation act reported by the special commission appointed by Congress and the Executive, which passed the Senate and is now pending in the House, the passage of which I have in previous messages urged upon Congress, venture again to call to its attention. The opposition to it which developed in the Senate, but which was overcome by a majority in that body, seemed to me to grow out rather of a misapprehension of its effect than of opposition to its principle. I say again that I think no act can have a better effect directly upon the relations between the employer and employee than this act applying to railroads and common carriers of an interstate character, and I am sure that the passage of the act would greatly relieve the courts of the heaviest burden of litigation that they have, and would enable them to dispatch other business with a speed never before attained in courts of justice in this country.

TESTIMONY OF WILLIAM A. MAY-CONTINUED. Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. May, you stated yesterday that Robertson & Law had operated the Katydid col-

-A. Yes, sir. Q. And they paid to the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. a royalty on the coal that came from that colliery.—A. They did. Q. And the Katydid culm dump was created by refuse coming from the Katydid colliery.-A. It was, Q. You had written arrangements with Robertson & Law as to the royalty which your company was to get from them on your coal.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there any other person or corporation interested in the coal that came from the Katydid colliery?-A. The Hillside only had an undivided half-

Q. That is not my question. Was there any other person besides the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. who had any interest in the coal coming from that colliery and who received a royalty from Robertson & Law?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was it?-A. But they received the royalty through the

Q. That is, you paid it to them?—A. Yes, sir; we paid it to

Q. Who was that party?-A. The E. & G. Brooks Land Co., the James Everhart estate, and the heirs of John T. Everhart.

Q. And out of the 371 cents per ton which the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. got from Robertson & Law you paid these three other parties?—A. We did.

Q. And you had been doing that for years?—A. Yes, sir.
Q. You knew before Judge Archbald or Mr. Williams approached you with reference to the purchase of this culm dump that these parties claimed and had some interest in that col-liery?—A. They had an interest in the coal prepared at the colliery.

Q. Does the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. make its claim or did it make its claim to an interest in the Katydid culm dump by reason of the fact that it owns an interest in the Katydid reason of the fact that it owns an interest in the Katydia colliery?—A. They did not.

Q. On what did they base their claim to an interest in the Katydid culm dump?—A. The interest that they had in the culm dump was a royalty interest. That is, they would get the royalty from the coal that was shipped; that is, won from the culm bank.

Q. Why were they entitled to any royalty on the coal that was shipped from the culm dump?—A. Because it was understood by the Hillside that Robertson & Law had the ownership of the culm bank subject to the royalty to be paid the

Q. So your title to the culm dump was based on the fact that you had title to a part of the coal in the colliery, was it -A. No, sir.

Q. The fact that this culm dump came from the colliery was what gave you or the Hillside Co. the title to a part of the dump?-A. No, sir. Our title rested on the agreement made with them. It was not necessarily on the undivided interest that we had or that Hillside had in the property. It rested upon the agreement between Hillside and Robertson and Law.

Q. Did you buy from Robertson & Law an interest in the culm dump?-A. We did not.

Q. You simply owned it because you had an interest in that mine. Is not that true?-A. We owned it because we had an interest in the royalty to accrue from the coal. Q. And these other persons whom you have named, with whom you shared the royalty that you got, based their claim to royalty on the very same ground?—A. They based their claim to royalty-that is, whatever royalty they were to get out of coal from the culm-on the arrangement they had with us.

Q. What arrangements did they have with you?-A. The arrangement was we were to pay them 20 cents a ton for their proportion of the coal won from this particular tract.

Q. And that was due to the fact that they owned some of the land on which the coal was situated?—A. That is correct.

Q. You and the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. were entirely familiar for years with the fact that these three parties claimed an interest in the colliery and in the culm dump?—A. They claimed an interest in the colliery. I did not know they claimed an interest in the culm bank.

Q. Would not their interest in the culm bank follow, just as the interest of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. in the culm bank followed, having an interest in the mine?—A. Only to the extent of the royalty they would receive from us.

Q. Certainly; and that is all they got?—A. That is all they got.

Q. That is all they claimed?-A. I do not know about that. Q. They never made any claim on you for any other, did they?—A. They served notice on me that they had a right to that culm bank.

Q. When was that?-A. That was the letters-I do not know that they are in evidence before you, but they were in evidence before the committee.

Q. You knew that; you knew that they were just as much entitled to their proportionate share in the culm bank as the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., did you not, because they owned a part of the mine, a part of the land on which the coal was situated?-A. They were entitled to their proportionate share of the royalty as fixed in the agreement. They did not own the culm bank.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I ask that this be marked as an exhibit.

The paper referred to was marked "Exhibit 17."

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Exhibit No. 17 is a letter by you to Robertson & Law in which you state the royalty that you believe you are entitled to?-A. This is a copy of a letter that I sent to them dated March 11, 1901. It is not the original letter.

Q. And that is what constitutes the contract as to the amount of royalty your company was to receive?—A. That is correct.

Q. And it had been in force from that time until Robertson & Law ceased to operate?—A. It is in force up to the present time. It is in force now.

Q. There was a time when your company even disputed title in Robertson and Law to any part of this colliery?-A. To the colliery?

Q. To the culm dump?-A. There was a question, I can not say that it was as much as a dispute, but a question arose as to their ownership, because of an apparent abandonment, or a seeming abandonment, rather.

Q. Well, you protested against them having any rights there, did you not?—A. No, sir; I do not believe I did.

Q. I ask you if on June 23, 1911, John W. Robertson wrote this letter to you, marked "Exhibit 18," in which he says:

There are at present responsible parties negotiating with me for the purchase of the culm, and I feel that I am not only legally the owner but also morally am entitled to it, for it has certainly cost me considerable money to mine and pile it.

I hope you will give this your careful consideration and that your company will recognize my rights in the culm. Before selling to others I would prefer to sell to your company. Should your company desire to purchase. I shall be pleased to hear from you promptly. If, as I understand it, your company claim that I no longer own the culm, subject only to royalty, will you kindly advise me when my ownership ceased?

That is a letter you got from Robertson, is it not?-A. That is correct.

Q. And at that time you had notified Robertson that your company was claiming title to the culm?—A. No, sir.

Q. Why did Robertson-A. (Interrupting.) There was a question as to their title. I never questioned it.

Q. Why did John W. Robertson write you that letter in that way?-A. Because there were questions as to whether they had abandoned the property or not.

Q. Who did question it, if you did not?—A. Among various officials connected with the organization.

Q. With your organization?—A. Our organization.
Q. Then there did come from the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., either through you or some other official, a claim that Robertson & Law had not any interest in the culm bank?—A. There was a doubt as to their ownership.

Q. And that was about the time you were having your negotiations with Judge Archbald and Mr. Williams—A. No—Q. Regarding the sale of it?—A. Yes. I beg your pardon; yes; that is right.

Mr. Manager STERLING. What is the date of the letter from which I just read?

June 23, 1911. Mr. WORTHINGTON.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is what I thought.

The Witness. Yes, sir; June 23, 1911. Mr. Manager STERLING. I offer Exhibits Nos. 17 and 18 in evidence. Does Mr. Worthington care to see them?

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I take it that they are in evidence; they have been read. I have no objection to them.

Mr. Manager STERLING. I read only an extract from one of them. I did that to identify the letter. It is really the only material part of the letter.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. We have no objection. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be read. The Secretary read as follows:

[U. S. S. Exhibit 17.]

(Pennsylvania Coal Co., Hillside Coal & Iron Co.)

OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT,

Scranton, Pa., March II, 1901.

Messrs. Robertson & Law, Moosic, Pa.

Gentlemen: As I understand, the arrangement entered into with you was that you were to be paid on the 60 per cent basis from November 1, 1900, until further notice. The royality on coal mined from the lands of this company from that date will be 37½ cents per ton for sizes above pea coal, 18 cents per ton for pea coal, 9 cents per ton for buckwheat coal No. 1, and 6 cents per ton for smaller sizes, a ton in each case to constitute 2,240 pounds.

Upon the receipt of a reply from you that the above is your understanding I shall at once request that vouchers be made in your favor for the balance due you since November 1, 1900.

Yours, very truly,

W. A. May, Superintendant

Mr. W. A. May,

General Manager, Hillside Coal & Iron Co., Dunmore, Pa.

Dear Sir: Relative to the culm mined through the Katydid Colliery and now in bank at Moosic, beg to say you will remember at the time Mr. Law and myself built the breaker and commenced mining we were only mining a small amount of coal, which at the time it was supposed the company would never be able to mine. Under our agreement we sold all the coal as well as the culm produced at our breaker and washery to your company.

We went on in good faith and operated the breaker and washery, mining the coal and washing the culm from the bank continuously until the Delaware & Hudson Co. broke through the barrier pillar, which occurred a few months before the breaker and washery were totally destroyed by fire. The effect of the breaking through of the barrier pillar was to immediately diminish our water supply, and to such an extent that in extremely dry weather we were obliged to shut down our breaker and washery. This, however, occurred only in times of drought, so that continuously until the breaker and washers burned, with the exception noted, we were selling to the company the culm, and the company never questioned our right to it.

The breaker and washery were destroyed by fire in 1908. This fire was caused by a fire in the culm bank belonging to your company, which was dumped long after our breaker and washery were located and erected. At the time the breaker was destroyed there was very little coal left, and the operations of your company had by this time extended so that your company could advantageously mine the balance of the coal, and for that reason the breaker was never rebuilt.

Shortly after the fire we endeavored to sell the culm to the Dupont Powder Co. We took the matter up with you at that time, and there was no question raised as to our ownling an interest in the bank. You will remember at that time at my request your engineers went to the culm bank and measured it in order that the company might arrive at the value of its interest in the same. The report of the engineers was, I think, about 80,000 tons. Before anything definite had been done, however, the Dupont Powder Co. decided not to take the culm, and the negotiations ceased.

Since then I have been trying to dispose of the culm pile, and have talked frequently with you about the same. No question has ever been raised as to my interest in it. I have never in any way intimated to anyone that I had abandoned my title to it, but have always, on the contrary, asserted whenever possible my rights in it. I have had a number of offers from time to time for my interest in the culm, but these offers came from persons who I knew would be antagonisite to your company, and for that reason have declined to dispose of it to such persons. There are at present responsible parties negotiating with me for the purchase of the culm, and I feel that I am not only legally the owner, but also morally am entitled to it, for it has certainly cost me considerable money to mine and pile it.

I hope you will give this your careful consideration, and that your company will recognize my rights in the culm. Before selling to others I would prefer to sell to your company. Should your company desire to purchase I shall be pleased to hear from you promptly. If, as I understand it, your company claim that I no longer own the culm, subject only to royalty, will you kindiy advise me when my ownership ceased?

Yours, truly,

JNO. M. ROBERTSON.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. May, how many

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. May, how many culm banks does the Hillside Coal & Iron Co. own?—A. Between 8 and 10 banks.

Q. Have you ever owned any more than that?-A. No, sir. The Hillside has never owned any more than that.
Q. How many fills do you own?—A. We own no fills.

Q. You have never sold any culm banks?—A. Yes; we have. Q. When?—A. We did not sell an entire bank. We sold our interest in what is known as the Florence bank.

Q. When was that?—A. In 1910.

Q. Have you never sold any others than that?—A. The Hillside has never sold any others.

Q. Why did you sell the one you just mentioned?-A. There was some question. If I may be allowed to make an extended statement, we owned lot 39. The Everhart heirs owned lots 38 and 40. The coal was leased to the Florence Coal Co. The Florence Coal Co. was subsequently bought out by the Hill-A question then arose as to some minimum royalties which had not been paid, and rather than to have litigation about it Hillside surrendered whatever right it had to lots 38 and 40, retaining only its right in the culm coming from lot 39 in the bank. Believing that we would have difficulty in cleaning it up we disposed of our interest in that bank.

Q. It was under those peculiar circumstances, then, that you sold that one particular dump?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you ever priced the Katydid culm dump prior to the time you priced it to Archbald and Williams?—A. Tentatively; Mr. Robertson came to me, and whether I named $2,000 or whether he asked whether we would take $2,000, I do not remember.

Q. Is it not a fact that he came to you and asked you if you would take $2,000, and you refused?—A. I refused?

Q. You refused to take $2,000 for it?—A. I do not remember that.

Mr. Manager STERLING. Let me refresh your recollection.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. On what page? Mr. Manager STERLING. On page 776 of the testimony before the committee, by Mr. RUCKER:

Mr. RUCKER. While it is true that you had given some consideration to the sale of this culm pile before your trip to New York, at the time you conferred with your superior officer, Mr. Richardson, you had never fixed a price on it until after that, had you?

Mr. Max. No; I had not.

A. I think that refers to the price to Mr. Williams, if I am not very much mistaken. I thought you referred to the price of the Florence bank.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) No; I am talking about the Katydid culm bank. You had never fixed a price on it to anybody prior to the time you priced it to Judge Archbald and Mr. Williams at $4,500, had you?—A. I had not fixed a price to Mr. Williams until after my visit in New York.

Q. Had you at any time fixed a price to any other person on your interest in this culm bank prior to the time you fixed a price to Williams and Archbald?-A. Mr. Robertson came to

Q. You can answer that "yes" or "no."-A. No; I can not; because it will not be a straight answer.

Q. Is the testimony which you gave before the committee and which I read correct or not?—A. That testimony is correct as referring to the transaction between Williams and the Hill-

York to Mr. Williams. That is what I intended to say.

Q. Was there a price fixed by you or your company to any other person on the Katydid prior to that time; and if so, to whom was it fixed. A Only as Mr. Robertson come to make the fixed. whom was it fixed?—A. Only as Mr. Robertson came to me wanting to sell to the Du Pont Powder Co., and I think he named the price, $2,000, and wanted to know whether I would take it, and I said I would recommend it. But as far as the price to Mr. Williams is concerned, there was no price fixed until after my visit to New York.

Q. Yes; I understand that. You did not accept Robertson's offer of $2,000 for your interest in the culm bank?-A. It did not go that far. It did not reach that stage.

You never reached the stage where you accepted his offer?-A. It never was consummated, because the Du Ponts did not take the bank.

Q. Do you know how much Robertson was to get from the Du Pont Co. for his interest?—A. I think it was $10,000.

Q. For the entire culm dump?-A. The entire culm bank. Q. For which Williams and Archbald some time after that were to pay only $8,000?-A. That is correct.

Q. How long before your negotiations with Williams and Judge Archbald was it that this proposition came from Robertson with reference to selling it to the Du Pont Powder Co?-A. I think that was in 1909.

Q. Two years?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not true, Mr. May, that the value of culm dumps has gone up very rapidly in the last four or five years?—A. The price has gone up, generally speaking.

Q. And that is due to the fact that the price of anthracite coal has gone up, and also to the fact that machinery has been developed by which coal can be separated from the dirt in the culm banks?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. As I understand it, you went to New York on the 25th of August, 1911?—A. I was in New York on the 25th day of August. I think I went there the day before, I was in New York on the 25th of August.

Q. You saw Mr. Richardson on the 25th?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And returned to Scranton on the 26th?-A. On the 26th. Q. And the 29th, as I remember it, was the date when you sent word by Judge Archbald to Williams that you would let them have the dump?-A. That is correct.

Mr. President, I wish to ask a question. Mr. BORAH. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Idaho asks that the following question be propounded to the witness. The Secretary read as follows:

The Du Pont Powder Co. refused to take the Katydid at $10,000. Was it because the price was too high?

The WITNESS. I do not know.

Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. May, is it not true that the Du Pont Powder Co. was willing to pay $10,000 for the culm and your company and Mr. Robertson refused to take it?—A. No, sir.
Q. Is not that the fact?—A. No, sir.

And is not that why it fell through?-A. No, sir.

Q. You returned on the 26th, you say, and on the 29th you saw Judge Archbald?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. What, if anything, had you done between those two dates toward investigating the title to the Katydid culm damp or toward removing any cloud or correcting the title?-A. I had done nothing.

Q. Nothing at all?-A. No, sir.

Was there any further reason why that negotiation with the Du Pont Powder Co. failed? The Du Pont Powder Co. afterwards decided to get their power from other sources and concluded they did not want the coal?—A. I do not know that. Q. You do not know about that?—A. No.

Q. Did you not testify before the committee, Mr. May, that the reason that negotiation fell through was the fact that the Du Pont Powder Co. decided not to buy this coal, but decided to put up a plant elsewhere and get their power in another way? Did you not swear that before the Judiciary Committee?—A. I do not recall that I did.

Q. Do you know that is one of the reasons why it fell through?—A. No; I do not.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. The Du Pont Powder Co. state that.

Mr. Manager STERLING. And we admit it is one of the reasons. We are not saying it is the only reason. We do not want to be bound by that as the only reason.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. I do not admit that there is any other reason.

- Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) Mr. May, after you had returned the contract to Bradley at the time you saw him in the Laurel Station did you send any telegrams to Mr. Richardson about the matter or write him any letters?-A. No, sir; I did not.
- Q. It was on the 13th of April, as I remember it, when you returned the contract?-A. The 12th of April.

Q. Was it not the 13th?—A. The 12th, as I recall it.

Q. What was the date when the newspapers published the fact that this investigation had been made or was being made by the Department of Justice?—A. On the 21st.

- Q. It appeared in the Scranton papers on that date, did it?-A. I do not remember whether it appeared in the Scranton papers on that date. It appeared in the North American on that date.
- Q. Do you remember when it did appear in the Scranton papers?—A. No; I do not.
 Q. The North American is published at what place?—A.

At Philadelphia.

Q. It circulates at Scranton?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And immediately on the receipt of those papers, the Scranton papers and the North American, you clipped the articles out referring to the matter and sent them to Mr. Richardson, did-you not?—A. I did.

Q. Why did you send those articles to Mr. Richardson?—A. Because the papers said that they had an interview with me, and it referred to the company business, and I wanted him to know it.

Q. Then did he wire you to come to New York at once?—A. I dink he did. I do not remember the date of the telegram, but think he did. I think he did.

- Q. You went immediately, did you not?—A. I did. Q. Was it Richardson or Underwood who wired you?—A. Mr. Richardson wired first, I think, and then Mr. Underwood subsequently.
 Q. Mr. Underwood was president of the company?—A. He
- Q. The president of the Hillside Co.?-A. The president of the Hillside.

Q. And also the Erie?-A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you got this telegram-Mr. WORTHINGTON. The page, please.

Mr. Manager STERLING. On page 879.

APRIL 26, 1912.

Capt. W. A. MAY:

pt. W. A. MAY:
Please call on me at your earliest convenience.
F. D. Underwood.

A. That is correct.

- Q. (By Mr. Manager STERLING.) You got that on the 26th?—A. I did.
- Q. And you replied on the same date:

F. D. UNDERWOOD, New York:

Your message. Will be at your office to-morrow morning.
W. A. Max.

A. That is correct.

Q. And you went?-A. Yes.

- Q. And you discussed with Mr. Underwood this whole situation, the entire transaction that was being negotiated between Judge Archbald and Williams on the one hand and yourself on the other, did you not?-A. I made a statement to him of the matter brought out by the newspaper article. I want to correct what I said about Mr. Richardson telegraphing me. think that is incorrect. I think Mr. Underwood was the one who sent the message.
- Q. Mr. May, we have not got the originals of those telegrams, but we have a copy of them, as you read them in your evidence before the committee. As I remember it, you asked the privilege of keeping them in your file. Have you them here now?—A. I beg your pardon, I left my file with the chairman of the committee. My file is in his possession.

 Mr. WORTHINGTON. We have no objection to reading those from the record without producing the originals.

Mr. Manager STERLING. If there is no objection, then we will let those stand. We have not been able to find the original and we offer that part of the record, the two telegrams I have just read, as a part of the evidence.

Mr. WORTHINGTON. Just the telegrams?

- Mr. Manager STERLING. The two telegrams. [To the witness.] Did you send some of the clippings to Underwood, too?
- A. No, sir; I did not. Q. Where is Mr. Underwood's office?—A. At 50 Church Street, New York.
- Q. Where is it with reference to Brownell's office and Richardson's office?-A. On the same floor.

Mr. Manager STERLING. That is all.

Cross-examination:

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) Mr. May, with reference to this Katydid dump transaction, did you have Williams come to you with more than one letter from Judge Archbald, or was the letter of March 31 the only one from Judge Archbald that Williams brought to you?—A. That was the only one.

Q. (Presenting a letter.) Is this that letter of March 31, 1911?—A. (After examining the letter.) That is the letter.

Q. There are various memoranda on that letter that you referred to in your examination. I wish you would take each one of them up in its order and state what it means and give the history of the transaction so far as is indicated on that paper.—A. Upon the receipt of the letter I wrote upon it—it must have been shortly after because I say—"have asked Beyea to have an estimate made of the quantity of the material in the bank.'

Q. Beyea was your engineer or your subordinate?—A. He was the land agent.

Q. The land agent?-A. In whose charge, or rather under whose supervision, the measurements of banks had been made. Q. I understand it to be claimed here that when you got that letter of March 31 you simply refused to do anything and told Mr. Williams you would not sell it?-A. That is incorrect.

Q. It is incorrect?-A. It is incorrect.

Q. On the contrary, you say you referred it to your land agent for investigation as to quantities and values.—A. I referred it to the land agent to have the cubical contents ascertained.

Q. Very well.—A. The other is a memorandum made by my chief clerk to the general coal inspector.

Q. Read that, please.—A. (Reading:) "Please note Mr. May wants you to make your usual report on this. Please confer with Mr. Beyea as to time estimate is to be made."

Then, apparently, a conference was held and it was decided to go on the ground Monday, April 3, 1911.

Q. Who was to go on the ground, and on what ground?— A. On lot 46, where the culm bank is, in order to get the cubical contents and to get the sizes of the coal to be found therein, and Mr. Merriman and Mr. Johnson went on the ground.

Q. Who are they?-A. Mr. Merriman was the surveyor for the land department and Mr. Johnson is the general coal inspector.

Q. Of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.?-A. Of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.

Q. So, instead of refusing to pay any attention to this request and refusing to sell, you directed an investigation to be made to see what your interest was worth?—A. I did.

Q. Had you had that inquiry made before?—A. From whom? Q. I mean, had you had this investigation made at any time before that?—A. There was an investigation made at the time the Du Ponts were talking about buying, but I had entirely forgotten that. I think the investigation was made at Mr. Robertson's suggestion by one of our engineers who did Mr.

Robertson's work.

Q. Very well. Now, Capt. May, am I to infer from what you did that at that time you contemplated you might recommend the sale of the interest of your company in this Katydid dump when you had this inquiry made to see what was there?—A. When an inquiry is made we do not usually turn it down. investigate, and that occurs quite often. I presume in this instance I followed that procedure. There was not a price; there was nothing fixed at that time. It was simply preliminary.

Q. The inquiry in that letter is as to whether you would sell; and if so, at what price, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Up to the time you had that conversation with Mr. Richardson, in June following, what was your state of mind or willingness to recommend the sale of your interest in this Katydid dump?-A. It was conflicting

Q You had not determined that you would recommend it or that you would not?—A. No, sir.

Q. What can you tell us, if anything, about any concealment of the fact that Judge Archbald was connected with this Katydid transaction as far as your part of it was concerned?-A. I never thought of it.

Q. What was done with that letter which came from him dated March 31 and on which there was this indorsement?—

A. It took the usual course of business.

- Q. Where would that take It-into whose hands?-A. The chief clerk opens the mail. He places the mail upon my desk, and I look at it and decide what to do with it. Then the succeeding morning all the correspondence of the past day is put again upon my desk and I check it off.
- Q. Where did this particular letter go, can you tell us, after you had determined that you would have an investigation made?—A. It was filed in the office file.
- Q. With the first memorandum on it, a direction to your chief clerk?—A. No; the first memorandum is—the way it reads I must have spoken to Mr. Beyea himself.
- Q. Did he see the letter and know Judge Archbald had written it?-A. I do not know. I do not remember.
- Q. Was there any attempt to conceal from everybody in your office that that letter was there and that Judge Archbald had written it?-A. There was no attempt to conceal it.

Q. Did Judge Archbald or anybody else ever suggest to you that his connection with the matter was to be covered up?-A. He never suggested anything of the kind.

Q. Did anybody?—A. No, sir. Q. When you finally did determine to recommend the sale of the interest of your company for $4,500, who fixed that figure. Whose judgment decided that?—A. My judgment decided that. Q. And you are an official of the Hillside Coal & Iron Co.?-

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are not connected with the main company which owns the Hillside?-A. The Erie?

Q. Yes .- A. No, sir; I am not.

Q. Had your company had, and did you have any anticipation that it ever would have, any litigation in the Commerce Court?—A. I had no thought of it.

Court?—A. I had no thought of it.

Q. Has your company, the Hillside Coal & Iron Co., ever had so far?—A. No, sir; our company never has had.

Q. And it was you who fixed the price, I understand, upon which you would recommend the sale?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, in reference to what you said that Judge Archbald's position might have influenced you, I think some passages were read from your testimony before the Judiciary Committee, and I should like to read a little more from that document. I read I should like to read a little more from that document. I read from page 756, the last question on that page, by Mr. Worth-

Let me ask you if you ever had any suggestion, until this inquiry began, from any source, that Judge Archbald's connection with this matter had any relation whatever to his position as a Federal judge?

Mr. Max. No suggestion of that character.

Is that true?-A. That is true.

Q. From pages 747 and 748 I want to read quite a passage when you were examined by Mr. Dodds, a member of the Judiciary Committee:

Mr. Dodds. I would like to ask a question: You say that the fact that Judge Archbald was a judge may have influenced you in the making of this sale for the consideration stated?

Mr. Max. Yes; it may have influenced me.

Mr. Dodds. In what way could it have influenced you, if it did influence you?

Mr. Dodds. In what way could be a state prominence of any man in public fluence you?

Mr. Max. His prominence, just as the prominence of any man in public life, you know, would cause us to listen favorably to their suggestions.

Mr. Dodds. Did you take into consideration the fact that, being a judge, he might possibly, because of your making this sale, make some decision favoring yourself or one of your companies in which you were interested?

Mr. Dodds. Did you take into consideration the fact that, being a judge, he might possibly, because of your making this sale, make some decision favoring yourself or one of your companies in which you were interested?

Mr. MAY. No, sir.

Mr. Dodds. Did that influence you at all in your making the sale to him?

Mr. MAY. No, sir.

Mr. Dodds. That was not considered at all by you?

Mr. MAY. No, sir.

Mr. Dodds. How long have you known Judge Archbald?

Mr. MAY. I have known him about 38 years.

Mr. Dodds. How long have you known Judge Archbald?

Mr. MAY. Have known him about 38 years.

Mr. Dodds. What kind of a man has he been, so far as your experience would indicate?

Mr. MAY. His reputation with me was that he was as straight as he could be.

Mr. Dodds. Did you think so, and did you have that in mind when you were making this sale, or thinking about making it? I mean, did you consider that you were dealing with a good man?

Mr. MAY. I did.

Mr. Dodds. And you did not have in mind at all the fact that by reason of making the sale to him, or making the sale as he advised—to some one else—you would place him in a position where he would be likely to make some decision that he might be called upon to make as a judge that would favor yourself or one of these companies?

Mr. MAY. No. Now, let me say this: I did not believe, knowing Judge Archbald, that the transaction, if carried through, would influence him a particle in his decisions.

Mr. Dodds. You did not have that phase of the matter in mind at all?

Mr. MAY. No.

Mr. Webb. You very rarely have suits for your coal company in the Federal court, do you?

Mr. MAY. No; I do not believe we have.

Mr. MAY. No; I do not believe we have.

Mr. MAY. No; I do not believe we have.

Mr. MAY. No; I do not believe we have.

Mr. MAY. No; I did not know.

Now, you gave that testimony before the Judiciary Com mittee Cart. May.

Now, you gave that testimony before the Judiciary Committee, Capt. May?—A. That is correct.

Q. Is it true from beginning to end?—A. That is true.

Q. And when you fixed this price of $4,500 in your mind you were acting for the company and had no litigation in the Commerce Court, and never expected to have any, and you did not know the Erie Railroad Co. had any?—A. That is correct. Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan proposes a question to the witness, which will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary read as follows:

Prior to fixing the price of $4,500 on the cuim dump, did you talk with any officer or other person connected with the Eric Railroad Co. as to the price?

The WITNESS. No, sir; I did not.

Q. (By Mr. WORTHINGTON.) With reference to the matter of Robertson's interest or claim in this dump in addition to what has been brought out by Mr. STERLING, do you know whether or not, as a matter of fact, after Robertson & Law had stopped their operations because of the burning down of their plant, they went there from time to time and took away the coal from that dump, thereby continuing to assert their title?-A. I did not know it at the time. I have heard it since.

Q. You did not know it while it was going on?-A. No, sir.

Q. You have said, as I understood you, that one reason why you agreed to recommend this particular sale of the interest of your company was the condition of the title?-A. It was not only the condition of the title, but it was our relations with the other interests, if I may be allowed to explain.

Q. You said yesterday, when asked why you should object—why after selling your interest in this coal dump—you should care who made claims against it if you were only selling your You said, if I remember, that you had to look out for other interests. That is what you were going on to tell us?-

A. That is what I want to tell you now.

Q. Explain that, please .- A. We have on this same lot, or did have at that time, a culm bank made from the consolidated breaker. It is about 200 yards from this Katydid culm bank, upon the same lot. We had relations with the undivided other owners and it could affect not only our interest or our property rights in the culm bank which we owned ourselves, but it might involve the breaker building. Therefore it was to our interest to keep upon as good terms as we could with the other

Q. Who were the other owners—the Consolidated Breaker property?-A. The Consolidated Breaker property is on this lot 46.
